As used in a stipulation, in an action between a mortgagor and mortgagee, that in stating the accounts the register would credit the mortgagor with the "value of rents" of certain of the property while in the mortgagee's possession, the words "value of the rents" meant the aggregate of the sum of the rents collected by the mortgagee within the period defined. The stipulation, so construed, was but expressive of the law that a mortgagee, not himself using the property, but who rents it, must account only for the rents collected, unless there is a contrary stipulation. This construction is aided by the fact that the stipulation was drawn by a skilled draftsman, who, had he intended otherwise, would have used words so indicating such "reasonable value." Crittenden v. Chancey, 49 South. 811, 812, 161 Ala. 519.

VALUE OF USE OF LAND

In an action for damages to plaintiff's land through the pollution by defendant of a stream through the land, defendant was not prejudiced by an instruction that plaintiff was entitled to recover the "value of the use of the land"; there being practically no difference between such value and the rental value. Williams v. Halle Gold Mining Co., 66 S. E. 117, 118, 85 S. C. 1.

VALUE OR CLASSIFICATION

Tariff Act Aug. 5, 1909, c. 6, subsec. 13, 36 Stat. 99, provides that an appraiser's appraisal of goods to be imported shall be final and conclusive against all parties, and shall not be subject to review, but authorizes a reappraisal. Subsection 14 declares that the collector's decision as to the rate and the amount of duties shall also be final and conclusive against all persons interested, but Act Cong. June 22, 1874, c. 391, 18 Stat. 190, unrepealed, provides that, after the duties have been liquidated, the settlement shall after the expiration of a year from the time of entry, in the absence of fraud, be final and conclusive. Section 28, subsec. 15, provides that the general appraiser and collectors shall examine the importer under oath in any matter or thing which they may deem material respecting any imported merchandise in ascertaining the dutiable "value or classification" thereof. Held that, since the words "value or classification" include both an appraisal and liquidation, it may also include a reliquidation by the collector by proceedings instituted by him within the year, and hence the collector is entitled within that period to institute reliquidation proceedings, in which the importer may be cited for examination, though there can be no reappraisal by him. United States v. Calhoun, 184 Fed. 499, 505.

VALUE RECEIVED

The words "for value received" are prima facie evidence of consideration to support a guaranty. White v. Western State Bank, 119 Ill. App. 354, 359.

The execution of a note "for value received" implies an obligation to pay. Bick v. Yates, 117 S. W. 650, 137 Mo. App. 268.

As used in a note the words "for value received" import that the note was based on a consideration. Tyler v. Jaeger, 93 N. Y. Supp. 558, 560, 47 Misc. Rep. 84.

A bond reciting that it is for "value received" sufficiently expresses the consideration under the statute of frauds. White Sewing Mach. Co. v. Fowler, 78 Pac. 1034, 28 Nev. 94.

Proof of the maker's signature to a note which bears the words "value received" imports the payment of a consideration to the maker by the payee. Harris v. Firth (N. J.) 68 Atl. 1064, 1065.

The term "for value received" is not alone sufficient to constitute a note a negotiable instrument. It must further appear that the instrument was payable to the payee named, or order, or to bearer. Pinnell v. Meaks, 72 S. W. 461, 99 Mo. App. 20.

The phrase "for value received" constitutes a good averment of consideration, but in an action on a note against a surety, where the defense is an agreement extending the time, so as to discharge the surety, the consideration of such agreement must be pleaded and proved. National Citizens' Bank v. Toplitz, 71 N. E. 1, 2, 178 N. Y. 464.

While the words "value received" in a note import in law a consideration, yet they do not change the rule that the burden of proof is on the plaintiff, suing on the note, to show by a preponderance of the evidence his right to recover. Best v. Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank of Central City, 85 Pac. 1124, 1128, 37 Colo. 149, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1035.

St. 1898, § 2307, requires a special promise to answer for the debt of another to be in writing, expressing the consideration, and subscribed by the party to be charged therewith. A note reciting that it was "for value received" was signed by the defendant under the name of the maker. Held, that the recital "for value received" was a sufficient compliance with the statute as to expressing consideration, and that defendant by his signature adopted the terms of the note and was bound thereby. Kuenzie v. Jansen, 130 N. W. 450, 451, 145 Wis. 473, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1241.

An allegation that a written instrument was executed and delivered "for a valuable consideration" is an allegation of fact, and not a conclusion of law, since the terms "for a valuable consideration" and "for value received" are practically identical in meaning, in law as well as general business intercourse, and, if there be any distinction, "valuable consideration" has a more definite and comprehensive meaning than "value received." St. Lawrence County Nat. Bank of Canton v. Watkins, 138 N. Y. Supp. 116, 117, 153 App. Div. 551.

VALUE THEREFOR

Under Negotiable Instruments Act (P. L. 1902, p. 589) § 29, providing that an accommodation party is one who signed the instrument as maker, drawer, acceptor, or indorser, without receiving "value therefor," and to lend his name to some other person. Held, that the words "value therefor" meant value for the negotiable instrument, not value for the loan of the money. Morris County Brick Co. v. Austin, 75 Atl. 550, 551, 79 N. J. Law, 273.

VALUED POLICY

Where a policy did not indicate an intention on the part of the insurer to value the risk and loss, it was not a "valued policy." Delaware Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Hill (Tex.) 127 S. W. 283, 292.

A marine insurance policy is a "valued policy" if, by agreement, the value is to be fixed by reference to some other instrument; but the agreement must be based on some standard, certain or capable of being made certain, and known to and accepted by both parties; and it is not a valued policy if one of the parties may insert any value he chooses in the instrument referred to. Insurance Co. of North America v. Willey, 98 N. E. 677, 212 Mass. 75.

A "valued policy" of fire insurance is one in which the sum to be paid as an indemnity in case of loss is fixed by the terms of the contract, and by law, to be paid at all events, without reference to the real value of the property. Georgia Co-operative Fire Ass'n v. Lanier, 57 S. E. 910, 1 Ga. App. 186 (citing Rosser v. Georgia Home Ins. Co., 29 S. E. 286, 101 Ga. 720; May, Ins. [4th Ed.] § 30).

A rent insurance policy, stipulating that insurer should be liable for the actual loss of rent by a fire rendering the building untenable, based on the rentals in force from the rented portions at the time of the fire, and computed from the date of the fire for the time required to put the premises in tenable condition, and requiring insured to carry insurance on the rent in an amount equal to the annual rent, under penalty of being a co-insurer to the extent of the deficiency, makes the insurer liable for such amount of the rent, at the rate paid for the portions rented at the time of a fire, as would become payable to insured during the time required to restore the premises to a tenable condition, without deduction for any expenses connected with the renting; the policy being analogous to a "valued policy" defined by Civ. Code, § 2596, as a policy expressing on its face an agreement that the thing insured shall be valued at a special sum, in so far as it prescribes a method of determining the amount of loss. Whitney Estate Co. v. Northern Assur. Co. of London, 101 Pac. 911, 913, 155 Cal. 521, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 123, 18 Ann. Cas. 512.

Civ. Code, § 1793, defines insurance as a contract whereby one undertakes to indemnify another against loss. Section 1845 provides that a policy is either open or valued. Section 1846 defines an open policy as one in which the value of the thing insured is not agreed upon, but left to be ascertained in case of loss. Section 1847 defines a "valued policy" as one which provides that the thing insured shall be valued at a specified sum. Section 1877 provides that double insurance exists where the same person is insured by several insurers in respect to the same subject. Section 1878 provides that in case of double insurance each insurer shall contribute ratably toward the loss. Sess. Laws 1905, c. 126, prescribes a standard form of fire policy which provides that the amount of insurance written therein on real property shall be taken conclusively to be the true value. Held, that under the standard policy, the value of real property on total loss is conclusively fixed by the total of all the insurance written therein which is the amount of the policy and concurrent insurance, and the total amount of loss is the sum total of insurance, and, the value of the property being conclusively fixed at a sum equal to the loss, the several policies cannot be prorated. Lawyer v. Globe Mut. Ins. Co., 127 N. W. 615, 619, 25 S. D. 549.

Open policy distinguished

A "valued policy" of marine insurance is one which, for the purposes of the risk, fixes a definite value on the insured property, foreclosing dispute, no matter how high the valuation, except in a case of fraud or wager. An "open policy" is one where the value is not settled in the policy, and, in case of loss, must be agreed upon or proved. Insurance Co. of North America v. Willey, 98 N. E. 677, 212 Mass. 75.

VALVE

See Bleed or Drain Value; Quick Action Triple Value.

VARIANCE

See Material Variance.

"Variance" means "difference," and it is no variance that the proof does not establish all the allegations of the petition. Red Ball Transfer & Storage Co. v. Deloe, 120 Pac. 575, 576, 30 Okl. 522.

A "variance" is a disagreement between the allegations in the information and the proof as to some matter which is legally essential to the charge. State v. Crean, 11; Pac. 603, 605, 43 Mont. 47, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 424.

A "variance" exists when the evidence does not sustain the pleadings on which a recovery is sought or a defense rested. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Curry, 106 S. W. 294, 296, 127 Ky. 643.

In an action on the case a failure to prove all that is charged in the declaration is not a "variance," provided enough of the charge is established to make a cause of action. City of Ottawa v. Hayne, 114 Ill. App. 21, 23; Id., 73 N. E. 385, 214 Ill. 45.

A "variance," to be available to the defendant, should consist of a failure of plaintiff's proof in its entire scope between the issues made by the pleadings and the evidence offered in their support; and it cannot consist of mere discrepancies nor defects in an imperfect statement of a cause of action. Biggam v. Tinsley, 130 S. W. 506, 510, 149 Mo. App. 467.

"A 'variance' is a disagreement between the allegation and the proof in some matter which, in point of law, is essential to the charge or claim, * * * or to have become so by being inseparably connected by the mode of statement with that which is essential." Prestwood v. McGowin, 41 South. 779, 780, 148 Ala. 475 (quoting and adopting the definition in 1 Greenl. Evid. [15th Ed.] § 51).

The fact that a complaint in a suit on a contract alleges a joint contract with all the defendants and the evidence discloses a separate contract with one of them is not a "variance" amounting to a failure of proof within the meaning of Rev. Codes, § 6587, defining it. Logan v. Billings & N. R. Co., 107 Pac. 415, 416, 40 Mont. 467.

Property charged to have been stolen must be set out in the indictment or information, and the law by no means recognizes it as simply a variance where the charge designates one article and the proof shows an entirely separate and distinct article, since a "variance" applies only where the proof does not strictly conform to the description of the article. State v. Plant, 107 S. W. 1076, 1077, 209 Mo. 307.

Failure of proof distinguished

"Speaking technically, there is a well-defined distinction between variance and 'failure of proof'; but in a sense in which the term 'failure of proof' is constantly used—that is, as the equivalent of insufficiency of evidence—there may not be, and frequently is not, any distinction whatever. Text-books and reports speak of variance amounting to a failure of proof, when referring to a case in which the evidence, though it may tend to prove a cause of action, wholly fails to prove the cause of the action alleged." Where the evidence tends to establish a cause of action utterly different from that alleged in the complaint, there is such a variance as amounts to a failure of proof, and the question of such variance may be presented on a motion for new trial, under a specification of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict." Forsell v. Pittsburgh & Montana Copper Co., 100 Pac. 221, 222, 38 Mont. 403 (citing 1 Elliott, Ev. § 204).

Where a petition predicated upon an express contract for the exchange of horses, under which plaintiff in a certain event might have back his horse upon returning defendant's, and upon the breach involved in defendant's refusal to give back the horse he had received, avers the happening of the event, the return of defendant's horse, and the refusal of defendant to give back the horse he had received, and that in making the trade plaintiff's horse had been valued by the parties at a certain amount, and there is proof of all the allegations, except that as to the valuation of the horse, there is no "failure of proof," but only a "variance," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1909, § 2021, defining a failure of proof as failure to prove a cause of action alleged in its entire scope and meaning, since the allegation as to valuation is not one pertaining to the cause of action at all, so that an instruction as to reasonable damages, instead of agreed damages, is properly given. Mekos v. Fricke, 139 S. W. 1181, 1183, 159 Mo. App. 631.

VARIETY

Though a contract for the sale of orange trees provided that the buyer should give the seller notice one month before the trees were budded as to the variety he would select, the buyer could select a reasonable number of the varieties of those trees which could be obtained by the seller with reasonable diligence; the singular word "variety" including as well the plural. Pearson v. McKinney, 117 Pac. 919, 923, 160 Cal. 649.

VARIOUS

Ky. St. 1903, § 2554, provides that an order directing the holding of a local option election in a magisterial district may be granted by the judge of the county court, upon a written petition, signed by a number of legal voters in each precinct of the territory to be affected equal to 25 per cent. of the votes cast in each of said precincts at the last preceding general election. An order filing a petition for an election recited that the petitioners constituted a number equal to 25 per cent. of the legal voters of the various voting precincts in a certain magisterial district. The order directing the holding of the election recited that it appeared to the satisfaction of the court that the petition was signed by more than 25 per cent. of the legal voters living and residing within the magisterial district. Other orders showed that the election was held as directed, and that there was a majority of votes against the sale of liquor, and, taken together, established all the jurisdictional facts necessary to a valid election. Held, that the mere failure of the order directing the holding of the election to specifically state that the signers of the petition constituted 25 per cent. of the legal voters "in each precinct" of the territory to be affected did not invalidate the election. According to Webster, the word "various" means "different," and "several" means "separate," "distinct." Therefore to say of persons whose names appear to the petition in question that they equal in number 25 per cent. of the legal voters of the several voting places in the magisterial district is equivalent to saying that they equal 25 per cent. of the legal voters in each precinct, and, if equal to 25 per cent. of the legal voters in each precinct, equal also to the same per cent. of the legal votes cast in each precinct at the last preceding general election. Commonwealth v. Jones (Ky.) 84 S. W. 305, 307.

VARY

The word "vary," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1771, authorizing the court, after final judgment in divorce, to annul or vary directions as to the maintenance of any of the children of the parties, means "to change to something else." White v. White, 138 N. Y. Supp. 1082, 1085, 154 App. Div. 250.

Where a will creating a testamentary trust gave the trustees full power to invest and reinvest the residue and to vary the securities and property, the words "to vary" would be construed to mean "to change to something else," authorizing the trustees to change the investments in which they found the residue at the time of testator's death. Merchants' Loan & Trust Co. v. Northern Trust Co., 95 N. E. 59, 61, 250 Ill. 86, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 411.

VASECTOMY

VAT

As place of work, see Place.

A machine known as a "liner," a heavy, hollow, revolving iron roller, filled with steam of high temperature, with a smaller roller above, between which papers were passed by the operator, was not the character of machinery required to be guarded, by Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8029, requiring employers to guard "all vats, pans, saws, planers, cogs, gearing, belting, shafting, set screws and machinery"; the liner being neither a "vat" nor a "gearing." Jenkins v. Lafayette Box Board & Paper Co., 87 N. E. 992, 993, 43 Ind. App. 463.

Section 9 of the Indiana factory act (Burns' Ann. St. Ind. 1901, § 70871), which provides that "all vats, pans, saws, planers, cogs, gearing, belting, shafting, set screws and machinery of every description therein shall be properly guarded," applies to any kind of machinery which is alleged and proved to be of the same kind as a vat, pan, saw, etc., with respect to danger of operation and practicability of erecting guards. Inland Steel Co. v. Kachwinski, 151 Fed. 219, 221, 80 C. C. A. 571.

VAULT

A brick structure entirely open on one side cannot be a "vault" or safe, within the meaning of an ordinance regulating the storage of dangerous explosives. Smith v. Mine & Smelter Supply Co., 88 Pac. 683, 687, 32 Utah, 21.

VEGETABLE

See Necessary Vegetables.

"The word 'vegetables' is found in paragraph 286 [of schedule G of the Tariff Act of March 3, 1883], under the heading 'Provisions,' and in common parlance applies to articles of food." Sonn v. Magone, 16 Sup. Ct. 67, 68, 159 U. S. 417, 40 L. Ed. 203.

Walnuts

The provision for "pickles" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 241, 30 Stat. 179, covers only "vegetables." Pickled walnuts are therefore excluded therefrom. United States v. Acker, Merrill & Condit Co., 171 Fed. 77, 78, 96 C. C. A. 181.

Truffles

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 241, 30 Stat. 170, the term "vegetables" is used in accordance with the ordinary understanding, vegetables usually served at dinner, which does not include truffles, which are used only as a condiment in cooking. A Circuit Court held that truffles were "vegetables," though the Supreme Court had previously given that term a meaning that excluded truffles. Held that, in the subsequent re-enactment of the provision for "vegetables" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 241, 30 Stat. 170, the term must be presumed to have been used in accordance with the Supreme Court definition. Von Bremen, MacMonnies & Co. v. United States, 168 Fed. 889, 891, 94 C. C. A. 301.

Wai san

"Wai san," an edible root used by the Chinese as a vegetable, is, because edible, removed from the provision for "drugs," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 20, 30 Stat. 151, and is dutiable as "vegetables," under Schedule G, par. 257, 30 Stat. 171. Wing On Wo v. United States, 175 Fed. 891.

Watermelon

A watermelon is a species of fruit, and is also generically a "vegetable." Massey v. City of Columbus, 70 S. E. 263, 264, 9 Ga. App. 9.

VEGETABLE IN NATURAL STATE

Cauliflowers that have been trimmed, washed, and packed in brine for preservation during transportation, and to keep them in their natural state, and that when taken out of it and washed are still in their natural state, are dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 257, 30 Stat. 171, as "vegetables in their natural state," rather than under paragraph 241, 30 Stat. 170, as "vegetables prepared or preserved." United States v. Strohmeier & Arpe Co., 167 Fed. 533, 534, 93 C. C. A. 65.

The slicing of vegetables solely to facilitate the natural drying operation is not sufficient to remove them from their natural state; and mushrooms cleaned, sliced, and dried in the sun are dutiable as "vegetables in their natural state," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 257, 30 Stat. 171, rather than as "vegetables prepared or preserved," under paragraph 241, 30 Stat. 170. A. Zaumati & Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 880, 82 C. C. A. 626.

The provision in paragraph 241, Schedule G, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat.

170, for mushrooms "prepared or preserved," does not include mushrooms dried merely by evaporation, which are dutiable under paragraph 257 of said act, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, 30 Stat. 171, as "vegetables in their natural state." Kraut v. United States, 139 Fed. 94, 95.

Mushrooms dried in order to preserve them and placed in hermetically sealed tins holding from 30 to 45 pounds, are, within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 241, 30 Stat. 170, relating to "mushrooms prepared or preserved, in tins, jars, bottles or similar packages," rather than paragraph 257, 30 Stat. 171, relating to "vegetables in their natural state." Choy Chong Woh & Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 879, 82 C. C. A. 608.

Bicycle or motor carriage

A bicycle is a "vehicle." Fielder v. Tipton, 42 South. 985, 149 Ala. 608, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1268, 123 Am. St. Rep. 69, 13 Ann. Cas. 1012 (citing Elliott, Roads & S. [2d Ed.] § 852, p. 927; Clementson, Road Rights & Liabilities of Wheelmen, §§ 90, 103, pp. 90, 94; Davis v. Petrinovich, 21 South. 344, 112 Ala. 654, 36 L. R. A. 615).

A bicycle is a "vehicle" of such nature that it may be properly used upon highways and its use regulated by the Legislature, and, being a vehicle, its proper place is upon the highway or street, and not upon the sidewalk, unless otherwise provided by statute. Molway v. City of Chicago, 88 N. E. 485, 486, 239 Ill. 486, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 543, 16 Ann. Cas. 424.

The law of the road, defined by Rev. Laws, c. 54, requiring the driver of a vehicle traveling in the same direction to pass a carriage ahead by driving to the left of the middle of the traveled part of the way, while inapplicable to pedestrians, applies to automobiles, as they are "vehicles," within the statute. Brown v. Thayer, 99 N. E. 237, 238, 212 Mass. 392; Foster v. Curtis, 99 N. E. 961, 213 Mass. 79, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1188, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1116.

"A bicycle is a 'vehicle.' It may be lawfully ridden upon a street or highway, and has the same rights upon the highway as other vehicles, and it is the duty of a street railway company to give to a bicyclist who is riding upon or attempting to cross its tracks in front of its car the usual and sufficient warning and to exercise the same degree of care as is required in favor of other vehicles."

Ashley v. Kanawha Valley Traction Co., 55 S. E. 1016, 1019, 60 W. Va. 306, 9 Ann. Cas. 836.

The Greater New York charter (Laws 1901, p. 1, c. 466), provides that the word "vehicle" shall include wagons, cabs, carriages, omnibuses, motors, etc. An ordinance prohibits advertising wagons in the streets except business notices on ordinary business wagons. Held, that vehicles on four wheels, propelled by motors, designed primarily for the carriage of passengers, operated by a corporation maintaining a stage route, are "wagons" within the ordinance, a "wagon" being a wheeled carriage; a vehicle on four wheels. Fifth Ave. Coach Co. v. City of New York, 86 N. E. 824, 826, 194 N. Y. 19, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 744, 16 Ann. Cas. 695; Id., 110 N. Y. S. 1037, 126 App. Div. 657, 111 N. Y. S. 759, 58 Misc. Rep. 401.

Elevator car

Rev. St. 1895, art. 3017, subd. 1, authorizes an action for damages on account of injuries causing death "by the negligence * * * of the proprietor, owner, charterer, hirer of any railroad," etc., "or other vehicle for the conveyance of goods or passengers, or by the unfitness, negligence or carelessness of their servants or agents," etc. Held, that an elevator car in an office building, habitually used to transport passengers, came within the meaning of the clause "other vehicle for the conveyance of goods or passengers." Farmers' & Mechanics' Nat. Bank v. Hanks (Tex.) 128 S. W. 147, 150.

Locomotives or cars

A road locomotive or traction engine, used to draw cars, is a "vehicle," within a statute requiring the licensing of operators of automobiles and motorcycles, and defining them as all vehicles propelled by other than muscular power, except railroad and railway cars, motor vehicles running only upon rails or tracks, and road rollers. Emerson Troy Granite Co. v. Pearson, 64 Atl. 582, 74 N. H. 22.

VEHICLE FOR HEAVY TRANSPORTATION

A city in its charter was granted the power to improve streets and to regulate the use thereof, and in another paragraph of the same section it was empowered to regulate by ordinance "the width of the tires of all vehicles for heavy transportation." Held, that the latter grant of power was express, and must be strictly construed; that the express grant was not merely a corollary of the general power to improve the streets and regulate the use thereof; that under Rev. St. 1899, § 4160 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2252), providing that "words and phrases shall be taken in their plain or ordinary and usual sense," the term "vehicles for heavy transportation" means vehicles constructed for carrying heavy loads; and that an ordinance regulating the width of tires of all vehicles to be used on the streets in accordance with the size of the axles exceeds the power of the city, as it makes no discrimination between vehicles for light and heavy transportation. State ex rel. St. Louis Transfer Co. v. Clifford, 128 S. W. 755, 759, 228 Mo. 194, 21 Ann. Cas. 1218.

VEHICLE USED FOR PAY

The owner of wagons kept to rent to various firms under monthly contracts and under their control, and who does not hold himself out ready to serve any person who may have goods to transfer, is not the owner of "vehicles used for pay," nor is his compensation subject to control by the city council, under a provision giving it power to levy a tax on vehicles used for pay within the city, and to prescribe compensation therefor. McCauley v. State, 119 N. W. 675, 83 Neb. 431.

VEHICLES AND OTHER MECHANICAL CONTRIVANCES

Wheeled or rolling chairs are not specifically named, but they are clearly within the description of "vehicles and other mechanical contrivances," as used in an ordinance regulating travel on the public highways of a city, and classing together all persons riding or driving, whether in vehicles or other mechanical contrivances, as occupants of the cartway. Stevenson v. United States Exp. Co., 70 Atl. 275, 221 Pa. 59, 128 Am. St. Rep. 725.

VEIN

See Fissure Vein; Known Vein or Lode.
Coal vein, see Coal Bed.

Recovery of vein, see Recover—Recovery.

"Vein of coal," "coal bed," and "coal seam" are used as equivalent terms. Chapman v. Mill Creek Coal & Coke Co., 46 S. E. 262, 263, 54 W. Va. 193.

As a geological term "bed" is synonymous with "vein" or "stratum," but the term "coal bed" may be used to mean "quarry." Hoysradt v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 151 Fed. 321, 326, 331.

"A 'vein' or 'lode' is mineral-bearing rock or other earthy matter in place in a fissure in rock, so that its boundaries are sharply defined by rocky walls in place." Webb v. American Asphaltum Mining Co., 157 Fed. 203, 204, 84 C. C. A. 651.

A "vein," to the miner, is a body of ore, quartz, or mineral-bearing substance lying within the crust of the earth, bounded on each side by the country rock, generally varying in width and extending in length across and through the country for greater and less distances. State v. Praul, 106 Pac. 763, 764, 57 Wash. 198.

The rule that extralateral rights cannot exist through a mineralized hanging or foot-wall formation which is sufficiently mineralized to sustain a mining location does not apply where a vein containing valuable ore has well-defined walls, which are of themselves but a part of the mineralized zone which contains ore and veins of quartz sufficiently valuable to support a mining location; such veins being regarded as separate and distinct from the mineralized zone. The essential elements of a "vein" are mineral or mineral-bearing rock and boundaries. Golden v. Murphy, 103 Pac. 394, 405, 31 Nev. 395 (citing Grand Central Mining Co. v. Mammoth Mining Co., 83 Pac. 648, 29 Utah, 490).

Under Rev. St. U. S. § 2322, providing that locators of lode locations shall have the right to all veins throughout their entire depth, the apex of which lies inside the surface lines of the location extended downward vertically, a complaint in ejectment to recover a "vein" apexing in plaintiff's location states a cause of action based on extralateral rights, though merely alleging that defendant wrongfully entered on plaintiff's claim on veins apexing within its boundaries, since a vein, though having an extralateral extension, is a part of the location within which it apexes. Davis v. Shepherd, 72 Pac. 57, 58, 31 Colo. 141.

Rev. St. U. S. § 2333, provides that, where an application for a patent for a placer claim does not include an application for a known vein or lode within its boundaries, the application shall be construed as a declaration that the claimant of the placer claim has no right of possession of the vein or lode claim, but that, where the existence of a vein or lode claim is not known, a patent for the placer claim shall convey all valuable mineral and other deposits within the boundaries thereof. Held, that a "vein or lode" within such section is a body of mineral or mineral-bearing rock within defined boundaries in the general mass of the mountain, and that a "known vein or lode" is one clearly ascertained, and of such extent as to render the land more valuable on that account and justify its exploitation and development. Noyes v. Clifford, 94 Pac. 842, 847, 37 Mont. 138.

"Veins" or lodes are lines or aggregations of metal imbedded in quartz or other rock in place, consisting of a strip of mineral-bearing rock within defined boundaries in the general mass of the mountain, which must be continuous and without interruption, bounded by country rock mineralized to no greater extent than the general condition of the vicinity. Rock or matter of any kind, in order to constitute a "vein" or lode within the meaning of the statute, must be metaliferous and contain such mineral value as will distinguish it from the country rock, especially where no well-defined walls appear. Under the acts of Congress the essential elements of a "vein" are mineral or mineral-bearing rock and boundaries, and, in cases of controversy, where one of these elements is well established, very slight evidence may be accepted as to the existence of the other. What values the filling or material of a fissure should contain to constitute it a vein, within the meaning of the act of Congress, must necessarily depend upon the characteristics of the district or county in which the vein or lode, in any particular instance claimed to exist, is located, and upon the character, as to boundaries, of the vein itself. Values, therefore, of the filling of the vein must be considered with special reference to the district where the vein or lode is found. The definition of a vein must be considered with reference to the formations and characteristics of the particular district in which the vein is located. Where the boundaries of what is claimed to be a vein are not well, or not at all, defined, either at the surface or at depth, the value of the material must be so in excess of the country rock as to differentiate it from such rock, else the material cannot be held to constitute a vein. In the absence of defined walls and mineralization appreciably greater than that contained in the general mass of the mountain, broken, stained, and fissured material, or crushed and brecciated matter, characteristic of the district, cannot be held to constitute a vein or lode, under the statute. In such case, the limits of fracturing do not constitute the limits of the vein, and even if there be found an occasional vug or fragment of ore, yet where it is disconnected from any ore body and so intermingled with the surrounding country rock that it cannot be regarded as continuous, it does not mark the line of the vein or lode, within the meaning of the law. Where a vein located in sedimentary beds of rock is formed by replacement, and the mineralization ceases within a short distance of the ore body or ore channel, the limits of the deposition of ore are the limits of the vein; and this is so, whether the vein be considered laterally or with reference to the apex. In determining the location and strike of a vein, the geological features of the adjacent country, so far as in evidence, will be considered by the court. Grand Central Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., 83 Pac. 648, 676, 679, 29 Utah, 490.

VELOCIPEDE

A bicycle is defined as a "two-wheeled velocipede," and a "velocipede" is defined as a "light carriage." A bicycle is a "vehicle," and under Rev. St. 1881, § 3361, making it unlawful to ride or drive upon any sidewalk for the use of passengers, except across the same, it is unlawful to ride a bicycle thereon. Mercer v. Corbin, 20 N. E. 132, 134, 117 Ind. 450, 3 L. R. A. 221, 10 Am. St. Rep. 76 (quoting and adopting definitions given in Webst. Dict.).

VELVET

So-called "panne velvet" is dutiable as "plush," and not as "velvets," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 386, 30 Stat. 186. United States v. Passavant & Co., 164 Fed. 912.

No rule exists in trade or commercial usage declaring that fabrics having a pile of 3.5 millimeters or less in length should be regarded as "velvets," and of over 3.5 millimeters as "plush." United States v. Silberstein, Castell & Co., 153 Fed. 965, 967.

VEND

The title of the act approved August 10, 1906, "An act fixing the annual license fee for retailing or vending spirituous, intoxicating or malt liquors in Irwin county at twenty thousand dollars, and to provide a penalty for violating the same, and for other purposes," is broad enough to provide for a license fee for the sale of such liquor in any quantity, since "to vend," in its largest sense, means to sell, and it is quite apparent that the legislative scheme was to impose a license fee, not only on the retailer, who sells in quantities less than a quart, but also upon all vendors or sellers of intoxicating liquors, irrespective of the quantity involved in the sale. Glover v. State, 55 S. E. 592, 594, 126 Ga. 594.

VENDEE

As owner, see Owner.

A remote vendee is within Code 1896, § 3505, allowing redemption of property sold under a mortgage from the "purchaser or his vendee." Robbins v. Brown, 44 South. 63, 151 Ala. 236.

The word "vendee," in the Alabama statute extending the right of redemption from sale to the vendee of the debtor, refers only to a person to whom the debtor may have sold the equity of redemption before the sale, and does not entitle a purchaser from the debtor to foreclosure of the vendor's lien to redeem from such sale. Wallace v. Markstein, 40 South. 201, 202, 147 Ala. 262.

VENDEE'S LIEN

The purchaser of land by an executory contract has an equitable lien thereon for any money paid by him under the contract, so that, in case he is entitled to recover such money back because of the inability or refusal of the vendor to perform, he may do so by proceeding against the land. This is known as the "vendee's lien," and is universally recognized in equity where the doctrine of equity prevails. The lien cannot be extended so as to cover the costs of examining the title, though it is an item of the vendee's damages. Occidental Realty Co. v. Palmer, 102 N. Y. Supp. 648, 649, 117 App. Div. 505.

VENDING

The word "vending," as used in the title of Act Aug. 10, 1906, fixing the annual license fee for retailing or vending spirituous, intoxicating, or malt liquors in a certain county, is not the equivalent of "retailing," as used in the title, to "vend" in this sense meaning to sell, and a license fee is imposed, not only on the retailer who sells in quantities less than a quart, but also upon all vendors or sellers of intoxicating liquors, irrespective of the quantity involved in the sale. Glover v. State, 55 S. E. 592, 594, 126 Ga. 594.

VENDER—VENDOR

See Itinerant Vendor.

As owner, see Owner.

"A vendor [vender] is one who transfers the exclusive right of possession of property, either his or that of another, for some pecuniary equivalent. A soliciting agent, who takes orders subject to the approval of his principal, is not ordinarily regarded as a 'vendor.'" State v. Bristow, 109 N. W. 199, 200, 131 Iowa, 664.

The word "vendor," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 3618, providing that a recorded deed loses its priority over a subsequent purported deed from the same vendor taken without notice of the existence of the first, has been construed in its literal sense as meaning the party by whom the sale is made, or the person who transfers property by sale; and it has been, in effect, held that, although two deeds to the same land may be from the same grantor, they cannot compete under the statute, unless they are also from the same vendor. This is inconsistent with the idea that the effect of the statute was to broaden the meaning of the terms used in the statutes to describe what deeds should compete thereunder for priority. A deed to described wild land, executed by the general devisees of the deceased former owner, taken by the vendee therein for value and without notice of a deed to the same land executed by the testator, although recorded before the registry of the older deed, does not obtain priority over such senior conveyance. Henderson v. Armstrong, 58 S. E. 624, 626, 627, 128 Ga. 804 (citing Toole v. Toole, 33 S. E. 686, 107 Ga. 472).

VENDOR AND PURCHASER

The relation of "vendor and purchaser" is for all practical purposes that of mortgagor and mortgagee, with all the incidents thereto. Jones v. Jones, 62 S. E. 417, 418, 148 N. C. 358.

VENDOR'S LIEN

See, also, Grantor's Lien.

A conveyance for which the consideration is not paid raises a claim in equity on the property conveyed, commonly called a "vendor's lien," which the courts enforce against the grantee and those claiming under him with notice. Wilson v. Plutus Mining Co., 174 Fed. 317, 319, 98 C. C. A. 189.

A "vendor's lien" is simply "the vendor's right to enforce his claim for the purchase money against or out of the vendor's equitable estate," not his legal estate, for he has none. Managan Estate v. Great Cent. Land Co., 77 Pac. 485, 487, 45 Or. 335 (citing Security Savings & Trust Co. v. Mackenzie, 33 Or. 209, 52 Pac. 1046).

"It is indispensably necessary to the existence of a 'vendor's lien' that the parties should stand in the relation to each other of vendor and vendee. It arises out of and is incident to the purchase, and is founded upon an implied trust between the vendor and purchaser, and the law does not authorize the vendee to transfer this lien with the note taken for the purchase money, even though he expressly proposes to do so." A loan of money to pay the purchase price of land does not create a vendor's lien in the lender. Hardin v. Hooks, 81 S. W. 386, 387, 72 Ark. 433 (quoting Hecht v. Spears, 27 Ark. 229, 11 Am. Rep. 784).

As an equitable right

A "vendor's lien" is not the result of any agreement or intention of the parties, but is an equity raised by a court of chancery for the benefit of vendors of realty and is not created by Civ. Code, § 3046, providing that one who sells real property has a vendor's lien thereon, independent of possession, for so much of the price as remains unpaid and unsecured otherwise than by the personal obligation of the buyer. Royal Consol. Mining Co. v. Royal Consol. Mines Co., 110 Pac. 123, 128, 157 Cal. 737, 137 Am. St. Rep. 165.

A "vendor's lien" is that lien which in equity is implied to belong to a vendor for the unpaid price of land sold, where he has not taken any other lien or security beyond the personal obligation of the purchaser. The lien is not the result of any agreement between the vendor and vendee, but is simply an equity raised by the courts for the benefit of the vendor, to be enforced or not as the exigencies of each particular case may require. Rewis v. Williamson, 41 South. 449, 450, 51 Fla. 529 (citing Johnson v. McKinnon, 34 South. 272, 45 Fla. 388).

A "vendor's lien" is an equitable security arising from the fact that a vendee has received from his vendor an estate for which he has not paid the full consideration, and is not dependent for its existence on the express agreement of the parties. Eubank v. Finnell, 94 S. W. 591, 593, 118 Mo. App. 535 (citing Johnson v. Burks, 77 S. W. 133, 103 Mo. App. 221).

As an estate in land

A "vendor's lien" is not an estate, but is a mere right, existing potentially only, and without any tangible existence, and exists only as an incident to the obligation to pay the price, and, if there is no such obligation, there can be no lien. Marchand v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 127 S. W. 387, 389, 147 Mo. App. 619.

The right of a vendor to subject the land to the payment of the purchase money is not a "right or estate in the lands," within Ann. Code 1892, § 2444, providing that conveyances purporting to convey a greater estate than the grantor has shall convey as much of the right and estate as he could lawfully convey, etc., the vendor's interest passing to the personal representatives of a deceased, and the statute did not make a conveyance to defendants after their grantors had conveyed to another pass the grantors' claim against such prior grantee for purchase money. Howell v. Hill, 48 South. 177, 94 Miss. 566.

As incumbrance

See Incumbrance.

VENDITIONI EXPONAS

A writ of "venditioni exponas" is one sometimes issued to cause a sale of lands seized under a former writ. Howell v. Sherwood, 147 S. W. 810, 815, 242 Mo. 513.

VENEERS OF WOOD

Veneers of wood of exceeding thinness, pasted on paper for the purpose of keeping them in shape, the paper being in some instances the component material of chief value, are within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule D, par. 198, 30 Stat. 167, for "veneers of wood." American Trading Co. v. United States, 142 Fed. 214, 215.

VENIRE

See Special Venire.

Under Code 1907, § 7265, providing that, when the day set for trial is on a subsequent week of the term, the special jurors drawn, together with the jurors drawn for the subsequent week, shall constitute the "venire," that the name of G. C. Abbott was drawn and the list of jurors served on defendant contained that name, when no such person was found and G. C. Abbott was the person really summoned, would not affect the validity of the venire; the name drawn being the same as that in the list served. Parker v. State, 51 South. 260, 262, 165 Ala. 1.

VENIRE FACIAS DE NOVO

A "venire de novo" is a common-law remedy, and by it such defects only as may be apparent on the face of the record are presented. This rule has been somewhat modified in its application to special verdicts. Douglas v. Indianapolis & N. W. Traction Co., 76 N. E. 892, 893, 37 Ind. App. 332 (citing Dolan v. State, 23 N. E. 761, 122 Ind. 141; La Follette v. Higgins, 28 N. E. 768, 129 Ind. 412, 418; Maxwell v. Wright, 67 N. E. 267, 160 Ind. 515; Elliott's Gen. Prac. § 985).

At common law, where a case came up on a writ of error, it was the custom to hand back jurisdiction, if at all, by an entry and a mandate called, among other things, a "venire facias de novo." Now the same end is attained by awarding a new trial and reversing and remanding the case, where defendant's judgment is not allowed to stand. Donnell v. Wright, 97 S. W. 928, 931, 199 Mo. 304.

VENOMOUS INCOMPETENT

A letter, referring to the manager of a mail chute company as "the 'venomous incompetent' * * * who has charge of your office here, and who either does not know how to put [a mail chute] in order, or willfully queers it, * * * so as to bedevil us and the job," is actionable per se, tending to charge the manager with moral delinquency, and holding him up to hatred, ridicule, and contempt. Hinrichs v. Butts, 133 N. Y. Supp. 769, 770, 149 App. Div. 236.

VENUE

See Change of Venue.

Proceedings to secure change of, as with- in practice, see Practice (In Law).

Under Acts 1889, p. 73, constituting Buchanan county a judicial circuit, and giving it two circuit judges, and making of it two divisions, a cause should be sent from one division to another on an application for a change of "venue" on account of disqualification of the judge, though the act does not expressly require it, unless the court is satisfied by proof that the other judge is also disqualified. The word "venue" may be construed to mean county, as in strictness it does. Leslie v. G. W. Chase & Son Mercantile Co., 98 S. W. 523, 526, 200 Mo. 363.

Jurisdiction distinguished

See Jurisdiction (Of Courts).

VERANDA

A "veranda" is a part of the dwelling, within a covenant in a deed providing that buildings on the property should be set back at least 25 feet from the street line. McDonald v. Spang, 105 N. Y. Supp. 617, 620, 55 Misc. Rep. 332.

VERBAL

VERBAL CONTRACT

Where the owner agreed in writing to convey land, and his vendee thereafter agreed verbally to convey a part of the land to complainant, to which agreement the owner verbally assented, the contract to convey to complainant was a "verbal agreement" for the sale of land within the statute of frauds (Code, § 2840), and not merely an agreement by the original owner to release his vendor's lien on a part of the land. Hoover v. Baugh, 62 S. E. 968, 969, 108 Va. 695, 128 Am. St. Rep. 985.

VERBAL GIFT

A "verbal gift" without a delivery transfers no title, and unless the donor divests himself of all dominion over the subject-matter of the gift the title will not pass. Where one owning securities placed them in a package in his private box in the vaults of a safety deposit company, and at that time told defendant that they were hers, and he gave her a key and password, but subsequently he exercised entire control over the property, and a part of the time it was not in the box, and he removed coupons from certain of the bonds and deposited the proceeds to his credit in a bank, and thereafter he made efforts to obtain the key which he had given defendant, the facts did not show a gift. Millard v. Millard, 77 N. E. 595-597, 221 Ill. 86.

Under Civ. Code, § 1147, providing that a "verbal gift," which is defined by section 1146 as a transfer of personal property, made voluntarily, and without consideration, "is not valid, unless the means of obtaining possession and control of the thing are given, nor, if it is capable of delivery, unless there is an actual or symbolical delivery," a transfer by a bank depositor of an account to his credit in the bank to himself and his son, with the right and power to each to draw on the account during their lives, with a direction to the bank to pay the residue remaining upon the death of either to the survivor, cannot operate as a gift inter vivos, since the donee is not given full and complete dominion of the thing. Carr v. Carr, 115 Pac. 261, 264, 15 Cal. App. 480.

VERDICT

See Chance Verdict; Compromise Verdict; Cured by Verdict; Directed Verdict; Dissent from Verdict; Estoppel by Verdict; General Verdict; Motion to Direct Verdict; Partial Verdict; Perverse Verdict; Quotient Verdict; Request for Directed Verdict; Separate General Verdict; Special Verdict; Wrongful Verdict.

Wrong verdict, see Wrong.

A "verdict" is the unanimous decision made by a jury and reported to the court on matters lawfully submitted to them in the course of a trial. Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Connolly, 109 N. W. 368, 370, 77 Neb. 254.

"The word 'verdict' is not an abstract designation of the finding of a jury, but it relates to the issue involved in the pleadings and evidence, and while it may in form be a verdict, it is not a verdict in law, unless it substantially responds to the issues. * * * A verdict in a legal sense generally is the determination of the jury upon the matters of fact in issue in the cause upon the evidence. The general rule is that the verdict must comprehend the whole issue or issues submitted to the jury in a particular case." Johnson Bros. v. Glaspey, 113 N. W. 602, 604, 16 N. D. 335.

Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 743, defines a "verdict" as a declaration by a jury of their decision of the issue submitted to them in writing and concurred in by each member of the jury. Where an indictment charged ordinary burglary and burglary of a private residence, in separate counts, but the only issue submitted was the burglary of a private residence, a verdict of "guilty as charged" was responsive and sufficient. Jones v. State, 117 S. W. 127, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 535.

A special "verdict" is not complete unless it leaves to the decision of the court only questions of law. Sonnesyn v. Akin, 104 N. W. 1026, 1031, 14 N. D. 248.

A trial on which the jury has failed to agree will not be considered as one of the "verdicts," within Civ. Code Prac. § 341, where there have been three verdicts on substantially the same evidence. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Daniel, 115 S. W. 804, 1198, 131 Ky. 689; Id., 119 S. W. 229.

As decision of a jury

Rouvier's definition of a verdict is the unanimous decision of a jury, reported to the court, on matters lawfully submitted to them in the trial, and the term "verdict" is often used in distinction to answers to special questions, but is not necessarily synonymous with "general verdict"; and the word, as so used in law, is not applicable to findings of fact by the court. Swan v. Bevis Rock Salt Co., 119 Pac. 871, 86 Kan. 260.

Under Rev. Code Civ. Proc. § 293, providing that the verdict shall be deemed to have been excepted to, and Rev. Civ. Code, § 2465, defining the word "verdict" to include a judge's findings of fact, it is not necessary to except to findings to determine sufficiency of the evidence on appeal. Kelly v. Wheeler, 119 N. W. 994, 996, 22 S. D. 611.

Under B. & C. Comp. § 159, providing that the findings of the court shall be deemed a "verdict," and may be set aside in the same manner and for the same reasons, and section 173, defining a new trial as a re-examination of an issue of fact after a trial and decision, and section 174, specifying the manner in which a verdict or other decision may be set aside and a new trial granted, and providing that a new trial may be granted "on the motion of the party aggrieved," the court cannot on its own motion set aside its filed findings after the filing by a party of a motion for judgment; the court not having been imposed on by fraud or collusion of the parties or otherwise. Scott v. Ford, 97 Pac. 99, 101, 52 Or. 288.

A final order, pursuant to a recommendation of commissioners, allowing owners of property taken in condemnation proceedings costs and allowances, was not a "verdict," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1235, providing that, where final judgment is rendered for a sum of money awarded by a verdict, report, or decision, interest on the award from the date when the verdict was rendered to the time of entry of judgment must be computed by the clerk and added to the award. In re Pine's Stream and East Meadow Stream in Town of Hempstead, 114 N. Y. Supp. 681, 683, 684, 129 App. Div. 929.

An inquest of insanity held by two justices of the peace upon the alleged insanity of any person or inhabitant of their county and their certificate that said person therein named is insane and a proper subject for treatment in a hospital for the insane, is not a judgment of a court or equivalent thereto; nor is such finding and certificate equivalent to a "verdict" of a jury or a finding of a court that such person is of unsound mind and incapable of managing his own estate, its purpose being to establish the fact that such person is entitled to admission to a hospital for the insane for treatment. Leinss v. Weiss, 71 N. E. 254-256, 33 Ind. App. 344.

Findings of fact

A "verdict" is a general finding of all facts. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Osburn, 100 Pac. 473, 474, 79 Kan. 348.

"A 'verdict' is the compound result of the legal instructions given to the jury by the court and of their findings of fact applied to the legal principles laid down for their guidance." Lewis v. Hinson, 43 S. E. 15, 18, 64 S. C. 571 (quoting definition in Bonhan v. Bishop, 23 S. C. 105); Cole v. Blue Ridge Ry. Co., 55 S. E. 126, 127, 75 S. C. 156.

VERDICT CONTRARY TO EVIDENCE

The phrase "verdict contrary to evidence," in a motion for a new trial, is equivalent to the statutory ground for new trial that the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence. Linderman v. Nolan, 83 Pac. 796, 16 Okl. 352.

VERDICT CONTRARY TO LAW

See Against Law.

VERIFICATION—VERIFY

Illinois Central Railroad Charter (Priv. Laws 1851, p. 71) § 18, requires the railroad company to file certain accounts of gross receipts to the state, and declares that, for the purpose of verifying and ascertaining the accuracy of such accounts, full power is vested in the Governor to examine the books and papers of the corporation, and the officers, agents, and employees of the company under oath, etc. Held, that the word "ascertain" meant "to make certain to the mind," "to free from obscurity, doubt, or chance," "to make sure of," "fix," "determine," and the word "verify" meant "to ascertain to be correct," "to establish the truth of," "to confirm," "substantiate," "to ascertain to be correct," "to be corrected, if found erroneous, as to verify a statement, quotation, reference, account, or reckoning of any kind, to verify the items of a bill, or the total amount, to prove to be true, to confirm, to establish the truth of"; and hence the Governor was not only authorized to fix and determine whether the accounts were correct, but to correct them, if found erroneous, and finally to adjust and settle them. State v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 92 N. E. 814, 832, 246 Ill. 188.

Acts 1907, p. 225, c. 123, § 6, declares that within a year after the passage of the act all medical practitioners practicing under previous laws, and not having received a license from the state medical board, shall present to the board evidence of the existence and validity of their diplomas or valid existing licenses, and shall receive from the board a verification license. Held, that the word "verification," as there used, meant to confirm or to substantiate something already done involving a duty to ascertain the genuineness and valid existence of a license previously granted by lawfully authorized boards, the identity of the person, etc. Board of Medical Examiners of Texas v. Taylor, 120 S. W. 574, 575, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 291 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 7295, 7296).

To "verify" means to prove to be true or correct; to establish the truth of; to confirm. A guaranty company gave a bond to a union to secure the faithful discharge of the duties of its treasurer. It stipulated that the union should notify the company immediately on discovering any dishonesty on the part of the treasurer. The union in its application stated that the treasurer's accounts would be examined and verified every three months by its trustees. The application stipulated that the statements were warranted to be true, and that the business of the union should be maintained as stated. In February it was learned that the treasurer was short in his accounts. A quarterly examination of his books had been made in December preceding, at which time it was found that he should have on hand $740. He showed a bank book showing deposits of $440 and the balance in cash. The amount alleged to be in the bank was not verified. Held, that the union failed to verify the funds in the possession of the treasurer as required by the application, relieving the company of liability. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Downey, 88 Pac. 451, 452, 38 Colo. 414, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 323, 120 Am. St. Rep. 128.

In a building contract requiring the contractor to "verify the dimensions" of the detailed drawings, plans, and specifications prepared by the architect, the quoted expression does not require the contractor to ascertain whether or not the architect proceeded on a radically erroneous theory in drawing the plans. Beattie Mfg. Co. v. Heinz, 97 S. W. 188, 190, 120 Mo. App. 465.

As proceeding

See Proceeding.

As requiring oath

The primary meaning of "verify" is to affirm under oath, and Acts 1905, p. 182, c. 109, § 5, requiring a firm doing a banking business to make reports to the auditor of state, verified by some member of the firm, calls for reports under oath. State v. Trook, 88 N. E. 930, 931, 172 Ind. 558.

The "verification" contemplated by Code W. Va. 1906, c. 130, § 31, relating to the verifying of mechanics' liens, is an oath or affirmation taken and administered by and before an officer having authority by law to administer and certify oaths and affirmations. Tygart Valley Brewing Co. v. Vilter Mfg. Co., 184 Fed. 845, 849, 107 O. C. A. 169.

VERIFIED BY AFFIDAVIT

In view of the fact that Burns' Ann. St. 1908, §§ 6002, 6008, providing for the filing and allowance of claims against counties, contemplate that the claim and the "verification" thereof are separate instruments, and in view of the meaning of "claim," which is the assertion of a liability, to the one making it, to do a service or pay a sum, and of the term "verified," which, as applied to pleadings and statements of claims filed with municipal officers, etc., means an affidavit "attached to" such statement of claim as to the truth of the matter stated therein, the verification of a claim filed against a county for work done is not a part of the statement of claim, but a distinct instrument, and hence need not be alleged in the affidavit, together with the claim, in a prosecution for presenting a fraudulent claim to a county for work done, in order to admit the claim itself in evidence, as matters not forming a part of an instrument need not be set out in the affidavit as a part thereof, in order to prevent a variance. Bader v. State, 94 N. E. 1009, 1011, 176 Ind. 268.

Under a statute providing that every person wishing to avail himself of the benefits of the chapter relating to mechanics' liens must file a just and true account of the amount due, after allowing all credits, and containing a correct description of the property to be charged with such lien, "verified by affidavit," a statement of lien on behalf of a corporation, verified by its president on information and belief, was insufficient. Western Plumbing Co. v. Fried, 81 Pac. 394, 33 Mont. 7, 114 Am. St. Rep. 799.

Under Rev. Codes, § 7291, providing that the lien shall be "verified by affidavit," it was sufficient that the entire lien was in form an affidavit, with an itemized statement attached, and this being filed it was not necessary that the lien notice must have attached to it a verification in form similar to that required for pleadings; the word "verified" meaning to confirm by oath, and an "affidavit being a written declaration under oath." Wertz v. Lamb, 117 Pac. 89, 92, 43 Mont. 477.

VERIFIED STATEMENT

The words "verified statement," in Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, c. 466) § 261, providing that a verified statement of claim shall be filed with the comptroller, relate to the statement which a claimant must file, showing in detail the property alleged to have been damaged or destroyed and the manner thereof, and do not refer to a verification of a claim on an examination conducted by the comptroller as authorized by section 149. Frank v. City of New York, 133 N. Y. Supp. 434, 436, 75 Misc. Rep. 472.

VERMUTH

"Vermuth" is not "wine," within either the commercial or the popular meaning of that term, and therefore is not subject to the stamp tax on "sparkling or other wines," provided in War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, c. 448, 30 Stat. 463. Taylor v. Treat, 153 Fed. 656, 657 (citing definitions in Standard and Century Dictionaries).

"Vermuth" is not a "wine," "cordial," or "liqueur," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule H, par. 296, 30 Stat. 174, prohibiting an allowance for the leakage of those three articles. United States v. Julius Wile, Sons & Co., 178 Fed. 269, 270, 101 C. C. A. 574.

VERY

An instruction, in an action for injuries to a passenger by the derailment of the train, that the carrier must exercise the utmost caution characteristic of very careful and prudent men, is erroneous as imposing on the carrier too high a degree of care; the word

"very" meaning exceedingly, excessively, and the word "excessive" meaning exceeding what is usual or proper. Parker v. Boston & M. R. R., 79 Atl. 865, 872, 84 Vt. 329.

The word "very," in common parlance, has not the same meaning as "extraordinary"; and hence an instruction, in an action for injuries to a passenger, that a carrier owes the duty to exercise the highest degree of diligence known to "very" diligent persons, was not objectionable as requiring a standard of extraordinary care. Southern Ry. Co. v. Burgess, 42 South. 35, 37, 143 Ala. 364.

The term "very high degree of care" means that degree of care which a person possessed of the highest degree of care and prudence engaged in the same kind of employment would have exercised under like circumstances, and the word "negligence," as applied to one engaged in the transportation of passengers for hire, is the failure to do anything which a person of the highest degree of care and prudence, engaged in the same kind of employment, would have done under like circumstances, or the doing of anything which a person possessed of the highest degree of care and prudence engaged in the same kind of business, would have refrained from doing under like circumstances. Central Texas & N. W. R. Co. v. Smith (Tex.) 73 S. W. 537, 538 (citing International & G. N. Ry. v. Welch, 24 S. W. 390, 86 Tex. 204, 40 Am. St. Rep. 829).

VERY FAST

While the expressions "very fast" and "mighty fast" are terms of relative meaning, when they are applied to the speed of a street car, they are sufficiently definite to enable the jury to say whether or not the car was travelling in excess of seven miles an hour. In an action against a street railroad for injuries to a passenger, evidence that the car was going "very fast" and "mighty fast" was sufficient to render it error to exclude an ordinance limiting the rate of speed of a street car to seven miles an hour. Moore v. Northern Texas Traction Co., 95 S. W. 652, 653; 41 Tex. Civ. App. 583.

VERY HEAVY SHRINK

A shipper of live stock wrote the carrier that he had had "a very heavy shrink," and stated that in one instance all the cattle in one car were knocked down by rough handling, and complaint was made of the delay in transportation, which caused the stock to reach destination too late for a certain market. Held, that the letter, by the term "very heavy shrink," did not amount to a claim for damages merely from loss of weight alone, and did not preclude recovery for loss due to depreciation on account of loss in weight, injury to quality, and decline in the market. Ratliff v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co., 94 S. W. 1005, 1008, 118 Mo. App. 644.

VERY RICH

The terms "wealthy" and "very rich" are too indefinite and general to charge any one with the knowledge of the kind and amount of property possessed. In a suit to set aside an antenuptial agreement because of the disproportion between the provision for the wife therein and the husband's means, evidence that the wife had been told by the husband, prior to the making of the agreement, that he was a "banker," a "large landowner," and "wealthy," did not discharge the burden upon those claiming under the husband under the agreement to show that the wife had full knowledge as to the nature, character, and extent of the husband's means at the time. Warner v. Warner, 85 N. E. 630, 637, 235 Ill. 448.

VERY SEVERE

The unexpected jarring of a passenger car, described as "very severe," as the train was passing over a cross-switch used during the repair of one of the railroad company's bridges, which resulted in a passenger, who was standing near the open door of a car, being thrown from the car and injured, did not constitute negligence on the part of the carrier. Foley v. Boston & M. R. R., 79 N. E. 765, 766, 193 Mass. 332, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1076.

VERY UNFAVORABLE

To say that the general character of a person for truth and veracity is "very unfavorable" is in common parlance but another mode of saying that it is bad in that regard. Martin's Ex'r v. Martin, 25 Ala. 201, 211.

VESSEL

See Coastwise Steam Vessel; Foreign Vessel; Steam Vessel.

Management of, see Management.
Owner of vessel, see Owner.

Appurtenances included

The word "vessel," as used in Chinese Exclusion Act May 6, 1882, c. 126, § 10, 22 Stat. 61, providing that "every vessel whose master shall knowingly violate any provisions of this act shall be liable to seizure and condemnation," etc., is broad enough to include the vessel's tackle, apparel, furniture, and "appurtenances." A chronometer supplied on account of the owners of a schooner as a necessary part of her equipment for a special service, and necessary part of her equipment, is to be regarded as "appurtenant" to the "ship," and as included in the term "vessel." The Frolic, 148 Fed. 921, 922 (citing Abb. Merchant Ships & Seamen [14th Ed.] p. 33, 34, 280; Richardson v. Clark, 15 Me. 421; The Witch Queen, 3 Sawy. 201, 30 Fed. Cas. 396).

Barge

A barge with a pile driver mounted thereon and moved from place to place by tugs, which at the time of an injury to an employé working thereon was working in a tidewater stream, is a "vessel" subject to the admiralty jurisdiction, and within Rev. St. §§ 4283, 4289 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 2943, 2945), giving the right to a limitation of liability without regard to the manner in which it was moored or the fact that at the time of the injury the tide was out and it rested on the bottom. In re P. Sanford Ross, 196 Fed. 921, 924.

Derrick hoist

A derrick hoist held a "vessel" subject to admiralty jurisdiction and against which the engineer and general utility man employed thereon were entitled to a seaman's lien for wages. The Sallie, 167 Fed. 880.

Dredge

The Pennsylvania act giving a lien for repairs or supplies furnished on "all ships, steamboats or vessels navigating" the rivers in the state, embraces only such "vessels" as are engaged in the business of trade or commerce on such rivers, and does not apply to a dredge boat, without motive power and used only for supporting and moving from place to place dredging apparatus. Fredricks v. James Rees & Sons Co., 135 Fed. 730, 731-734, 68 C. C. A. 368.

Dredges are to be considered in admiralty as "vessels." The owner of a tug, which was verbally hired by the day by the owner of three dredges to "wait upon" such dredges while engaged on certain work, the services rendered being the carrying of coal and water to the dredges, the towing of scows, and the dredges themselves when necessary, is not entitled to a maritime lien on all or any of such dredges for a balance due on a contract which was not one for ordinary towage services to the vessels themselves. The Alligator, 161 Fed. 37, 39, 88 C. C. A. 201.

"It was distinctly held by Judge Dodge * * * that a scow is a 'vessel,' to be dealt with as such by persons concerned with maritime affairs. Dredges have, I think, been uniformly treated as vessels subject to ordinary rules relating to navigation, * * * and it would be anomalous if they could occupy navigable waters in a fog, without giving other vessels, which were justified in navigating there, warning of their presence." The Kennebec, 167 Fed. 847, 855 (citing and adopting In re Eastern Dredge Co., 138 Fed. 942, and The City of Birmingham, 138 Fed. 555, 71 C. C. A. 115).

Foreign vessel

A statute giving the right to a lien for supplies furnished "vessels" is applicable only to domestic vessels of the state, and a lien cannot be obtained thereunder on a foreign vessel. The Golden Rod, 151 Fed. 6, 7, 80 C. C. A. 246.

As public work

See Public Work.

Pump boat

A "pump boat," which consists of a floating structure equipped with engine, boiler, pumps, pipes, and capstans, used for pumping out coal barges, and which can be moved on the water by means of poles or ropes attached to its capstans or towed, is a "vessel," and subject to the admiralty jurisdiction. Charles Barnes Co. v. One Dredge Boat, 169 Fed. 895, 896.

Scow

A navigable structure intended for the transportation of a permanent cargo, as a scow carrying a pile driver and engine, which has to be towed in order to navigate, is a "vessel," and within the admiralty jurisdiction. The Raithmoor, 186 Fed. 849, 850.

A scow 110 feet long, employed in carrying mud in Boston Harbor and adjacent waters, or other waters subject to the jurisdiction of admiralty courts, is a "vessel" for the purposes of admiralty jurisdiction and the maritime law, and her owner may maintain proceedings for limitation of liability on account of collision under Rev. St. §§ 4282, 4289, as amended by Act June 19, 1886, c. 421, § 4, 24 Stat. 80. In re Eastern Dredging Co., 138 Fed. 942, 943.

As structure

See Structure.

Wrecked or dismantled ship

A steamer, which had been taken on shore by her owners for the purpose of being dismantled, and from which the masts and engines had been removed, so long as the dismantling process had not proceeded so far as to render her wholly incapable of being navigated as a tow or otherwise, continued to be a "vessel," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 4289, as amended by Act June 19, 1886, c. 421, § 4, 24 Stat. 80; and her owners may maintain proceedings for a limitation of liability for damage done by her, where she floated and went adrift in a storm without their knowledge. The C. H. Northam, 181 Fed. 983, 984.

A vessel, although wrecked, abandoned by her owners and underwriters, and her register closed, but which still retains her hull, though damaged, and her machinery, remains a "vessel" in a maritime sense, and is subject to dry dock charges while undergoing repairs after she has been raised, and to a maritime lien for such charges. The George W. Elder, 196 Fed. 137, 139.

VESSELS EMPLOYED BY AUTHORITY OF LAW

The term "vessels employed by authority of law," within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 1571, providing that "no service shall be regarded as sea service except such as shall be performed at sea, under the orders of a department, and in 'vessels employed by authority of law,' is restricted to vessels owned or chartered by the government, or otherwise engaged in the service of the United States, and does not include a steamer upon which a naval officer takes passage under the orders of a department. United States v. Thomas, 25 Sup. Ct. 102, 105, 195 U. S. 418, 49 L. Ed. 259.

VESSELS OF THE UNITED STATES

A steamer enrolled and licensed in the office of collector of customs in the port of Detroit under the statutes of the United States is a "vessel of the United States," regardless of what use may be made of her; and the recording of a mortgage on a vessel of the United States, under Rev. St. U. S. § 4192, in the office of the collector of customs where such vessel is registered, renders the mortgage valid, regardless of the fact that it is not recorded as required by the state law. Fleming v. Sloane, 110 N. W. 933, 934, 147 Mich. 404.

A "vessel of the United States," as used in the Tonnage Duty Act means more than a vessel whose nationality is American. It means such a vessel as is defined in section 4131 of the Revised Statutes, providing that "vessels registered pursuant to law, and no others, except such as shall be duly qualified, according to law, for carrying on the coasting trade and fisheries, or one of them, shall be deemed vessels of the United States, and entitled to the benefits and privileges appertaining to such vessels; but they shall not enjoy the same longer than they shall continue to be wholly owned by citizens and to be commanded by a citizen of the United States. And the officers of vessels of the United States shall in all cases be citizens of the United States." A vessel which is not a "vessel of the United States" may be an "American vessel," because of the nationality of her owner. The Alta, 136 Fed. 513, 519, 69 C. C. A. 289 (citing Wade v. Chicago, S. & St. L. R. Co., 13 Sup. Ct. 892, 149 U. S. 327, 37 L. Ed. 755).

A vessel not registered in the United States is a vessel "not of the United States," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 4219, although owned by a citizen of the United States, and on her entry from a foreign port is subject to tonnage duty at the rate of 50 cents per ton thereunder. The Alta, 148 Fed. 663, 664, 665, 78 C. C. A. 415 (citing The Merritt, 17 Wall. [84 U. S.] 562, 21 L. Ed. 682; The Conqueror, 17 Sup. Ct. 510, 513, 166 U. S. 110-119, 41 L. Ed. 937).

VEST

See Technically Vested.

Under a will which directs, after the decease of testator's brother and his wife, that certain real estate shall "vest" in the children of the deceased brother, the children were to come into possession of the property on the decease of their parents. Jacobs v. Whitney, 91 N. E. 1009, 1011, 205 Mass. 477, 18 Ann. Cas. 576.

The general rule for determining whether a bequest is vested or contingent is that, when the time of division is of the substance of the gift, the legacy is contingent, but, when the time is mentioned only as a qualifying clause of payment or division, the legacy is vested. Crawford v. Engram, 45 South. 584, 585, 153 Ala. 420.

The entire clear value of a legacy under a will devising the residuary estate in trust to pay over to the testator's niece the net income in quarterly payments for life, and not merely so much of such life estate as she had actually received before July 1, 1902, had "vested" prior to that date, in the sense of the provision of Act June 27, 1902, c. 1160, § 3, 32 Stat. 406, for the refunding of so much of the succession tax as may have been collected on "contingent beneficial interests which shall not have become vested" before the date mentioned. United States v. Fidelity Trust Co., 32 Sup. Ct. 59, 60, 222 U. S. 158, 56 L. Ed. 137.

"Vested," as used in a partnership agreement, providing for the dissolution of the firm, and that all the firm's assets should vest in the liquidating partner, did not give to such liquidator absolute title, but title only for the purpose of liquidating the assets of the partnership, so that on his death such assets did not descend to his administratrix. Smith v. Proskey, 81 N. Y. Supp. 424, 425, 82 App. Div. 19.

Under Statutes, § 2830, providing that "a future interest is 'vested' when there is a person in being who would have a right defensible or indefeasible to the immediate possession of the property upon the ceasing of the immediate or precedent interest," a will giving to the wife a life estate, and the son all property after her death, empowers the son to transfer by written instrument to his mother, and her heirs and assigns, forever, property to become his after the death of the mother. Coats v. Harris, 75 Pac. 243, 245, 9 Idaho, 458.

The ordinary, proper, and legal meaning of a provision that personal property shall be "vested in" a certain person is that the title to the property passes to and rests in him; and where an agreement provided for the dissolution of a partnership by consent, appointed one of the partners liquidator, and further provided that all stock, book accounts, and other assets of the firm should vest in such liquidating partner, it gave him an absolute title in the assets, so that on his death, they would descend to his administratrix. Oshinsky v. Greenberg, 79 N. Y. Supp. 833, 39 Misc. Rep. 342.

A deed under which the grantees are to enter immediately into possession, and thereafter have the use of the land, unless some condition in the deed is broken, and by which the grantees, in consideration of the conveyance, covenant to furnish the grantor support and proper attendance during his life, and give him a burial and monument, and to pay a mortgage on the premises, and that he shall have the right to re-enter and take possession for a breach of any of such covenants, though providing that the performance of said covenants is made a "condition precedent to the vesting of the title," creates conditions subsequent, and not precedent; the word "vesting" not being used in its technical sense, but the clause, in the light of the surrounding circumstances and in connection with the entire instrument, being clearly intended to mean that the title should vest at once, but that the grantees should not have an absolute indefeasible title till they had performed all the conditions of the deed. Phillips v. Gannon, 92 N. E. 616, 619, 246 Ill. 98.

VESTED ESTATE

An estate is "vested" where there is an immediate right of present enjoyment or a present fixed right of future enjoyment. Armstrong v. Barber, 88 N. E. 246, 248, 230 Ill. 389; Trippet v. State, 86 Pac. 1084, 1086, 149 Cal. 521, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1210 (quoting Kent, Comm. 202).

Within the rule that, where a residuary estate is completely "vested" before the enactment of the transfer tax statute, it cannot be reached by that form of taxation, the word "vested" is really to be construed as equivalent to the word "accrued," and not as distinguished from merely contingent interests. In that sense a property right which has been fully acquired is protected by the contract, and becomes in law a vested right, the enjoyment of which is not to be deemed as only a privilege, and as such consequently subject to taxation upon the right of enjoyment. In re Craig's Estate, 89 N. Y. Supp. 971, 973, 97 App. Div. 289.

To vest an estate is to give a legal or equitable seisin. An estate "vests" in a person who is given a present and immediate interest, as distinguished from an interest the existence of which depends on a contingency. The word applies to estates in personality, as well as estates in land. In re McClellan's Estate, 70 Atl. 737, 221 Pa. 261.

Where the form of a deed is actually employed, such phrases as "vest at my death," "take effect at my death," and the like may well be construed as merely designed to postpone possession or enjoyment by the grantee till after the death of the grantor. An instrument attested as a deed and in all respects in the form of a deed should, though it contains the words "this deed to take effect at my death," be treated, not as a will, but as a conveyance passing title in present, with right of possession postponed till the death of the maker. Nolan v. Otney, 89 Pac. 690, 691, 75 Kan. 311, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 317 (quoting West v. Wright, 41 S. E. 602, 115 Ga. 277).

The phrase "vest in and belong to," as used in Laws 1858, c. 291, providing for condemnation of lands for a bridge over Harlem river, and declaring that, upon the confirmation of the report of the commissioners, the property shall "vest in and belong to" the city of New York, denotes no estate less than a fee. In re Jerome Avenue in City of New York, 105 N. Y. Supp. 1009, 1011, 54 Misc. Rep. 345.

If there is a present right to a future possession, though that right may be defeated by some future event, contingent or certain, there is nevertheless a vested estate; an unpossessed estate being vested if it is certain to take effect in possession by enduring longer than the precedent estate. A will gave the residue of testator's estate to a trustee for 20 years, with power to invest and reinvest it, and provided that, when there should be a greater accumulation than the trustee deemed necessary for the purposes of the trust, he should divide it into six equal shares, paying one share to each of testator's five children and dividing one share among the children of testator's deceased son, and provided that, if any of testator's children should die without leaving lineal descendants before expiration of 20 years after testator's death, their shares should go to the other legatees, share and share alike, per stirpes and not per capita, and that at the expiration of 20 years the trustee should sell the property and divide it into six shares to be distributed as provided for distribution of the income. Held, that all legacies under the will were vested subject as to the children to be divested by death within 20 years without leaving lineal descendants. The legacies to the children of testator's deceased son were vested absolutely and unconditionally, so that an administrator of a deceased daughter of testator's deceased son was entitled to share in a distribution of income. In re Long's Estate, 77 Atl. 924, 928, 228 Pa. 594.

In determining whether an estate is "vested" or contingent, "the question is always: Is futurity annexed to the substance of the gift? If so, the vesting is postponed. Or is it annexed to the time of payment only? If so, the legacy vests immediately." Another authority says: "The question of 'vested' or contingent is not to be tested by the certainty or uncertainty of obtaining the actual enjoyment, for that would make the character of the estate depend, not upon the terms of its creation, but on the form of the result. Neither does it depend on the defeasibility or the indefeasibility of the right of possession, for many estates are vested without possession, as well as with, which are yet defeasible. If there is a present right to a future possession, though that right may be defeated by some future event, contingent or certain, there is nevertheless a vested estate." Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v. Noyes, 58 Atl. 999, 1002, 26 R. I. 323 (quoting Staples v. De Wolf, 8 R. I. 118; Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Wood, 50 Atl. 920, 201 Pa. 427).

"A future estate is either vested or contingent. It is 'vested' when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the property, on the determination of all the intermediate or precedent estates. It is 'contingent' while the person to whom or the event on which it is limited to take effect remains uncertain." In re Perry, 96 N. Y. Supp. 879, 884, 48 Misc. Rep. 285.

When an estate is "vested" for life or years, it is fixed for the described term, and its owners are seized for that term. Brewington v. Brewington, 109 S. W. 723, 727, 211 Mo. 48 (citing Black, Law Dict., title "Vest").

A future estate is "vested" when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the property or the determination of all intermediate or preceding estates. In re Ryder, 89 N. Y. Supp. 460, 462, 43 Misc. Rep. 476 (citing Laws 1896, p. 564, c. 547, § 30).

The rule for determining whether an estate bestowed by a will is "vested" or contingent is that, where the time of division or payment is of the substance of the gift, the legacy is contingent; when time is mentioned only as a qualifying clause of the payment or division, then the legacy is vested; or, in other words, legacies payable after the death of the testator are either vested or contingent, and, when the testator annexes time to the payment only, the legacy will be vested, but, if of the gift itself, it will be contingent. Johnson v. Terry, 36 South. 775, 776, 139 Ala. 614.

The term "vested estate," as used in Civ. Code Prac. § 489, authorizing the sale of a vested estate of an infant or of a person of unsound mind in real property by order of a court of equity in certain cases, and section 490 providing that a vested estate in real property owned jointly by two or more persons may be sold in certain cases, includes all estates which are not contingent, and the sections do not authorize the sale of an infant's interest in real property which is a contingent remainder and dependent on the event of the infant surviving the life tenants. Crutcher v. Rodman, 81 S. W. 252, 253, 118 Ky. 506 (citing Ward v. Edge, 39 S. W. 440, 100 Ky. 757).

Real Property Law (Laws 1896, p. 564, c. 547), § 27, declares a future estate is "vested" when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the property on the determination of all the intermediate or precedent estates. Schell v. Carpenter, 100 N. Y. Supp. 554, 555, 50 Misc. Rep. 400.

The law favors the vesting of estates, and an estate is "vested" when it is limited to a person in being and is to take effect on the determination of a preceding particular estate. Pingrey v. Ruion, 92 N. E. 592, 596, 246 Ill. 109.

A conditional legacy or devise, subject to be divested on the happening of the contingency on which it is given, is "estate vesting sub modo." Matlock v. Lock, 73 N. E. 171, 178, 38 Ind. App. 281 (citing 1 Rop. Leg. 601).

Where infants jointly own land, subject to the unassigned dower of their mother in a third of it, and all live on it, there is a "vested estate" therein, jointly owned and in possession, within Civ. Code Prac. § 490, subsec. 2, authorizing such an estate to be sold in an action by either owner, though one be an infant, if the property be indivisible, so that the sale is properly allowed if the action is brought by the guardian of the infants, the widow consenting to take the present value of her dower, though she join as plaintiff. Hatterich v. Bruce, 151 S. W. 31, 32, 151 Ky. 12.

VESTED IN INTEREST OR POSSESSION

The word "vest," as used in a deed, has a double meaning, denoting either "a vesting in interest," or "a vesting in possession." Burney v. Arnold, 67 S. E. 712, 715, 134 Ga. 141.

Testator gave his residuary estate for two lives to trustees, with instructions to consider the corpus divided into a certain number of shares, declaring that the income should be distributed among named beneficiaries annually, and that after the lapse of the two lives the corpus should be divided in such a manner that the parties theretofore receiving the income only should be vested with the principal in the same proportion. Held, that the word "vest" was used, not in the sense of vesting in interest, but in possession, and that the beneficiary took a vested interest in the principal on the testator's death, which passed on the beneficiary's death under his will. Ogden v. Ogden, 82 N. Y. Supp. 710, 715, 40 Misc. Rep. 473.

VESTED INTEREST

A "vested interest" is one in which there is a present fixed right either of present enjoyment or of future enjoyment. A "contingent interest" is one in which there is no present fixed right of either present or future enjoyment, but in which a fixed right will arise in the future under certain specified contingencies. An estate in remainder is not rendered contingent by uncertainty of time of enjoyment. The right and capacity of the remaindermen to take possession of the estate, if the possession were to become vacant, and the certainty that the event on which the vacancy depends must happen some time, and not the certainty that it will happen in the lifetime of the remaindermen, determine whether or not the estate is vested or contingent. Nelson v. Nelson (Ind.) 72 N. E. 482, 483.

The right to inchoate dower given at common law is not a "vested interest." Griswold v. McGee, 112 N. W. 1020, 1022, 102 Minn. 114, 12 Ann. Cas. 186.

When the subject of the gift is separated from the rest of the estate, and vested in trustees for the benefit of the legatee, the gift, although in form contingent, will be held "vested." Where testator bequeathed his residuary estate in trust, the income to be paid to his grandson until he attained the age of 25 years, when the trustees were to pay him the principal thereof, and the grandson died before reaching such age, it was held that he took a "vested interest" in the principal. In re Middleton's Estate, 61 Atl. 808, 809, 212 Pa. 119.

VESTED LEGACY

Where the event is certain, though the time be uncertain, a legacy is vested. Moore v. Matthews, 61 Atl. 743, 745, 70 N. J. Eq. 373 (citing Beatty's Adm'r v. Montgomery's Ex'x, 21 N. J. Eq. 324).

A testator, who died in March, 1901, devised and bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees, to hold and manage the same during the lives of the two surviving children of the testator who should be the youngest at the time of his death and for so much longer as permissible under the laws of the state. The trustees were directed to set apart a sufficient sum to produce a certain amount of income to be paid to the widow during her life, and to pay the income from the remainder in equal parts to the four children of the testator named, or to their issue or devisees in case of their death, subject as to a part thereof to certain charges to pay off liens on property. At the termination of the trust the corpus of the estate was to be divided equally between the four children or the devisees, legatees, assigns, or legal heirs of any deceased. Held, that each of the four children took at once a vested estate in one-fourth part of the testator's residuary estate, having the immediate right to dispose of the same by deed or will, and to enjoy a part of the income, subject to no contingency, possession of the corpus alone being deferred; that such gifts took effect at once "in possession or enjoyment," and became subject to the legacy tax imposed by War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, c. 448, § 29, 30 Stat. 464, and that the taxes paid thereon were not recoverable under Act June 27, 1902, c. 1160, § 3, 32 Stat. 406, as having been assessed on contingent interests which had not become vested prior to July 1, 1902. Title Guarantee & Trust Co. v. Ward, 164 Fed. 459, 467 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7304).

VESTED REMAINDER

The word "vested," as applied to real estate, implies a present interest therein, and a remainder is therefore vested in one when he or his heirs have the right to the immediate possession, whenever or however the preceding estates may determine. Storrs v. Burgess, 67 Atl. 731, 732, 29 R. I. 269 (citing Hawkins, Wills, 221 et seq.; Rule Against Perp. 76, §§ 100, 101; Johnson v. Edmond, 33 Atl. 503, 65 Conn. 492, 499; Starnes v. Hill, 16 S. E. 1011, 112 N. C. 1, 9, 22 L. R. A. 598).

A remainder which is subject to a condition subsequent is "vested" subject to divestiture on the happening of the condition. Walker v. Alverson, 68 S. E. 966, 968, 87 S. C. 55, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 115.

A "vested remainder" is one by which a present interest passes to the party, though to be enjoyed in future, and by which the estate is fixed to remain to a determinate person after the particular estate is spent; he having an immediate fixed right of future enjoyment. In re Kountz's Estate, 62 Atl. 1103, 1105, 213 Pa. 390, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 639, 5 Ann. Cas. 427 (quoting and adopting definition in Williamson v. Field's Ex'rs [N. Y.] 2 Sandf. Ch. 533, 552, and citing Tiffany, Real Prop. § 120(b); Brown v. Lawrence, 57 Mass. [3 Cush.] 390, 397; 1 Boone, Real Prop. [2d Ed.] § 173; and Fearne, Cont. Remainders, 216).

A "vested remainder" is one limited to a certain person on a certain event, namely, the termination of the particular estate, in such manner that the remainderman has present capacity to take possession should the possession become immediately vacant. Nelson v. Nelson (Ind.) 72 N. E. 482, 484 (quoting and adopting definition in Gard. Wills, §§ 128-131).

A remainder is a "vested" one where a present interest, although to be enjoyed in the future, passes under the will to a certain and definite person. Vogt v. Vogt, 26 App. D. C. 46, 51.

A "vested remainder" is defined to be "whenever the preceding estate is limited so as to determine on an event which certainly must happen, and the remainder is so limited to a person in esse, and ascertained that the preceding estate may be, by any means, determined before the expiration of the estate limited in remainder." Taylor v. Stephens (Ind.) 74 N. E. 12.

A "vested remainder" is one which gives the remainderman or his heirs the right to immediate possession whenever the preceding estates may terminate. Brown v. Brown, 93 N. E. 357, 359, 247 Ill. 528.

A "vested remainder" is one by which a present interest passes under the will to the devisee, though to be enjoyed in the future, and by which the estate is fixed to remain to a determinate person after the particular estate is spent, and one entitled to a vested remainder has an immediate fixed right of future enjoyment. Richardson v. Richardson, 68 S. E. 217, 218, 152 N. C. 705.

A "vested remainder" is a present interest which passes to one to be enjoyed in future, so that the estate is invariably fixed in a determinate person after a particular estate terminates; a remainder being vested when a definite interest is created in a certain person and no further condition is imposed than the determination of the precedent estate, it not being sufficient that there is a person in being who has the present capacity to take the remainder if the particular estate be presently determined, but it being necessary that it appear that there are no other contingencies which may intervene to defeat the estate before the falling in of the particular estate. Golladay v. Knock, 85 N. E. 649-651, 235 Ill. 412, 126 Am. St. Rep. 224.

When testator gave all his estate to his wife for life, on her death to be divided equally among his children, the children living at the time of testator's death took "vested remainders," under statutes providing that an estate is vested when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to possession on the determination of the precedent estate. Vanderpoel v. Burke, 118 N. Y. Supp. 548, 549, 63 Misc. Rep. 545.

The second clause of a will provided: "I give, devise, and bequeath all the property of which I may die seised and possessed * * * to my beloved wife for her natural life, the remainder thereof to my sons hereinafter named in proportions, for the time and upon the conditions hereinafter expressed." The fourth clause provided that, upon the termination of the wife's life estate, "I give and devise unto my son M. all those certain lots. * * * If my son M. should precede in death his wife and leave him no lawful issue surviving, and should such death of my son M. occur before the property herein devised and bequeathed to him vests in him, then, all the interests herein devised and bequeathed to said M. shall pass to and vest in" his wife absolutely. Other provisions showed that testator clearly understood the legal significance of words of present devise unqualified by other language. Civ. Code, § 694, provides that a future interest is vested when there is a person in being who would have a right to immediate possession upon the ceasing of the precedent interest.

Section 695 provided that a future interest is contingent while the person in whom or the event upon which it is limited to take effect remains uncertain; and section 1341 provides that devises and bequests are presumed to vest at testator's death. Held, that son M. took a "vested remainder" in the estate devised to him immediately upon testator's death. In re De Vries' Estate, 119 Pac. 109, 111, 17 Cal. App. 184.

Real Property Law (Laws 1896, p. 564, c. 547) § 30, provides that an estate is "vested" when there is a person in being having an immediate right to possession on the termination of all intermediate or precedent estates; and section 31 declares that the existence of an unexecuted power of appointment does not prevent the vesting of a future estate limited on default of execution of the power. Testator bequeathed a share of his estate in trust for S., one half absolutely and the other half for life, and in case no issue survived her to pay one-half of her share to her appointee by will, and in default of appointment to C., should she survive S. Both C. and S. survived testator. S. died without children, leaving C. surviving and a will by which she executed the power of appointment in favor of C. Held, that on testator's death, S. surviving and having no issue, the remainder in the half share of S. vested at once in C., subject to be divested by the birth of issue to S. or by the execution of the power. In re Haggerty, 112 N. Y. Supp. 1017, 1018, 128 App. Div. 479.

"Vested remainders" are those by which a present vested interest passes to the party, though to be enjoyed in future, and by which the estate is invariably fixed to go to a certain person after the particular estate is spent. Stout v. Clifford, 73 S. E. 316, 319, 70 W. Va. 178.

"A 'vested remainder' is where a present interest passes to a certain and definite person, but to be enjoyed in futuro. * * * It is a rule of law that an estate shall be held to vest at the earliest possible period, unless there be a clear manifestation of the intention of the testator to the contrary. Where there is a devise to a class of persons to take effect in enjoyment at a future period, the estate vests in the persons as they come in esse, subject to open and let in others as they are born afterwards." Where a testator who died in March, 1902, by his will bequeathed his residuary estate in trust, the income to be paid to his wife for life, and after her death to be divided between his children then living, the children of any deceased child to take in place of their parent, all children and the heirs of any deceased took a vested interest on the testator's death, which became subject to the legacy tax imposed by section 29 of the war revenue act of 1898, Act June 13, 1898, c. 448, 30 Stat. 464. Land Title & Trust Co. v. McCoach, 127 Fed.

Civ. Code, § 694, declaring that a future interest is "vested" when there is a person in being who will have a right to the immediate possession of the property on the ceasing of the intermediate interest, does not apply to a future contingent remainder in unborn grandchildren of a grantee for life, with remainder to the heirs of her body. Hall v. Wright, 120 Pac. 429, 431, 17 Cal. App. 502.

A "vested remainder" is one which is limited to an ascertained person in being, whose right to the estate is fixed and certain, and does not depend upon the happening of any future event, but whose enjoyment in possession is postponed to some future time. Where a testator devised property to his wife to hold, until his two children became of age, then to be divided "in equal shares between my wife and my two children, share and share alike," the children took vested remainders, and, on their deaths before attaining majority, their interests passed to their heirs at law. Roberts v. Herron, 58 S. E. 968, 78 S. C. 115 (quoting and adopting Faber v. Police, 10 S. C. 376, 387).

Contingent remainder distinguished

A "contingent remainder" is one limited to take effect either to an uncertain person, or on an uncertain event, while a "vested remainder" is a present interest which passes to a party to be enjoyed in the future, so that the estate is immediately fixed in a determinate person after a particular estate terminates. Pingrey v. Rulon, 92 N. E. 592, 595, 246 Ill. 109.

A "contingent remainder" is one limited to take effect either to a dubious or uncertain person or upon a dubious and uncertain event. A remainder is "vested" where there is a right of present enjoyment or a fixed right to a future enjoyment in a determinate person after the particular estate terminates. If there is uncertainty either as to the person who is to receive or in the gift itself to the remainderman, the remainder is contingent. Where the postponement of the estate is for reasons not personal to the remaindermen the remainder is "vested." Northern Trust Co. v. Wheaton, 94 N. E. 980, 983, 249 Ill. 606, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1150.

Testator directed that M. and testator's daughter should have 200 acres of land, and that the rest should go to testator's wife, and, at her death, should fall back to them (meaning M. and his daughter). The daughter died before her mother without heirs. Held, that, since the remaindermen were certain and had present capacity of taking in possession, if at any time the possession should become vacant, they took a "vested remainder," though through subsequent contingencies the land might pass to persons other than those intended by the testator. Hackney v. Tucker (Ky.) 121 S. W. 417.

The test whether a remainder is "vested" or contingent by inquiring whether the owner being sui juris, could, by uniting with the owner of the particular estate, convey a fee-simple title, is inapplicable to a vested remainder, which is subject to a divesting contingency, or which is given to a class some of whom are not in esse. Walker v. Alverton, 68 S. E. 968, 970, 87 S. C. 55, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 115.

The uncertainty of the right to the enjoyment of a remainder, as distinguished from the uncertainty of the enjoyment of the estate, in the future, distinguishes a "vested" from a contingent remainder, so that the fact that the estate is to take effect after the termination of an intervening estate will not prevent both estates from vesting at the same moment. The present capacity of taking effect in possession, if the possession were to become vacant, and not the certainty that the possession will become vacant, before the estate limited in remainder determines, universally distinguishes a vested remainder from a contingent remainder. Where testator bequeathed to his wife for life the house in which he resided, and at her death to be divided between testator's heirs per stirpes, the heirs took a vested estate in the remainder at testator's death, and their interest was therefore descendible in case of the death of any of them during the continuance of the life estate. Well v. King (Ky.) 104 S. W. 380, 382.

The distinction between "vested" and contingent remainders is clearly stated in the case of Faber v. Police, 10 S. C. (10 Rich.) 376, as follows: "According to the elementary writers, a vested remainder is one which is limited to an ascertained person in being, whose right to the estate is fixed and certain, and does not depend on the happening of any future event, but whose enjoyment and possession is postponed to some future time. A contingent remainder, on the other hand, is one which is limited to a person not in being or not ascertained, or, if limited to an ascertained person, it is so limited that his right to the estate depends upon some contingency in the future. So that the most marked distinction between the two kinds of remainders is that in one case the right to the estate is fixed and certain, though the right to the possession is deferred to some future period, but is dependent upon the happening of some future contingency. As it has been well expressed, 'It is not the uncertainty of the estate in the future, but the uncertainty of the right to such enjoyment, which marks the difference between a contingent and a vested remainder.'" A trust deed granted a fee to the trustee for the benefit of the grantor for life, and provided that after her death the trustee should convey the property to certain named children and grandchildren, or if any of them died before conveyance, leaving children, such children should take the share of their parents. The parties named took a vested, and not a contingent, remainder. Woodley v. Calhoun, 48 S. E. 272, 273, 69 S. C. 285.

"The true criterion of a 'vested remainder' is the existence in an ascertained person of a present, fixed right of future enjoyment of the estate, limited in remainder, which right will take effect in possession immediately on the determination of the precedent estate, irrespective of any collateral event, provided the estate in remainder does not determine before the precedent estate." 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) 389. Mr. Washburn, in his work on Real Property, says: "The broad distinction between vested and contingent remainders is this: In the first, there is some person in esse, known and ascertained, who, by the will or deed creating the estate, is to take and enjoy the estate upon the expiration of the existing particular estate, and whose right to such remainder no contingency can defeat. In the second, it depends upon the happening of a contingent event whether the estate limited as a remainder shall ever take effect at all. The event may either happen, or it may not happen until after the particular estate upon which it depended shall have determined so that the estate in remainder will never take effect." A vested remainder is one "when there is an immediate right of present enjoyment, or a fixed right of future enjoyment." 4 Kent, Comm. 194. "That a remainder cannot be vested unless there be some certain person or persons in being in whom it can be regarded as vested is a proposition as to which, upon principle, it would seem that there could be little doubt, and that such is the law is recognized by the most authoritative writers and by numerous decisions." 1 Tiffany's Modern Law of Real Prop. 120. Testator devised real estate to his wife for life with remainder to J., adding that, on the latter dying before distribution of the property, his issue, if he left any, otherwise his heirs, should receive his share. Held, that J. took a vested remainder, so that he and the life tenant could give a perfect title. Callison v. Morris, 98 N. W. 780, 781, 123 Iowa, 297.

An estate is "vested" when there is an immediate right of present enjoyment or a present fixed right of future enjoyment. It is not the uncertainty of ever taking effect in possession that makes a remainder contingent, for to this extent every remainder is and must be liable. The present capacity of taking effect in possession, if the possession were to become vacant before the estate limited in remainder determines, distinguishes a vested from a contingent remainder. Where a testator devised land to his wife during her lifetime, and upon her death to his children in equal shares, but with a provision that, if any of the children should die before the wife leaving no children, the share devised to them was thereby devised to the survivors of the children, the children took vested and not contingent remainders which might be defeated by their death before the death of the wife, or what is generally called a defeasible fee. Roach v. Dance (Ky.) 80 S. W. 1097, 1098 (Kent's Com. vol. 4, § 202; Minor's Institutes, vol. 2, p. 388).

"A 'vested remainder' is an estate to take effect after another estate for years, life, or in tail, which is so limited that, if that particular estate were to expire or end in any way at the present time, some certain person who is in esse and answered the description of the remainderman during the continuance of the particular estate would thereupon become entitled to the immediate possession, irrespective of the concurrence of any collateral contingency." A testator devised real estate to his daughter for life, remainder to her children, if any surviving her, otherwise to testator's brothers and sisters, and, in case any one or more or all of them should be dead at the time of his death, the share of such deceased brother or sister should go to and be equally divided among his or her children, share and share alike. At the time of the suit for the partition, testator's daughter, though married, was 50 years of age, and had never had any children. It was held that the remainder to testator's brothers and sisters was not a vested remainder, but a contingent one, and hence no partition could be had during the daughter's life. Ruddell v. Wren, 70 N. E. 751, 753, 208 Ill. 508.

A testator who died in March, 1901, by his will bequeathed his residuary estate in trust, the income to be paid to his wife during her life, with remainder to his children living at the time of her death, and the lawful issue of any deceased child or children; such issue taking the share only their parent would have taken if living. Held, that the remainder so created was not "vested," not being limited to "persons in esse and ascertained," but was contingent, being limited to persons who could not be ascertained until the death of the wife, and that such bequests were not subject to the legacy tax imposed by section 29 of the war revenue act of June 13, 1898, c. 448. 30 Stat. 464; the wife being still living at the time of the taking effect of the amendment of June 27, 1902, c. 1160, § 3, 32 Stat. 406, exempting from the tax "any contingent beneficial interest not absolutely vested in possession or enjoyment" prior to July 1, 1902. Land Title & Trust Co. v. McCoach, 129 Fed. 901, 904, 64 C. C. A. 333.

"A 'vested remainder' is an estate to take effect after another estate for years, life, or in tail, which is so limited that, if that particular estate were to expire or end in any way at the present time, some certain person who was in esse and answered the description of the remainderman during the continuance of the particular estate would thereupon become entitled to the immediate possession, irrespective of the concurrence of any collateral contingency." A remainder limited upon an estate tail is held to be vested, though it must be uncertain whether it will ever take place. Where a testator limits the interest of one son in the latter proportionate part of the realty to an estate for life, remainder to any surviving child of the life tenant, and in default thereof to such tenant's brothers and sisters, and all of them are living at testator's death, but the life tenant is childless, the brothers and sisters take a vested, and not a contingent, remainder, notwithstanding the liability to a defeat of their interests by subsequent issue born to the life tenant. Boatman v. Boatman, 65 N. E. 81, 83, 198 Ill. 414 (quoting and adopting 4 Kent, Comm. [13th Ed.] 228).

Not only at common law, but under the laws of Tennessee and Texas, under a will giving property to F., the wife of G., for her use as long as she remained the wife of G., and the children she might have by G., said property to go to the children of G. on the death of F. or her ceasing to be his wife, there was a "contingent remainder" as regard the children of F. by G. till a child was born to them, whereupon it immediately became a "vested remainder" in that child and all other children that might afterwards be born to them; said remainder opening and letting in each successive child as it was born, and the interest of any child dying before F. descending to the child's heirs. Greenlaw v. Dillon (Tex.) 108 S. W. 705, 709.

"It is the uncertainty of the right of enjoyment and not the uncertainty of its actual enjoyment which renders a remainder contingent. The present capacity of taking effect in possession, if the possession were to become vacant, distinguishes a 'vested' from a contingent remainder, and not the certainty that the possession will ever become vacant while the remainder continues." In re Kountz's Estate, 62 Atl. 1103, 1105, 213 Pa. 390, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 639, 5 Ann. Cas. 427 (citing and quoting definition from 4 Kent, Comm. § 203, note "a," in Doe, Lessee o' Poor, v. Considine, 73 U. S. [6 Wall.] 458, 476, 18 L. Ed. 869).

Where the preceding estate created by deed is limited, so as to determine on an event which must happen, and the remainder is so limited to a person in being, and ascertained, that the preceding estate may, by any means, determine before the expiration of the estate limited in remainder, the remainder is "vested"; but, where the preceding estate is limited, so as to determine only on an event which is uncertain and may never happen, or where the remainder is limited to a person not in being, or not ascertained, or when it is limited, so as to require the concurrence of some uncertain event, independent of the determination of the preceding estate and the duration of the estate limited in remainder, to give it a capacity of taking effect, the remainder is contingent. Hall v. Wright, 120 Pac. 429, 431, 17 Cal. App. 502.

If the gift is immediate, though its enjoyment be postponed, it is "vested"; but if it is future, and is dependent on some dubious circumstances through which it may be defeated, then it is contingent. And the rule is that the law leans towards the vesting of remainders. The uncertainty which characterizes a contingent, as distinguished from a "vested remainder," is uncertainty as to the person or the event, and not as to the time of enjoyment. If futurity is annexed to the substance of the gift, the vesting is suspended; but, if it appears to relate to time of payment only, the legacy vests instantaneously, and words directing division or distributing between two or more objects at a future time are equivalent to a direction to pay. Where, by the terms of a will, the wife received the "entire property * * * during her natural lifetime after first disposing of sufficient to pay all of" the testator's debts, and the second item provided that, at the death of the wife, "all the property devised or bequeathed to her as aforesaid, or so much thereof as may then be unexpended, I give and bequeath to my four sons [of whom plaintiff was one], to be divided equally among them and to their heirs and assigns forever," it was held that plaintiff took a vested remainder, so that it was subject to sale on execution against plaintiff. Jonas v. Welres, 111 N. W. 453, 454, 134 Iowa, 47.

To constitute a "vested remainder," there must be some known person in being who, by the instrument, is to take and enjoy the estate upon the expiration of the particular estate, and whose right to do so cannot be defeated by any contingency, while a "contingent remainder" is contingent if it depends upon the happening of a contingent event, which may not happen until the particular estate has terminated; the existence of a contingency, irrespective of the duration of the remainder, being the criterion. In re Washburn's Estate, 106 Pac. 415, 417, 11 Cal. App. 735.

The terms "vested estates" and "contingent estates," used in section 2037, Rev. St. 1898, have far different significations than the common-law terms "vested remainders" and "contingent remainders." A vested remainder at the common law is one where there is "some person in esse, known and ascertained, who by the will or deed creating the estate is to take and enjoy the same upon the expiration of the existing particular estate, and whose right to such remainder no contingency can defeat." A vested estate or remainder in the statutory sense is one where there is a person in esse, "who, should the particular estate now cease, would eo instanti et ipso facto have an immediate right to the possession," though whether he would ever take in fact might depend upon an uncertain event rendering the interest a contingent remainder, strictly so called, by the common-law rule. While a vested remainder by the rules of the common law is not subject to be divested at all, not so a vested estate in the statutory sense. That may be divested upon condition subsequent in whatever way or manner the creator thereof in creating the same may provide or authorize. While at common law an estate in remainder cannot be at the same time both vested and contingent, there is that seeming contradiction as to remainders under section 2037, Rev. St. 1898. A person may be so conditioned that he would immediately take in remainder should the precedent estate presently cease, yet may not be so entitled at any future time. The element of certainty, by force of the statute, gives to the remainder the character of a vested estate for the purpose of the subject covered by the statutes. The element of uncertainty gives to the remainder, by the same means, the character of a contingent estate for the same purpose. Whether an estate in remainder created by will is or is not vested in the common-law sense is controlled by the character of the estate actually created, as evidenced by the testamentary intention, not by any law, common or statute. When there is a devise to one, remainder over direct to others, nothing appearing in the will to the contrary, the legal presumption is that the testator intended to create vested estates in remainder in a common-law sense; that is, estates indefeasible, descendible, and alienable. When an estate is by will carved out of a fee, and the remainder is directed to be divided between the members of a class of persons after the expiration of such particular estate, the presumption of a testamentary intention that the estates in remainder shall vest upon the death of the testator is displaced by a presumption, nothing appearing in the will to the contrary, that the testator purposed to create contingent remainders in a common-law sense. In re Moran's Will, 96 N. W. 367, 369, 370, 118 Wis. 177.

"The distinction between a 'vested' and contingent remainder in a case like the present one is well defined. The former is one that is so limited to a person in being and ascertained that it is capable of taking effect in possession or enjoyment on a certain determination of the particular estate, without requiring the concurrence of any collateral contingency. The uncertainty as to the remainderman ever enjoying the estate which is limited to him by way of remainder will not render such remainder a contingent one, providing he has by such limitation a present, absolute right to have the estate the instant the prior estate shall determine; but the absence of such present absolute right renders the estate a contingent remainder." A will left a life estate in certain property to R., the remainder to her son A., or A.'s surviving lawful issue, if any, but, if A. died without lawful issue, then the remainder was to go to testator's three sons, C., B., and W., in equal shares, or to their lawful issue, respectively. R. survived B., who had survived A., but both A. and B. died without lawful issue. Held, that the remainder to A. did not vest because of the gift over, neither did the remainder to B. vest because of the gift over to his issue, in case R. survived him, and also because of its liability to be defeated by A. surviving R. Hence, B.'s interest being a contingent remainder, his will conveyed no interest in the property in question. Voorhees v. Singer, 68 Atl. 217, 218, 73 N. J. Eq. 532.

The chief difference between a "vested remainder" and one that is contingent is that the latter may be destroyed by determination of the particular estate or the happening of the contingency (and even this cannot be where, as here, the life estate is held by trustees), while a vested remainder would simply be accelerated; and, unless the contingency is one which affects the capacity to take, a "contingent remainder" or other contingent interest is transmissible, even though not, in the technical sense, vested, and hence it will pass, in case of death before the happening of the event upon which it is dependent, to the heirs or devisees of the remainderman so dying. In re Brooke's Estate, 63 Atl. 411, 412, 214 Pa. 46 (citing Gray, Perp. § 118; Bassett v. Hawk, 11 Atl. 802, 118 Pa. 94; Chess's Appeal, 87 Pa. 362, 30 Am. Rep. 361).

A remainder is "vested" when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the property on the determination of the intermediate or precedent estate, contingent when the person to whom, or the event on which, it is limited to take effect remains uncertain. That there may be a defeasance so far as the person in whom it is vested is concerned does not make the estate on that account a contingent one. A "vested remainder" may be aliened by any form known to the law which does not require a formal livery of seisin or passing of actual possession, with the same restrictions as are applicable to other estates. Real Property Law (Laws 1896, p. 564, c. 547) § 30, declares a future estate to be vested when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the property on the determination of the intermediate or precedent estate, and contingent while the person to whom or the event on which it is limited to take effect remains uncertain. Testator gave to his widow the use of the residue of his estate for life or until her marriage, on the happening of either of which events he gave such residue to his children equally; the children of any child, who at that time might be deceased, to take the share the parent would have taken. Held, that the will created a vested, and not a contingent, remainder in testator's children. Genunge v. Murphy, 112 N. Y. Supp. 310, 311, 59 Misc. Rep. 381 (quoting and adopting the definitions in 2 Washb. Real Prop. p. 553; Real Property Law [Laws 1896, p. 564, c. 547] § 30, and citing Reaves, Real Prop. 730, 731; Lawrence v. Bayard [N. Y.] 7 Paige, p. 70; Grout v. Townsend [N. Y.] 2 Denio, 736).

Vested and contingent remainders are distinguishable, in that in the first there is some person in esse, known and ascertained, who, by the will or deed creating the estate, is to take and enjoy the estate on expiration of the particular estate, and whose right to such remainder no contingency can defeat; while a contingent remainder depends upon the happening of a contingent event, whether the estate limited as a remainder shall ever take effect at all. A will, after providing for testator's widow during her life, directed that his property be placed in the hands of trustees, and that on the death of the widow the residue of the estate should be disposed of according to several clauses, specifying persons and institutions to whom payment should be made, and the respective amounts thereof. Held, that such clauses created contingent and not "vested" remainders. Giddings v. Gillingham, 81 Atl. 951, 953, 108 Me. 512.

A remainder is "vested" where there is a present capacity to convey an absolute title to the remainder, and, where the remainder is limited to a person not ascertained by the terms of the instrument, the remainder is contingent. Under a clause of conveyance in trust providing that, ten years after the youngest of the children had reached majority, the trustee should make a final settlement, with each of said children, paying over to each of them living, and to the heirs at law of such as may have died, their respective shares, whereupon the trust should cease, and the title to the real estate not disposed of should vest in fee simple in the children living and in the heirs of children who have died. The estate taken by the children living and the heirs of those deceased was a contingent remainder, and the legal title was in the trustee until the time for the termination of the trust. Buxton v. Kroeger, 117 S. W. 1147, 1151, 219 Mo. 224; Same v. Lauman, 117 S. W. 1162, 219 Mo. 276, 277; Same v. Dunn, 117 S. W. 1163, 219 Mo. 278.

A "contingent remainder" is one limited to take effect either to an uncertain person or on an uncertain event. It is limited by the instrument creating it either to a person not yet ascertained or not in being, or so as to depend on an event which may never happen. It is an estate which is not ready to come into possession at any moment when the prior estate may end, but, if the estate is at any time ready to come into possession provided the prior estate ends, then the estate is "vested," so that whenever the person who is to succeed to the estate in remainder is in being and is ascertained, and the event which by express limitation will terminate the precedent estate is certain to happen, the remainder is vested; the uncertainty which distinguishes the contingent from the vested remainder being not the uncertainty whether the remainderman will live to enjoy the estate, but whether he will ever have the right to such enjoyment. Carter v. Carter, 85 N. E. 292-294, 234 Ill. 507.

The use of the word "vested" in a finding that a party was the owner of an estate in remainder in a lot that was vested in children of a life tenant by virtue of a certain deed which was to one for life, remainder to the heirs of her body, and "will upon the death of said E. M. (the life tenant) take the interest and estate in fee in said lot 4 that would, under said deed * * * go to those of the above named children of Mrs. E. M. who shall survive her," was not a holding that the interest in remainder of such children was a vested one, so as to be inconsistent with the view that the remainder is contingent, implied from the language of another finding; the context making it apparent that the words "vested in" are not used in the comparative sense as distinguishing a vested from a contingent estate, but rather as the equivalent of "acquired by." Los Angeles County v. Winans, 109 Pac. 650, 653, 13 Cal. App. 257.

The second clause of a will provided: "I give, devise, and bequeath all the property of which I may die seized and possessed * * * to my beloved wife for her natural life, the remainder thereof to my sons hereinafter named in proportions, for the time and upon the conditions hereinafter expressed." The fourth clause provided that, upon the termination of the wife's life estate, "I give and devise unto my son M. all those certain lots. * * * If my son M. should precede in death his wife and leave him no lawful issue surviving, and should such death of my son M. occur before the property herein devised and bequeathed to him vests in him, then all the interests herein devised and bequeathed to said M. shall pass to and vest in" his wife absolutely. Other provisions showed that testator clearly understood the legal significance of words of present devise unqualified by other language. Civ. Code, § 694, provides that a future interest is vested when there is a person in being who would have a right to immediate possession upon the ceasing of the precedent interest. Section 695 provides that a future interest is contingent, while the person in whom or the event upon which it is limited to take effect remains uncertain; and section 1341 provides that devises and bequests are presumed to vest at testator's death. Held, that son M. took a "vested remainder" in the estate devised to him immediately upon testator's death. In re De Vries' Estate, 119 Pac. 109, 111, 17 Cal. App. 184.

VESTED RIGHT

Rights are "vested" when the right of enjoyment, present or prospective, has become the property of some particular person or persons as a present interest. Trustees of Presbytery of Jersey City v. Trustees of First Presbyterian Church of Weehawken, 78 Atl. 207, 210, 80 N. J. Law, 572.

When the phrase "a vested right" or "a vested interest" is used in other relations, it may with reasonable precision be held to mean some right or interest in property that has become fixed or established, and is no longer open to doubt or controversy. Graham v. Great Falls Water Power & Town-Site Co., 76 Pac. 808, 810, 30 Mont. 393 (citing Evans-Snyder-Buel Co. v. McFadden, 105 Fed. 293, 44 C. C. A. 494, 58 L. R. A. 900).

A right is not "vested" unless it is something more than such a mere expectation as may be based upon an anticipated continuation of the present general laws. Brooklyn Union Gas Co. v. City of New York, 100 N. Y. Supp. 570, 577, 50 Misc. Rep. 450 (citing Cooley, Const. Lim. [6th Ed.] 438).

A "vested right" protected by federal and state Constitutions is some right or interest in property which has become established and is no longer open to doubt or controversy. It does not include a claim to property which is contrary to justice and equity, nor a right to property purchased pending litigation concerning the title bought, so as to free it from the effect of subsequent curative legislation. Downs v. Blount, 170 Fed. 15, 20, 95 C. C. A. 289, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1076.

A mortgage lien constitutes a "vested property right," and, after it has attached, the Legislature has no power to create a lien superior to the vested interest or to provide that such vested lien shall be made inferior to the lien subsequently created. National Bank of Commerce v. Jones, 91 Pac. 191, 193, 18 Okl. 555, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 310, 11 Ann. Cas. 1041.

A member of a police force has no "vested right" in an act of the Legislature creating a police pension fund and granting a pension to those who have served for 20 years, but the Legislature may repeal the same. Friel v. McAdoo, 91 N. Y. Supp. 454, 456, 101 App. Div. 155.

A "vested right" may be considered as the power to do certain actions or to possess certain things lawfully. In its latter aspect it is substantially a right of property, and as such is protected by those provisions in the Constitution which apply to such rights. But a right to property is a perfect and exclusive right, and a right, therefore, to recover the amount of a judgment cannot be called a perfect or a vested right. Lohrstorfer v. Lohrstorfer, 104 N. W. 142, 146, 140 Mich. 551, 70 L. R. A. 621 (quoting and adopting definition in Henderson & N. R. R. Co. v. Dickerson [Ky.] 17 B. Mon. 173, 66 Am. Dec. 148).

A "vested right" is property, as tangible things are, when they spring from contract or the principles of the common law. There is a "vested right" in an accrued cause of action, in a defense to a cause of action, even in the statute of limitations, when the bar has attached, by which an action for a debt is barred. Lewis v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 69 Atl. 821, 823, 220 Pa. 317, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 279, 13 Ann. Cas. 1142 (quoting with approval from Suth. Stat. Const. § 480).

"A 'vested right,' which will entitle the holder to the independent judgment of the federal court upon the construction of a constitutional provision or the statute of a state, must be a right acquired under and by virtue of the Constitution or statute." Hence, where complainant's rights in a waterworks company were acquired under a municipal contract and not by virtue of a constitutional or statutory provision, complainant was not entitled to the independent judgment of the federal court on the construction of a constitutional provision relating to the power of the municipality to increase its indebtedness for the construction of waterworks. City of Sioux Falls v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 136 Fed. 721, 731, 69 C. C. A. 373.

"In its application, as a shield of protection, the term 'vested rights' is not used in any narrow or technical sense, or as importing a power of legal control merely, but rather as implying a vested interest which it is right and equitable that the government should recognize and protect, and of which the individual could not be deprived arbitrarily without injustice." The naked legal title to land is not a vested interest, in the sense of a property right, which the courts will protect from retrospective legislation intended to divest it. Diamond State Iron Co. v. Husbands, 68 Atl. 240, 246, 8 Del. Ch. 205 (quoting in part Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 454 and 470).

Acts 1870, p. 124, c. 89, provides that the city of B., and those citizens who have contributed or may contribute to improvements on land for the use of the state agricultural association, shall, in case of dissolution of the association, receive from the net proceeds of sale of its property such sums as the amount of money paid by the city or individual citizens may bear to the aggregate amount contributed by the state; the city and the individual citizens having "vested rights" in the city and individual contributors, together with the state, in the proceeds of the association's property in case of its dissolution. Held, that Acts 1890, p. 57, c. 73, attempting to postpone the rights under the act of 1870 of contributors, and to give priority in such proceeds to the payment of all debts owing by the association, is unconstitutional, as impairing "vested rights," and taking the property of the contributors and giving it to others. Acts 1886, p. 198, c. 128, appropriating $3,000 for the state agricultural association, and providing that, in case of dissolution of the association, the state shall be preferred to such amount, and Acts 1904, p. 246, c. 141, providing for such dissolution, and making the same provision for preference of such $3,000, are unconstitutional, as impairing the vested rights in such proceeds given by Acts 1870, p. 124, c. 89, to contributors for improvements for the association. Maryland Jockey Club of Baltimore City v. State, 67 Atl. 239, 241, 106 Md. 413.

Rights are "vested" when the right to enjoyment, present or prospective, has become the property of some particular person or persons as a present interest (quoting and adopting definition in Pearsall v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 16 Sup. Ct. 705, 161 U. S. 646-673, 40 L. Ed. 838). One who acquires title to tidelands from the state obtains no vested right to possible future accretion thereto which cannot be cut off by subsequent legislation. Western Pac. Ry. Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., 151 Fed. 376, 399, 80 C. C. A. 606.

A "license" to sell intoxicating liquor is a mere permit, and not a "vested" property or contract right, and the state may, in the exercise of its police power, revoke it, though it may be sold or mortgaged, and is subject to execution. Baldacchi v. Goodlet (Tex.) 145 S. W. 325, 327.

VESTIGE OF WORK

Civ. Code, art. 3502, providing that a man may retain possession of an estate sufficient to prescribe, so long as there remains any "vestige of the work" erected by him, has reference to such vestige as challenges attention, and remnants of pillars, flush with the ground and barely noticeable, are insufficient. John T. Moore Planting Co. v. Morgan's Louisiana & T. R. & S. S. Co., 53 South. 22, 41, 126 La. 840.

VETERAN

A janitor of a police station, whose employment was not included in the list of positions to be filled by the board of civil service commissioners until after his discharge, and who had not before his discharge been registered in the office of the board as a veteran or been certified by it for appointment, was not a "veteran holding an employment or office in the public service," within St. 1896, p. 535, c. 517, § 5, embodied in Rev. Laws, c. 19, § 23, providing that no "veteran holding an office or employment in the public service" shall be removed until after a full hearing. Sims v. O'Meara, 79 N. E. 824, 825, 193 Mass. 547.

VETO

Under Rev. Laws, c. 26, § 9, requiring the mayor of a city, if he disapproves of an order of the city council, to return it with his objections in writing, a "veto" by a mayor, simply stating that he returns the order without his approval, and containing no statement of objections, is of no effect. Casey v. Dadman, 77 N. E. 717, 191 Mass. 370.

VEXATION

The words "vexation" and "delay" in Rev. St. 1909, § 2040, requiring appellant to file an affidavit stating that the appeal is not made for vexation or delay, are not synonymous, but the word "vexation" expresses a peculiar meaning not expressed by any other word in the statute, and an affidavit must contain the word "vexation" as well as the word "delay." Cassidy v. City of St. Joseph, 152 S. W. 306, 308, 247 Mo. 197.

VEXATIOUS

"Vexatious," within Rev. St. 1909, § 7068, providing a penalty for an insurance company's vexatious refusal to pay a loss, means without reasonable cause. Rogers v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford, 139 S. W. 265, 268, 157 Mo. App. 671.

VIBRATE

Where the employment of explosives in a stone quarry caused plastering to fall from the ceilings of a contiguous owner's house, bricks to work loose and fall from the cornice, and the mortar to crumble from between the bricks in the walls, the word "vibrate," which means to swing or oscillate with a quick motion, in a decree enjoining the operation of the quarry so as to jar the owner's buildings, or to cause the same to shake and vibrate, awarded to the owner the measure of relief only to which he was entitled, for, if the quarry could not be operated without causing the house to thus vibrate, then its entire operation should be enjoined. Blackford v. Heman Const. Co., 112 S. W. 287, 291, 132 Mo. App. 157.

VIBRATION

See Hoop-Like Vibration.

VICE

See Inherent Vice.

Webster defines "vice" as a defect; a fault; an imperfection. Guinn v. Pecos & N. T. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 142 S. W. 63, 64.

Under Civ. Code, art. 2804, declaring that partnerships formed for any purpose forbidden by good morals are void, a partnership formed to conduct gambling, by playing draw and stud poker, is void as contrary to public policy, as evidenced by Const. art. 188, declaring that gambling is a vice, and Civ. Code arts. 1893, 1895, 2983, and Code Prac. art. 19, declaring that an obligation with an unlawful cause can have no effect, etc.; the word "vice" meaning a moral fault or failure, especially immoral conduct or habits. Martin v. Seabaugh, 54 South. 935, 936, 128 La. 442.

VICE PRINCIPAL

See, also, Fellow Servant; Superintendent.

A "vice principal" is the representative of the master, for whose acts and negligence the master is responsible. Southern Ry. Co. v. Cheaves, 36 South. 691, 697, 84 Miss. 565.

A "vice principal" is one intrusted by the master with power to superintend, direct, or control workmen. Burkard v. A. Leschen & Sons Rope Co., 117 S. W. 35, 41, 217 Mo. 466.

An employé, whose duty is to direct and control workmen under him, is a "vice principal" as to the work intrusted to him. Smith v. American Car & Foundry Co., 99 S. W. 790, 792, 122 Mo. App. 610.

Where a master clothes an employé with authority to control another servant, the superior servant is a "vice principal" to the servant under his control. Benak v. Paxton & Vierling Iron Works, 124 N. W. 461, 462, 85 Neb. 836.

The term "vice principal" is generally used to denote an employé to whom the employer has intrusted the performance of a duty which the law requires the employer himself to assume. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Foland, 91 N. E. 594, 596, 174 Ind. 411.

At common law, where the master delegates to an employé the performance of any duty devolving upon him, such employé stands in his place and becomes a "vice principal," and the master is liable for his negligence. Stearns & Culver Lumber Co. v. Fowler, 50 South. 680, 683, 58 Fla. 362.

The term "vice principal," as used in the fellow-servant law, has been defined as including any servant who represents the master in the discharge of those personal or absolute duties which every master owes to his servants; such duties being often referred to as the nonassignable duties of a master. While the words "superintendent," "foreman," "overseer," and the like do not necessarily import that the employé bearing such title was the vice principal of the master, this fact, in connection with the character of the work and the character of the order given in reference to the operation of dangerous machinery, may be sufficient to raise a question for the jury as to whether such servant was, on the occasion in question, the vice principal of the master, or only a fellow servant of the plaintiff. Mere supervision, and nothing more, by one of a number of servants, over the work in which they are engaged, will not necessarily raise the employé from the position of a fellow servant to that of a vice principal; but supervision, coupled with the discharge of other duties in connection therewith, may have this effect. Moore v. Dublin Cotton Mills, 56 S. E. 839, 842, 127 Ga. 609, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772 (citing Bloyd v. Railway Co., 22 S. W. 1089, 58 Ark. 66, 41 Am. St. Rep. 85).

A "vice principal" must have entire charge of the business, or one to whom a master delegates a duty of his own, which is an absolute obligation, from which nothing but performance can relieve him. Staebler v. Warren-Ehret Co., 72 Atl. 554, 555, 223 Pa. 129.

A person is not a "vice principal," unless he has entire charge of the business, or a distinct branch thereof, having authority to superintend the work and exercising control of such business, or unless the employer has delegated to him a duty of his own, which is an absolute obligation, from which nothing but performance can relieve him. Vant v. Roelofs, 66 Atl. 749, 750, 217 Pa. 535.

A servant who has authority to direct and supervise the work of those under him and to hire and discharge such subordinate servants is a "vice principal," whose negligence is that of the master. Hugo, Schmeltzer & Co. v. Palz, 141 S. W. 518, 521, 104 Tex. 563.

One in charge of his employer's business as general manager is a "vice principal." Hamann v. Milwaukee Bridge Co., 106 N. W. 1081, 1084, 127 Wis. 550, 7 Ann. Cas. 458.

An agent who is employed to exercise the master's duty of exercising care for the safety of servants is a "vice principal." Burns v. Delaware & A. Telegraph & Telephone Co., 59 Atl. 220, 223, 70 N. J. Law, 745, 67 L. R. A. 956.

The boss of a repair train is not a "vice principal." Peterson v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co., 66 Atl. 660, 217 Pa. 401.

A foreman or superintendent is not necessarily a "vice principal." Schillinger Bros. Co. v. Smith, 80 N. E. 65, 67, 225 Ill. 74.

A "vice principal" is a servant who represents the master in the discharge of those primary and personal duties which every master owes to his servant, and which the master cannot delegate so as to relieve himself from responsibility for their due and proper performance; such duties include the exercise of reasonable care to furnish reasonably safe machinery and appliances, to furnish and maintain a reasonably safe place to work, and to make reasonable and proper inspection of such machinery and appliances. Schillinger Bros. Co. v. Smith, 80 N. E. 65, 67, 225 Ill. 74.

A foreman, under whom workmen are employed, is a "fellow servant" with the workmen, when engaged in accomplishing with them the common task or object, but, when discharging or assuming to discharge the duties toward the workmen which the law imposes on the principal, is a "vice principal." Christ v. Wichita Gas, Electric Light & Power Co., 83 Pac. 199, 201, 72 Kan. 135.

A foreman superintending blasting operations for the master is a "vice principal." Knight v. Donnelley, 110 S. W. 687, 690, 131 Mo. App. 152.

A servant designated by a vice principal to perform a particular service which had been delegated to him by his master in turn becomes a "vice principal." Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Austin, 127 Ill. App. 281, 287.

A servant placed in entire charge of a distinct branch of the master's business, not merely to superintend it, but to control it, with no one else to exercise any discretion or oversight, is a "vice principal" of the master. Groves v. James McNeil & Bro. Co., 75 Atl. 600, 601, 226 Pa. 345.

In instructing the jury in an action for negligence, it is improper to refer to an independent contractor as a "vice principal"; this term being applicable only in actions by a servant against a master. Gordon v. Roberts, 123 Pac. 288, 290, 162 Cal. 506.

A "vice principal" is one to whom the master delegates a duty of his own which is a direct, personal, and absolute obligation, from which nothing but performance can relieve him. The obligation of a master to furnish to his servant a reasonably safe place in which to work is a direct, personal, and absolute obligation, and if such a duty is delegated to an agent, such agent is a vice principal. Clegg v. Seaboard Steel Casting Co., 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 63, 69.

In sending an employé out to work under the direction of a foreman, the employer commits to the foreman as "vice principal" the performance of the duty of exercising reasonable care for the protection of the employé. Mack v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 101 S. W. 142, 144, 123 Mo. App. 531.

An employé who has the right to give orders to other employés and to enforce obedience thereto, and who has the right to report and to procure the discharge of the other employés who understand the relation and their duty to obey, is a "vice principal," and the employer is liable for his negligence in giving orders to the other employés. Hipp v. Champlon Fibre Co., 68 S. E. 215, 216, 152 N. C. 745.

One is a "vice principal" who is employed to hire, direct, and discharge employés, or to whom the employer has delegated a duty owing to workmen, though otherwise he may be a fellow servant; it being the authority given in a particular matter, and not the grade of service, which determines the issue of vice principal or fellow servant. Lantry-Sharpe Contracting Co. v. McCracken (Tex.) 134 S. W. 363, 364.

An employé intrusted with the performance of the employer's personal duties is, in regard thereto, a vice principal, and the employer is liable for injuries to a coemployé resulting from his negligence. Within this rule, a car dispatcher having not only control of the motormen and conductors of an interurban electric railway, but also control of the cars and their operation, is a "vice principal" and not a fellow servant. Edge v. Southwest Missouri Electric R. Co., 104 S. W. 90, 97, 206 Mo. 471.

A "vice principal," as the term is used in the law of fellow servants, is a servant who represents the master in the discharge of those personal or absolute duties which every master owes his servant, as distinguished from fellow servants, who may be said to be persons engaged in a common employment in the service of the same master. Hollweg v. Bell Telephone Co., 93 S. W. 262, 264, 195 Mo. 149.

Where the giving of a warning is not incidental to the work on which the servant required to give the warning is engaged, he is the representative of the master, and not a fellow servant; but, where the duty of giving the signal is incidental to his general employment, his failure to perform it is not imputable to the master. The duty of blowing the whistle or ringing the bell resting on the engineer or hostler in charge of an engine while being run on the ash pit track in a railroad yard is an incident of the operation of the engine, and a failure to perform the duty does not impose responsibility on the master for injuries received by an employé engaged in the common work. Koneski v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 74 Atl. 516, 77 N. J. Law, 645, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 644.

Servants to whom a master delegates the duty to use reasonable care to furnish other servants with a safe place to work, and to see that rules and regulations regarding care and condition of appliances are complied with, are "vice principals," and not "fellow servants." Girard v. Grosvenordale Co., 73 Atl. 747, 750, 82 Conn. 271.

An employé is a "vice principal," whatever his comparative rank, or his authority to command or employ or discharge employés, where he represents the master in the performance of the nondelegable duty to provide suitable appliances for the performance of a coemployé of the work assigned to him. Frizzell v. Sullivan, 83 Atl. 651, 652, 117 Md. 388 (quoting 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7314).

The duty of a master to provide a reasonably safe place in which to work is a primary duty, and, when the master delegates it to a servant, the latter represents the master, who is responsible for the manner in which the duty is discharged, and knowledge possessed by such servant is the knowledge of the master, and any negligence of such servant while discharging such duty is the negligence of the master. Shives v. Eno Cotton Mills, 66 S. E. 141, 143, 151 N. C. 290.

The common-law doctrine of fellow servant, as construed by the United States Supreme Court, as well as by the Supreme Court of this state, makes an employé, charged with the duty of keeping a safe place to work, a "vice principal" of the master, regardless of the rank of the servant to whom the duty is intrusted, and, under that construction, a servant whose duty it is to keep a repair track reasonably safe for repairers at work thereon is a vice principal of the master, and his negligence is the negligence of the master. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Smith, 108 S. W. 988, 989, 995, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 10.

It is not the law in the state of Wyoming that "persons employed in the same general work" of the master are "fellow servants," and on principle, and by the weight of authority, persons engaged in the service of the master, who are intrusted by him with the management or direction of his general work, or with some particular part thereof, are not fellow servants with the subordinate employés, but are "vice principals." Johnson v. Union Pac. Coal Co., 76 Pac. 1089, 1097, 28 Utah, 146, 67 L. R. A. 506.

The order of a foreman to an experienced servant under his control to perform an act merely incidental to the servant's employment, and not known to the foreman to be attended with a hidden danger, though accompanied with an assurance of safety, is the direction of a superior servant, and not of a "vice principal." Reid v. Northwestern Fuel Co., 133 N. W. 161, 162, 116 Minn. 96.

Where employés are engaged in assisting one another in a common task, the fact that one takes the lead in directing the work because of age, experience, or common consent does not change the relation of fellow servants and make the one so directing a "vice principal." Frengen v. Stone & Webster Engineering Corp., 119 Pac. 193, 195, 66 Wash. 204.

The mere assumption of the duties of general direction and superintendence by a fellow servant, in the absence of authority express or implied, does not constitute the servant so assuming to act "a vice principal." Safety Insulated Wire & Cable Co. v. Matthews, 151 Fed. 761, 764, 81 C. C. A. 385.

"Vice principal" is defined as one who performs personal duties of the master, which cannot be delegated, such as the duty to provide reasonably safe machinery and appliances and a reasonably safe place in which to work, to provide for inspection and repair of premises and appliances, and to inform immature, ignorant, or unskilled servants of the dangers of the situation. Baler v. Selke, 71 N. E. 1074, 1076, 211 Ill. 512, 103 Am. St. Rep. 208 (citing Mobile & O. Ry. Co. v. Godfrey, 39 N. E. 590, 155 Ill. 78).

A "vice principal" is the representative of the master, and for his acts and negligence the master is responsible. An employé of a corporation may become a vice principal in two ways: First, he may be intrusted with the entire management and supervision of all the business of the corporation, or with the entire management and supervision of a distinct and separate department of its business, in which case he may be termed a general vice principal because in all of his acts relative to the business of the corporation he stands in the place of the master; second, any employé may be a special vice principal, without regard to rank, when performing one of the positive personal duties of the master. An employé, who, in the absence of the manager, is directed to look after the other employés and direct matters generally the same as any foreman would be required to do, is not a vice principal. Ruemmel-Braun Co. v. Cahill, 79 Pac. 260, 261, 14 Okl. 422 (quoting and adopting the definition in City of Minneapolis v. Lundin, 58 Fed. 525, 7 C. C. A. 344).

"If the employé or servant is clothed with special power and authority in the conduct of the master's business, in and about which is involved the absolute duty of the master to other servants with respect to the obligation to provide them with safe instrumentalities and a safe place in which to work, he is, with respect to such other employés, a 'vice principal,' when engaged in the performance of the duties so involving the absolute obligations of the master." Hjelm v. Western Granite Contracting Co., 102 N. W. 384, 385, 94 Minn. 169 (quoting and adopting definition in Perras v. A. Booth & Co., 84 N. W. 739, 85 N. W. 179, 82 Minn. 191).

A "vice principal" for whose negligence an employer will be liable to other employes must be one in whom the employer has placed the entire charge of the business, or of a distinct branch of it, giving him not mere authority to superintend certain work of certain workmen, but control of the business, and exercising no discretion or oversight of his own; or one to whom he delegates a duty of his own which is a direct personal and absolute obligation, from which nothing but performance can relieve him. Any person who directs the places where the employes shall work, whether he be called the superintendent, foreman, or agent, will become in that respect and as to the performance of that obligation of the master, a vice principal. Mapes v. Pittsburg Provision & Packing Co., 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 453, 458.

Under the modern rule of the federal courts the theory of "vice principal" as determining the liability of a master to a servant for the negligence of another employe has been largely discarded, and the distinction between negligence which is to be imputed to the master and that which is to be considered as merely and solely the negligence of a fellow servant turns rather on the character of the act than on the relation of the employes to each other. Peters et al. v. George, 154 Fed. 634, 639, 83 C. C. A. 408 (citing Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 5 Sup. Ct. 184, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. Ed. 787; Baltimore & O. R. R. Co. v. Baugh, 13 Sup. Ct. 914, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. Ed. 772).

Where the place where an employe was mining ore was not reasonably safe, and he was ignorant of the fact, and could not by ordinary care have discovered the danger, it was the duty of the employer to inform him of it, and, in the absence of an official of higher grade, this duty devolved on the foreman, under whom he was working, as "vice principal." Low Moor Iron Co. v. La Blanca's Adm'r, 55 S. E. 532, 534, 106 Va. 83, 9 Ann. Cas. 1177.

Employes charged with the duty of keeping a place to work and machinery in a safe condition, and of inspecting the same, are "vice principals" of the employer, regardless of their rank. Neither a roundhouse inspector charged with the duty of inspecting the pilot of an engine, nor a section foreman and his men, required to keep the track in safe condition, are "fellow servants" of a brakeman. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Wise, 106 S. W. 465, 468; Id., 109 S. W. 112, 101 Tex. 459.

The delegation to a coemploye of the duty to furnish safe and suitable machinery and to keep the same in repair will not, under the doctrine of coservice, defeat an action for negligence by an employe, where the delinquent was discharging one of the personal duties of the employer. Where the employer is a corporation, the performance of such delegated duty by the subagent or employe is the act of the corporation, and it is responsible for its faithful and prudent performance to the same extent as if the service was performed by the highest officer of the corporation. Kane v. Babcock & Wilcox Co., 67 Atl. 1014, 1016, 75 N. J. Law, 698 (citing Steamship Co. v. Ingebregsten, 31 Atl. 619, 57 N. J. Law, 400; Curley v. Hoff, 42 Atl. 731, 62 N. J. Law, 758, 763; Burns v. Delaware & Atl. Telegraph & Telephone Co., 59 Atl. 220, 592, 70 N. J. Law, 745, 754, 67 L. R. A. 956).

The foreman of a crew building a trestle for a logging railway is not such a fellow servant of an ordinary workman thereon as to preclude recovery for injuries resulting from the foreman's negligence, since the foreman is a "vice principal" of the master. Cook v. Chehalis River Lumber Co., 94 Pac. 189, 191, 48 Wash. 619.

A distinct and independent employe to whom is delegated the duty to disconnect and make safe electric wires on which others must work is ordinarily a "vice principal," and not a fellow servant with the linemen and other like workmen. Massy v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co., 126 N. W. 544, 546, 143 Wis. 220, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 814, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1090.

Where a foreman had power to and did direct the progress of the work, and ordered another servant to do a particular thing by which he was hurt, it does not make the foreman a "vice principal." Pasco v. Minneapolis Steel & Machinery Co., 117 N. W. 479, 480, 105 Minn. 132, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 153.

Plaintiff's foreman, who had complete control of the digging of a pit in which plaintiff was working when injured by the sides falling in, and of the laborers working therein, acted as a "vice principal" in ordering plaintiff to work in the pit. Standard Forgings Co. v. Saffel, 96 N. E. 321, 325, 176 Ind. 417.

Where the foreman of a powder gang in a rock quarry directed plaintiff to strike the drill while it was being held by such foreman in a hole, without removing the blast, with reference to the duty to warn plaintiff of the dangers attending the work he was called to perform, the foreman was a "vice principal," and not plaintiff's fellow servant. Burrows v. Ozark White Lime Co., 101 S. W. 744, 82 Ark. 343.

One having the general control and supervision of railroad repair work and giving general directions respecting the movements of work trains is a "vice principal," and not a fellow servant, of the laborers employed to do repair work. Jachetta v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co., 105 Pac. 100, 104, 36 Utah, 470.

The duty of an engineer in a sawmill to warn employes by sounding the whistle before starting the machinery in motion was that of a "vice principal" and not that of a fellow servant, and the master is liable for failure to perform the duty. Comrade v. Atlas Lumber & Shingle Co., 87 Pac. 517, 519, 44 Wash. 470 (citing McDonough v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 46 Pac. 334, 15 Wash. 244; O'Brien v. Page Lumber Co., 82 Pac. 114, 39 Wash. 537; Dossett v. St. Paul & Tacoma Lumber Co., 82 Pac. 273, 40 Wash. 276).

Plaintiff's intestate was employed to shovel clay in a pit into cars. The pit was about 20 feet deep, and the clay was taken from the side of the pit and loosened by blasting, so that it could be shoveled into the cars. Held, that the servant, whose duty it was to fire the blast, in giving timely warning of the firing was performing a masterial duty. Streicher v. Davenport Brick & Tile Co. (Iowa) 124 N. W. 327, 329.

The master's duty to warn his servant of dangers in the place of employment, of which the master has knowledge, and which are unknown to the servant, is a personal duty, for the discharge of which the servant has a right to look to the master; and if the master delegates another to perform it, the other stands in the master's place, and the master becomes liable for his acts of negligence. A foreman of a crew in which a servant is working is but a "vice principal" in respect to informing the servant of dangers attendant on the place where the foreman directs the servant to work. Hume v. Ft. Halifax Power Co., 75 Atl. 300, 302, 106 Me. 78, 138 Am. St. Rep. 332.

The duty of a head sawyer to properly handle the lever controlling the carriage on which persons acting as setters rode was that of a "vice principal," for the neglect of whom the master is liable. Eldner v. Three Lakes Lumber Co., 88 Pac. 326, 327, 45 Wash. 323 (citing O'Brien v. Page Lumber Co., 82 Pac. 114, 39 Wash. 537; Dossett v. St. Paul & Tacoma Lumber Co., 82 Pac. 273, 40 Wash. 276).

A machinist, employed by the master to repair an elevator cable, was the representative of the master as to his duty to use reasonable care to provide the elevator operator with a reasonably safe place in which to work and reasonably safe appliances. Haynie v. Hammond Packing Co., 103 S. W. 581, 582, 126 Mo. App. 88.

To constitute the foreman of a gang of laborers a "vice principal," for whose negligence the master will be liable for personal injuries to an employe subject to his control, the master must confer on him the absolute management, exercising no discretion as to the conduct of his business except in providing safe tools, a safe place to work, safe materials to work on, competent fellow servants and, where necessary, proper rules and regulations for conducting the same. E. Van Winkle Gin & Mach. Co. v. Brooks, 116 Pac. 908, 909, 29 Okl. 351.

One directing and superintending the stringing of wires for a telegraph company is the representative of the company, and his knowledge is the knowledge of the company. Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Likes, 80 N. E. 136, 141, 225 Ill. 249.

A common laborer who spliced the horses for a scaffold on which the employes worked was a "vice principal," as he stood in the place of the master in the performance of a personal and absolute duty toward the employes working thereon, for the performance of which the master was responsible regardless of the rank and position of such laborer. Schillinger Bros. Co. v. Smith, 80 N. E. 63, 67, 225 Ill. 74.

Where plaintiff, an ironworker, was injured by the negligence of defendant's foreman in allowing "wash plates" to be used in the construction of a boat, to be so negligently on the deck of such boat that they fell into the hull, where plaintiff was working and struck him, the foreman was engaged in a delegable duty, and was a fellow servant of plaintiff, and not a "vice principal," for whose negligence defendant was liable. Amoe v. Great Lakes Engineering Works, 114 N. W. 1010, 1011, 151 Mich. 212.

Where the duty of inspecting a mine for gas is delegated to a certain servant while performing it, he is as to his coworkers a "vice principal," irrespective of his ordinary duties. Western Coal & Mining Co. v. Buchanan, 102 S. W. 694, 695, 82 Ark. 499.

One who had general supervision of operations in the part of the coal mine where plaintiff worked, and gave personal directions on one shift and had a foreman on the other, and who had hired plaintiff and put him to work in the room, where he was injured, was his "vice principal." Hill v. Nelson Coal Co., 104 Pac. 876, 880, 40 Mont. 1.

A mine boss discharging the duty of the employer in furnishing to an employe, engaged in mining ore as a common laborer, a reasonably safe place in which to work is a "vice principal," and not a fellow servant, of the employe. Low Moor Iron Co. v. La Blanca's Adm'r, 55 S. E. 532, 534, 106 Va. 83, 9 Ann. Cas. 1177.

A mining boss, employed to inspect the safety of the mine, as required by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7479, in the performance of his duty to see that the mine is safe, is the "vice principal," and not the fellow servant of a miner injured by the negligence of the boss. Antioch Coal Co. v. Rocky, 82 N. E. 76, 78, 169 Ind. 247.

In an action for injuries while working in defendant's mine by the use of an unsafe fuse furnished by its shift boss, held, that in so furnishing the fuse the shift boss acted as a "vice principal" for defendant, which was liable for his negligence, which was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury. Laitinen v. Shenango Furnace Co., 114 N. W. 264, 265, 103 Minn. 88.

Under Sand. & H. Dig. § 6248, providing that persons engaged in the operation of a railroad, who are intrusted with the duty and authority of superintendence of other persons in the railroad service, are "vice principals" of the railroad and not "fellow servants" with those superintended by them, a train dispatcher, who governs the movement of trains and originates their running orders, and a conductor, under whose direction a train is actually run, are not "fellow servants" with a fireman on the train. Choctaw, O. & G. Ry. Co. v. Doughty, 91 S. W. 768, 769, 77 Ark. 1.

Arkansas St. § 6658, provides that all persons engaged in the service of any railroad corporation, foreign or domestic, doing business in said state, who are intrusted by such corporation with the authority of superintendence, control, or command of other persons in the employ of such corporation, or with authority to direct any other employé in performance of any duty, are "vice principals" of such corporation and not fellow servants of such employé. The members of a train crew who set cars on a spur track are "fellow servants" of the brakeman on another train injured while his car is passing the cars on the spur track because the cars on the spur track are left too close to the main track. Ham v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 117 S. W. 108, 109, 136 Mo. App. 17.

As to what makes a "vice principal," the generally received doctrine is as stated in Whart. Neg. § 229: "When the employer leaves everything in the hands of the middleman, reserving to himself no discretion, then a middleman's negligence is the employer's negligence, for which the latter is liable." One who contracts with a mining company to break down rock and ore for a certain distance to disclose the vein, at a stipulated price per foot, the company to furnish steam drill and keep the drift clear of rock, as the contractor broke it down, is to be regarded as a contractor with, and not a servant of, the company. He is not a fellow servant with the superintendent of the company, under whose direction his work is performed. Mayhew v. Sullivan Mining Co., 76 Me. 100, 109.

Where a general manager of a department is appointed in obedience to a statute, making such appointment compulsory and making such manager expressly responsible and independent of his employer's control, such employer is not liable for anything more than due care in selecting him. He is not a "vice principal," because he is not really the agent of the principal. Sale Creek Coal & Coke Co. v. Priddy, 96 S. W. 610, 612, 117 Tenn. 168, 10 Ann. Cas. 745 (quoting from and approving 1 Shear. & R. Neg. § 231).

One may become a "vice principal" only either when he is performing or charged with one of the positive duties of a master belonging to that class which the master cannot delegate to a subordinate, so as to relieve himself from liability for the negligent acts of such subordinate, or where he is placed in the absolute control and management of an entire business or of a distinct and separate department of a business. Mollhoff v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 82 Pac. 733, 734, 15 Okl. 540.

Where a servant in charge of a straw chopper, superintending the work, puts another servant to work thereon, such superintending servant is not a fellow servant of the other, but a "vice principal" of the master as to the duty of giving instructions. Wyman v. Berry, 75 Atl. 123, 125, 106 Me. 43, 20 Ann. Cas. 439.

Where an oil company established a boiler repair shop and intrusted its sole charge to a superintendent, who hired and discharged workmen and gave orders in relation to the work, the superintendent was a "vice principal," not a fellow servant of the workmen in the repair shop. Green v. Washington Oil Co., 64 Atl. 877, 878, 216 Pa. 35.

Where a foreman gave directions for the drilling of certain holes for blasting, but left to a workman the handling of the battery and the firing of the shots, and without giving notice, and in violation of the usages of the business, the workman fired a blast, and another workman was injured, the workman firing the blast was not a "vice principal" within Act June 10, 1907 (P. L. 523), for whose negligence the master would be liable. Coleman v. Keenan, 72 Atl. 267, 268, 223 Pa. 29.

A shift boss and powderman, who had charge of blasting and drilling in connection with railroad construction work, and who used dynamite which required skill and great care, were not the "fellow servants" of a common laborer engaged in shoveling earth into cars in the cut which was being constructed, and who had no means of knowing what they were doing, and no means of guarding against their acts, but were "vice principals," and were bound to notify laborers in places made dangerous by their work. Ongaro v. Twohy, 94 Pac. 916, 917, 49 Wash. 93.

It being defendant's duty to see that its cars were properly inspected for the safety of its employees, if it delegated this duty to one of its employes, such employe in making the inspection would be a "vice principal," and not a fellow servant. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Blachley, 109 S. W. 995, 999, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 141.

Where an employer places a foreman in charge of the construction of a building, with authority to control and direct the workmen, who are instructed to obey his orders, and a workman receives injury while obeying the foreman's order, the foreman's negligence is the employer's. McCracken v. Lantry-Sharpe Contracting Co., 101 S. W. 520, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 485.

Where defendant directed its superintendent to obtain and set up a pile driver for use on the succeeding day, the negligence of the superintendent in failing to properly stay the pile driver, which resulted in an injury to a servant while working on the same, was the negligence of a "vice principal," and not of a fellow servant. Wilder v. Great Western Cereal Co., 109 N. W. 789, 791, 134 Iowa, 451.

One through whom the proprietor of a livery stable conducts it, and who is the manager and superintendent thereof, and employs help, is the "vice principal" of the master, for whose negligence in failing to instruct a common laborer how to start an engine, great danger being attendant thereon unless it was started properly, the master is liable. Tivnan v. Keahon, 101 N. Y. Supp. 1076, 1077, 117 App. Div. 50.

Where defendant's superintendent in charge of the raising of beams in defendant's mill directed plaintiff to move the end of a beam supported by a defective chain from where the beam had caught, and plaintiff was injured by the fall of the beam, caused by the breaking of the chain, the superintendent was plaintiff's "vice principal," and not his fellow servant, under the rule that, so far as the superintendent represents the employer in the discharge of duties resting on him with reference to the safety of the employe, his negligence is not that of a fellow servant but of the employer. McGuire v. Waterloo & Cedar Falls Union Mill Co., 113 N. W. 850, 851, 137 Iowa, 447.

Plaintiff was assistant engineer in charge of a stationary engine. He worked nights, and reported to the chief engineer for orders, and when the plant was not running acted as night watchman, and had instructions to report the necessity of repairs to the chief engineer, who was to have them made. He occasionally made simple repairs himself. The engine became defective, and plaintiff reported the fact to the chief engineer, who neglected to make the repairs, and plaintiff was injured. Held, that the chief engineer was a "vice principal" and not a fellow servant of plaintiff, and that the latter was entitled to recover for the injuries received. Peterson v. G. W. Van Dusen & Co., 111 N. W. 839, 840, 101 Minn. 50.

Where the general foreman in charge of the excavating for the foundation of a building sent a blasting crew to another part of the foundation and directed a certain workman to clear the ice and snow out of a hole which had been drilled in the rock by other workmen, and this workman was injured by dynamite left there exploding, the foreman was a "vice principal" charged with the duty to exercise proper care to provide a reasonably safe place for the employes to work. Carlson v. James Forrestal Co., 112 N. W. 626, 101 Minn. 446.

Plaintiff, a head stone mason in charge of a stone gang, was injured by the fall of a stone by the breaking of a defective derrick chain. When chains needed repairs, or new ones were required, they were obtained from the blacksmith, frequently under plaintiff's direction, and at other times on motion of members of the crew. Plaintiff, on the day before the accident, in the absence of the general foreman, complained to H., in charge of ordinary supplies, of the defective character of the chain, and was told to go on with the work, and that H. would see that it was fixed. H. had no authority as to tools and appliances used. Both H. and plaintiff had authority to employ men. Held, that H. was not the "vice principal," and that his promise to repair did not excuse plaintiff on assuming the risk of using the chain. Wolk v. Smith, 105 Pac. 138, 139, 56 Wash. 33.

Where defendant employer intrusted a paper-cutting machine and its care and repair into the hands of a foreman, who, knowing of the defective condition of the machine, directed plaintiff, who was ignorant of such condition, to operate it, the foreman was the representative and agent of defendant, and not a fellow workman of plaintiff. Brunger v. Pioneer Roll Paper Co., 92 Pac. 1043, 1045, 6 Cal. App. 691.

A master mechanic of a steel works is a "vice principal" and not a fellow servant of other employes of the works, where it appears that he has entire charge of the repairs, employs and discharges the repairmen, and has the authority to determine, without being required to consult any higher officer, when and what repairs are necessary, and to select his own means for executing his plans. Clegg v. Seaboard Steel Casting Co., 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 63, 68.

Though, in a servant's action for injuries in a repair job, it is a question for the jury whether E. was a fellow servant or a "vice principal," proof that defendant's master mechanic ordered plaintiff to work under E., defendant's millwright, and that on all repair jobs within his jurisdiction E. had exercised superintendence and control over the men working with him, is sufficient, in the absence of countervailing evidence, to justify the inference that E. was vested by defendant with the power of superintending control over plaintiff, so as to constitute him a vice principal. Gale v. Helmbacher Forge & Rolling Mills Co., 140 S. W. 77, 79, 159 Mo. App. 639.

Plaintiff and D. were employed by defendant in dismantling heavy machinery in the World's Fair buildings. D. was foreman under a superintendent who was under a manager there. The day before the accident, a heavy wooden frame, 25 feet high, had been erected and temporarily fastened in place with guy ropes under the direction of D., to be used to lift and move the heavy parts of an engine. On the day of the accident, plaintiff and four other men were working under D. to permanently secure this frame in place. D. directed plaintiff to go upon the frame, and after he had climbed there for the purpose of moving one of the ropes which held this frame in place, so that they could use it at another place as a permanent guy rope, D. untied it below, and the frame fell and injured plaintiff. Held, D. was not a "vice principal," but was a fellow servant" of plaintiff, and defendant was not liable for his negligence. Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co. v. Callaghan, 155 Fed. 397, 401, 83 C. C. A. 669, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 361.

A train dispatcher is a "vice principal," and not a "fellow servant," of an engineer of a train running under his orders. Santa Fé Pac. R. Co. v. Holmes, 136 Fed. 66, 69, 68 C. C. A. 634 (citing Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. Dixon, 24 Sup. Ct. 683, 194 U. S. 338, 48 L. Ed. 1006; Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. v. Frost, 74 Fed. 965, 21 C. C. A. 186; Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. Mix, 121 Fed. 476, 57 C. C. A. 592).

A servant of a carriage manufacturer placed in charge of a wagon used to haul vehicles from the factory to depots for shipment, and who has authority to employ men to assist him, and who directs them in the work, is a "vice principal," and not a fellow servant, of the men. McIntyre v. Tebbetts, 120 S. W. 621, 623, 140 Mo. App. 116.

A locomotive engineer and a switchman whose duty it was to give signals to control movement of a train in the making of a coupling by a conductor were fellow servants of the conductor, and not "vice principals," as having superintending control within Railroad Law (Laws 1890, c. 565, as amended by Laws 1906, c. 657) § 42a. Eagen v. Buffalo Union Terminal R. Co., 93 N. E. 1110, 1111, 200 N. Y. 478.

An engineer in charge of an engine used in the yards of a factory is not a vice principal within the scope of Railroad Law (Consol. Laws, c. 49) § 42a, making engineers in the employ of a railroad corporation "vice principals" of such corporation or the receiver of such corporation, as the company in charge of the factory was not a railroad corporation or a receiver thereof. Matrusciello v. Milliken Bros., 126 N. Y. Supp. 739, 742, 141 App. Div. 769.

A motorman took his car into a barn, and, while he was standing in the rear of it, a second car in charge of another motorman came up and stopped four feet away. The conductor of the second car turned the trolley pole around to the front, and, being unable to place it, the motorman of the second car made the contact, whereupon the car moved suddenly forward, and the motorman of the first car was crushed between the cars. Held, that the motorman of the second car was the "vice principal" to the other motorman, within Railroad Law (Laws 1890, c. 565) § 42a, as added by Laws 1906, c. 657, defining "vice principals," as those intrusted with the authority of superintendence, control, or command of other persons employed or with authority to direct or control any other employé in the duty of such employé, or who have for the time being physical control or direction of the movement of a car, etc. Gorman v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & S. R. Co., 131 N. Y. Supp. 686, 687, 147 App. Div. 21.

A person in control of a train on which live stock was being transported was the "vice principal" of the railroad, and notice to him by the shipper of the danger of switching the car with the stock onto a track running into a district infected with cholera was notice to the corporation. Council v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 100 S. W. 57, 58, 123 Mo. App. 432.

The engineer and conductor of a train are not "vice principals" in their relation to the fireman of said train. Hayes v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 592, 593, 121 App. Div. 198.

Conductors and engineers engaged in running and operating trains are "vice principals" and not "fellow servants" of a brakeman, and their negligence is the negligence of the company. Southern Indiana Ry. Co. v. Baker, 77 N. E. 64-66, 37 Ind. App. 405.

Where plaintiff was employed by a railroad company as one of an extra gang of track and bridge repairers under its foreman, and the foreman ordered one of the men, R., to take charge of a car which followed that on which the foreman rode, to stop at curves, and to look out for trains, and R. occupied a position where he had control of the brake, and where it was his duty to look out for the trains, R. was a "vice principal." Warren v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 87 S. W. 585, 586, 113 Mo. App. 498.

Under the law of Virginia, the maintaining of a safe roadbed by a railway company is a duty, in the performance of which a servant is a vice principal for whose neglect, resulting in the injury of another servant, the company is responsible, and not a "fellow servant." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pointer's Adm'r, 69 S. W. 1108, 1113, 113 Ky. 952.

A foreman of a railroad construction gang, employed in unloading cinders from cars and preparing the roadbed, had power to hire and discharge the laborers and direct their movements. He had also power to direct the movements of a train crew employed in placing the cars where they were to be unloaded. Held, that the foreman was not a fellow servant of a member of the gang but was the employer's "vice principal." Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Kimmel, 77 N. E. 936, 937, 221 Ill. 547.

Where workmen, under control of a division engineer, were doing work of a railroad company in undermining supports of a bridge, in absence of a showing to the contrary, they would be presumed to be in the company's employ, and thus being, as to a conductor injured by collapse of the bridge, the alter ego of the company under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4560f, making persons intrusted by a railway corporation with control over others in its employ "vice principals" of the company, they having knowledge of danger created, which was knowable to them in exercise of ordinary care, the company occupied the same position as to knowledge toward the conductor. Beaumont, S. L. & W. R. Co. v. Olmstead, 120 S. W. 596, 600, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 96.

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7083, provides that every railroad or other corporation operating in the state shall be liable for personal injuries suffered by any employé while in the service, exercising due care, if the injury was caused by the negligence of any person in the service of such corporation having charge of any signal, telegraph office, switchyard, shop, roundhouse, locomotive engine, or train upon a railway, etc. Held, that such act enlarged the class of "vice principals" previously existing, and under it railroad corporations were liable for injuries to a servant caused by the negligence of an employé in charge of any signal, etc. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Lightheiser, 78 N. E. 1033, 1035, 168 Ind. 438.

A conductor in charge of a freight train backed his train into a siding with such force as to throw a heavy casting from a car, which was standing on the siding and which was struck by the freight train, onto the main track, where it was struck by a passenger train, which it wrecked, thereby injuring the fireman of such passenger train. A rule of the railroad required employés in charge of trains to promptly report to the superintendent any incident involving the obstruction of the road, to repair damages and take entire charge of necessary work, and to first protect the train with proper danger signals, and take every precaution to prevent further accident. Held that, under the laws of Tennessee, the crews of the freight and passenger trains were fellow servants up to the time when the casting was thrown upon the main track, but, from that time until the time when the passenger train was wrecked, the conductor of the freight train was, by virtue of the railroad's rule, a "vice principal," whose duty it was, as a representative of the railroad, to remove the obstruction from the main track and to warn the approaching passenger train for its protection. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Curd, 89 S. W. 140, 141, 133 Ky. 138, 134 Am. St. Rep. 444.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2874, provides that persons intrusted by a railroad corporation with the authority of command of other persons in the employ of the corporation, or the authority to direct any other servant in the performance of any duty, or with any duty owing by the master to the servant, are vice principals of the corporation. A rule by a railroad corporation provided that passenger conductors have entire charge of their trains and of all persons employed thereon, and will be held responsible for the prompt and safe movement of their trains and the conduct of the trainmen. Held, that a conductor is not a fellow servant of the master mechanic while the latter is riding on the locomotive for the purpose of discovering and remedying a defect in the locomotive, but is a "vice principal"; and the railroad corporation will be liable for the death of the master mechanic, caused by the negligence of the conductor, under Rev. St. 1899, § 2864 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1637), providing that a railroad corporation shall be responsible for the death of a person resulting from the negligence of any employé while running a train. Tabor v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 109 S. W. 764, 768, 210 Mo. 385, 124 Am. St. Rep. 728.

Defendant railroad company was engaged in constructing a railroad on which trains west of C. were operated under bulletin orders issued by defendant's trainmaster. An order was issued that all east-bound work trains should have right of way over west-bound trains between 12 o'clock noon and 12 o'clock midnight, and vice versa between 12 o'clock midnight and 12 o'clock noon. On the day of the accident plaintiff, as engineer, was running an extra east-bound train about 60 miles west of C., and at 1 o'clock p. m. his train, having the right of way under such orders, was run into by a west-bound train in charge of the trainmaster as foreman in charge of a crew of laborers. The latter train was run at a high rate of speed on a crooked track through a rough and mountainous country, and no flagman was put out or any steps taken to protect plaintiff's east-bound train. Held, that the negligence of the trainmaster in permitting his train to be run in violation of the bulletin was negligence in his capacity as "vice principal," and not as plaintiff's fellow servant, for which the railroad company was responsible. Morrison v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co., 88 Pac. 998, 1001, 32 Utah, 85 (citing Pittsburgh Bridge Co. v. Walker, 48 N. E. 915, 170 Ill. 550; Chicago & Alton R. Co. v. May, 108 Ill. 288; Sante Fé P. R. Co. v. Holmes [decided May 21, 1906] 202 U. S. 438, 26 Sup. Ct. 676, 50 L. Ed. 1094).

A brakeman signaling to the engineer of a freight train was not in the "physical control or direction of the movement of a signal," within Laws 1906, c. 657, § 42a, so as to render him a vice principal of the railroad company, and make the company liable for his negligence to a station agent who independent of the statute would be his fellow servant; that phrase being primarily directed to the operation of mechanical devices or machinery. Laws 1906, c. 657, § 42a, provides that employes of a railroad company intrusted with superintendence or control of other persons in the same employ, or with the authority to control any other employé, or who have as a part of their duty physical control or direction of the movement of a signal, switch, locomotive engine, etc., shall be deemed "vice principals." Held, that the "direction and control" referred to means that which proceeds from superior authority, and the mere fact that an engineer switching freight cars had to rely upon a rear brakeman to give signals would not give the brakeman authority to control the engineer within the meaning of the statute so as to make him a vice principal of the railroad company, so as to render the company liable for injuries to a station agent from the negligence of the brakeman who independently of the statute would be his fellow servant. Hallock v. New York, O. & W. Ry. Co., 90 N. E. 1124, 1126, 197 N. Y. 450.

Laws 1906, p. 1682, c. 657, as amended, providing that in all actions against a railroad corporation for personal injury, or death resulting from personal injury, while in the employment of such corporation, arising from its negligence or that of any of its officers or employes, it shall be held that persons in the service of any such railroad corporation, who are intrusted with the authority to direct or control any other employé in the performance of duty of such employé, or who have as a part of their duty for the time being physical control or direction of the movement of a signal, switch, locomotive engine, car, train, or telegraph office, are "vice principals" of such corporation, and are not fellow servants of such injured or deceased employes, is not unconstitutional, and does not create a new cause of action, but merely declares what may be regarded as prima facie evidence, and as such a rule of evidence is valid. Schradin v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 73-75.

Under Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600, making the master liable for death of an employé caused by the negligence of any person in the service of the employer intrusted with or exercising superintendence, whose sole or principal duty is that of superintendence, etc., as supplemented by Laws 1906, p. 1682, c. 657, declaring that persons having authority of superintendence, control, or command of other persons in the employment of a railroad or with authority to direct or control any other employé in the performance of his duty, etc., are "vice principals," and not fellow servants, the foreman of a railroad section crew in the performance of his duty to warn a member of the crew of the danger from an approaching express train was a "vice principal," and not a fellow servant. La Placa v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 797, 799, 127 App. Div. 843.

Laws 1906, p. 1682, c. 657, known as the "Barnes act," provides that in all actions against a railroad for injuries to an employé from the negligence of such railroad or its officers in addition to the liability now existing by law it shall be held that persons engaged in the service of any railroad, intrusted with the authority of superintendence of other employes, or who have as a part of their duty physical control or direction of the movement of a car, engine, etc., are "vice principals," and not fellow servants of such injured employes. Plaintiff, a brakeman, was directed by his conductor to uncouple a car, and he, not being able to signal directly to the engineer, passed the signal to the conductor, who repeated it to the engineer, but not being able to uncouple the car, was directed by the conductor to pull the pin from another car, which he did, signaling the train to move, and after the cars had separated they were suddenly stopped and pushed back against the other car, catching plaintiff's foot between the bumpers, the backward movement of the cars being in response to a signal by the conductor, of which plaintiff had no intimation. A well-recognized rule in railway service permitted only the trainman who was engaged in uncoupling the cars to give signals for train movements. Held, that plaintiff's injuries were caused by the conductor's negligence in not taking signals from plaintiff, and in himself directing the movement of the car under his general authority, and was the act of a vice principal within the statute, for which defendant was liable. Brown v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 89 N. E. 1096, 196 N. Y. 542.

Railroad Law (Laws 1890, c. 565) § 42a, as added by Laws 1906, c. 657, provides that in actions against a railroad company for death resulting from personal injury to an employé, arising from the company's negligence or that of its employes, the employé or his legal representative shall have the same rights and remedies as are now allowed, and, in addition thereto, it shall be held that persons engaged in the company's service or intrusted with the authority of superintendence, control, or command of other employes, or with the authority to direct them in the performance of their duties, or who have for the time being physical control or direction of the movement of a signal, engine, etc., are vice principals, and not fellow servants, of the injured employe. Decedent was a third-rail patrolman in defendant's employment, and it was the custom of such patrolmen to work in pairs, one of them repairing minor defects, while the other kept watch for the approach of trains and warned the working patrolman thereof, alternating in working and watching as they themselves determined. Held that, since the duty of the other patrolman to warn decedent of approaching trains was only incidental to his work, he was not a "vice principal" as to decedent, but a fellow servant; the statute only making an employe a vice principal in such case, where his special or sole duty was to give warning. Hintze v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 125 N. Y. Supp. 644, 645, 140 App. Div. 852.

A complaint for death of a railroad engineer by running into an open switch, alleging that a section foreman was charged with the duty of keeping the track in repair, did not show that such foreman was the "vice principal" while engaging in operating the switch. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co. v. Barker, 83 N. E. 369, 374, 169 Ind. 670, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 542, 14 Ann. Cas. 375.

Defendant's railroad rules provided that extra trains were not shown on the time tables, and had no rights except those given by the train dispatcher, that they should not be run without orders from the dispatcher, and that all interurban trains must report to the dispatcher at certain sidings. Defendant's general trainmaster, while the general superintendent of transportation was absent and while therefore in full charge of transportation, took out an extra car, and while operating the same himself as motorman caused the car to come into collision with a car operated by plaintiff in the opposite direction, resulting in plaintiff's injuries. The trainmaster took out the car without notifying the dispatcher, and proceeded past one of the notification stations before reaching the point of collision without telephoning the dispatcher as required by rule; being unable to do so because the telephone line was not in working order, due to the inclemency of the weather. Held, that the trainmaster, though operating the car himself, did not for that reason cease to be a "vice principal," and become plaintiff's fellow servant; since his act in taking out the car and operating it over the road without notice to the dispatcher was the act of a vice principal. Indiana Union Traction Co. v. Pring, 96 N. E. 180, 185, 50 Ind. App. 566.

An engineer is a "vice principal" and not a fellow servant of his fireman, within Const. 1895, art. 9, § 15, giving to railroad employes the right to recover for injuries sustained by the negligence of a superior having the right to control or direct the services of the party injured. Pagan v. Southern Ry. Co., 59 S. E. 32, 34, 78 S. C. 413, 13 Ann. Cas. 1105.

A "vice principal" is one who stands in the place of and represents the master; thus a conductor in charge of a railroad train as to the brakemen and flagmen is a vice principal and not a fellow servant. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Beazley, 45 South. 761, 765, 54 Fla. 311.

As affected by actual assistance

Where a "vice principal" does the work of an ordinary laborer, and is negligent therein, his employer is not liable for injuries to another employe from such negligence. Miller v. American Bridge Co., 65 Atl. 1109, 216 Pa. 559.

If one who is a "vice principal" in a general sense undertakes the performance of a duty which usually belongs to a fellow servant, he is, as respects that particular act, a fellow servant and not a vice principal. Roebbling Const. Co. v. Thompson, 82 N. E. 196, 197, 229 Ill. 42 (citing Chicago & Alton Railroad Co. v. May, 108 Ill. 288; Gall v. Beckstein, 50 N. E. 711, 173 Ill. 187; Baier v. Selke, 71 N. E. 1074, 211 Ill. 512, 103 Am. St. Rep. 208).

One may be a vice principal as to certain acts and a fellow servant as to others, and a foreman in giving commands to his men is a "vice principal," but, where he joins the men in doing the common labor which they are doing, he is, as to such work, a fellow servant. Chenoweth v. Burr, 89 N. E. 1008, 1010, 242 Ill. 312.

A boss of a crew, loading rails onto a flat car, engaged in the same work as the crew, although he may have direction of it, is not a "vice principal" of the master, but a mere "fellow servant" of the members of the crew. Whitfield v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 66 S. E. 973, 974, 7 Ga. App. 268.

A foreman directing employes engaged in moving things in a railway yard did not lose his status of "vice principal," fixed by Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4560g, declaring that all persons intrusted by a railway company in controlling other employes are vice principals, and become fellow servants of the employes by assisting them in moving a tool box in the yard pursuant to his orders. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Dean (Tex.) 89 S. W. 797, 798.

Plaintiff was injured while operating a steel drop press by the parting of a belt due to a defective lacing. The work of adjusting the lacings was not easily accomplished by operators of the presses, and had been placed on a superior servant in charge of some 35 of such presses in defendant's factory. Held, that such servant, whose duty it was to lace the belt, was not plaintiff's fellow servant with reference to such act, but a "vice principal," although when his other duties permitted he operated one of the drop presses. Gilmore v. American Tube & Stamping Co., 66 Atl. 4, 5, 79 Conn. 498.

The term "vice principal" has a well-defined legal meaning and is generally understood by the courts as indicating a particular kind of a representative of the master, one having authority to employ and discharge servants under his control; and, where the negligence of the vice principal injures an employé, the master is liable, though the act he is performing at the time falls within the ordinary duties of a fellow servant. Suderman & Dolson v. Kriger, 109 S. W. 373, 376, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 29.

A "vice principal," for whose negligence an employer will be liable to other employés, must have entire charge of the business, or one to whom a master delegates a duty of his own, which is an absolute obligation, from which nothing but performance can relieve him, and hence an employé who had charge of putting on a roof, and who worked with the men under him and did the same kind of work, and at the time of the accident was tacking paper on the roof, is not a "vice principal" as to the men under his control. Staebler v. Warren-Ehret Co., 72 Atl. 554, 555, 223 Pa. 129.

Plaintiff was employed as a miner at a specified price for coal delivered at the mouth of the pit, plaintiff being required to run his cars of coal to the entry, where they were transported to the mouth of the pit by mule power. Plaintiff was promised assistance in running his cars out, in order to facilitate his mining efforts, and, on the derailment of a car in the room, he was assisted by the pit boss to rerail the same, in which operation his fingers were pinched between the bottom of the car and a wooden prop the pit boss had been using, and which he had dropped near the car. Held, that the acts of the pit boss in assisting plaintiff were those of a fellow servant and not of a "vice principal." Cavanaugh v. Centerville Block & Coal Co., 109 N. W. 303, 304, 131 Iowa, 700, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 907.

A street railway barn foreman, whose duty it was to give orders with reference to the running of cars, with authority to lay off men for infraction of rules, directed plaintiff to take out a new car, which plaintiff stopped just outside the car shed, at a sandhouse, to get sand for his trip. While plaintiff was getting sand, the foreman got on the standing car and started it forward without signal, crushing plaintiff against the side of the sand bin. Held, that the foreman was plaintiff's "vice principal," and that his act in momentarily moving the car, instead of ordering another to do so, did not render his negligence in so doing that of plaintiff's "fellow servant." Blen v. St. Louis Transit Co., 83 S. W. 986, 987, 108 Mo. App. 399 (citing Grattis v. Kansas City, P. & G. R. R., 55 S. W. 108, 153 Mo. 380, 48 L. R. A. 399, 77 Am. St. Rep. 721; Bane v. Irwin, 72 S. #### As determined by duty performed

Whether one is a "vice principal" so as to make the master liable for his negligence does not depend upon his rank as an employé, but upon the character of his duties. Indiana Union Traction Co. v. Long, 96 N. E. 604, 606, 176 Ind. 532.

In determining whether an employé represents the employer, the duty required to be performed, rather than the title by which the employé is known or called, is to be considered. Stearns & Culver Lumber Co. v. Fowler, 50 South. 680, 683, 58 Fla. 362.

It is the act itself that characterized the performer as a "vice principal" or a "fellow servant," and not the title of the actor or the fact that he does superior duties. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co. v. Barker, 83 N. E. 369, 374, 169 Ind. 670, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 542, 14 Ann. Cas. 375.

It is not the grade, or title, or the position in the service, that determines whether a person is a fellow servant or a "vice principal" of the master, but it is the duty which the servant performs towards the other servants. Moore v. Dublin Cotton Mills, 56 S. E. 839, 841, 127 Ga. 609, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772 (citing 2 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 508 et seq.; 6 Cur. Law, 555 et seq.; 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7313).

An employé authorized to perform a duty which is clearly the master's is, to that extent, a vice principal, and the controlling inquiry must be whether an act or omission resulting in injury involved a duty owing by the master to the injured servant. Patterson v. Southern Ry. Co. of Indiana, 99 N. E. 491, 492, 52 Ind. App. 618.

If an employé has no authority from the master, then in the very nature of things he cannot be a "vice principal." If he has authority, whether express or implied, his vice principalship depends upon whether the scope of such authority includes attention to or performance of any of the nondelegable duties of the master, and, if so, then whether the alleged negligent act is referable to any of those duties. Beresford v. American Coal Co., 98 N. W. 902, 904, 124 Iowa, 34, 70 L. R. A. 256.

In the absence of some statute defining fellow servant, the test to be applied is whether the negligent act, which caused the injury, was a breach of a positive duty owing by the master to his servant, in which case the person performing the act is a "vice principal," and not a fellow servant. Morrison v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co., 88 Pac. 998, 1002, 32 Utah, 85 (quoting and adopting definition in Merrill v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 81 Pac. 85, 29 Utah, 264, 110 Am. St. Rep. 695).

In the absence of a statute, "unless the negligent servant is the general manager or general superintendent of the business of the master, it is not his rank or authority over other employes, but it is the nature of the duty he is discharging when he is guilty of the negligence that determines whether he is a 'vice principal' or a 'fellow servant,' and when the master is liable or is exempt from liability for the injury caused by his negligence. If he is discharging one of the absolute duties of the master, the latter is liable for his acts and for his negligence, but, if he is discharging one of the primary duties of the service, his employer is exempt from liability." Southern Pac. Co. v. Schoer, 114 Fed. 466, 468, 52 C. C. A. 268, 57 L. R. A. 707.

A mere foreman—not the head of a separate department—is a fellow servant of the workmen under him or a "vice principal" dependent on the nature of the duties he is discharging at the time of the negligent act, with which he is charged. If he is discharging one of the absolute or personal duties of the master, he is a "vice principal," and his negligence is imputable to the master. Where a bridge company sent a force of men under a foreman to make repairs on a railroad bridge, consisting in part of replacing certain old parts with heavy steel girders, and in doing this it was necessary to construct on the spot wooden frames or bents to support the weight of the girders, while they were being put in place, which were made by the workmen as an incident to the work, the foreman was not a "vice principal" either with respect to the construction of such frames or their subsequent inspection. Phoenix Bridge Co. v. Castleberry, 131 Fed. 175, 179, 180, 65 C. C. A. 481.

Where a servant is injured in performance of work of his master, and the negligence of a coemployé is involved, whether such coemployé is to be deemed a fellow servant or a vice principal is to be determined, not so much by the rank or title, if any, used to describe him, but chiefly by the character of the duties intrusted to him; and an employé performing for the master the duty to provide the place and instrumentalities of work, a coterie of competent servants, or to arrange the general system of work, is deemed the "vice principal" of the master. Mills v. Bartow Lumber Co., 70 S. E. 983, 985, 9 Ga. App. 171.

In the performance of those duties placed upon the master by express law, or implied to him under the contract of employment, and variously designated as the "positive," "absolute," "personal," "nondelegable," or "nonassignable" duties of the master, the servant intrusted with them, even though he be the most mental in point of rank, is to the extent of such duties the alter ego or "vice principal" of the master. Conversely the coemployé, however important be his official title, who is doing mere servant's work, or is engaged merely with the ordinary details of the labor, is to be regarded as a fellow servant in the business at hand. In a suit by a servant against the master, where the injury was occasioned by the negligence of another employé, the defense of a common employment is excluded, or allowed to prevail, according as the delinquency was or was not a breach of one or more of what the law regards as the absolute, personal, or nondelegable duties of the master. Dennis v. J. S. Schofield's Sons Co., 57 S. E. 925, 1 Ga. App. 489 (citing Moore v. Dublin Cotton Mills, 56 S. E. 839, 127 Ga. 609, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772).

The mere superiority in dignity, grade, or compensation, in favor of one servant of a common principal over other servants, is not a mark by which to distinguish whether or not the former is a "vice principal." The most general test is that, in order to be a "vice principal," a servant must so far stand in the place of his master as to be charged in the particular matter with the performance of a duty towards the inferior which, under the law, the master owes to such servant, as furnishing tools (Guthrie v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 11 Lea, 372, 47 Am. Rep. 286), or machinery and appliances (Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lahr, 6 S. W. 663, 86 Tenn. 335, 341), or giving orders with respect to work to be done by the subordinate (Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Handman, 13 Lea, 423, 429). Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dillard, 86 S. W. 313, 314, 114 Tenn. 240, 69 L. R. A. 746, 108 Am. St. Rep. 894, 4 Ann. Cas. 1028 (quoting and adopting the definition in Ohio River & C. R. Co. v. Edwards, 76 S. W. 897, 111 Tenn. 31).

The doctrine that a superior servant is on that account a "vice principal" representing his master, rather than a fellow servant with others employed by the same master and engaged in the same work, does not prevail in this state, and is not supported by the weight of authority. The master's liability to one servant for the negligence of another in no way depends upon the superior rank of the negligent servant. A servant of any grade may be employed in the discharge of the particular and personal duties which the master owes to the servant, as when he is engaged in the duty of providing safe, suitable, and sufficient machinery and appliances. While engaged in such employment, although at other times he may be only a fellow servant with other employes, he becomes a "vice principal," and his master is liable for his negligence, because the performance of these duties cannot be delegated by a master so as to relieve himself from the consequence of negligence in these respects. Small v. Allington & Curtis Mfg. Co., 48 Atl. 177, 178, 94 Me. 551.

Among the duties which the master owes to the servant, and which he cannot delegate to others so as to absolve himself from liability for negligence in their performance, are the duties of the master to warn the servant of latent defects and dangers which are or ought to be known to the master, and of which the servant without fault is ignorant, and to exercise reasonable diligence to furnish the servant a reasonably safe place in which to perform his work. Whoever is set to perform these duties, no matter what be his grade or rank, represents the master in that particular and is not a "fellow servant" of those to whom the duty is due but is a "vice principal." If the servant by whose negligence the injury is caused was at the time, with the knowledge, consent, and procurement of the master, engaged in the performance of a duty which, under the law, the master owed to the servant, the relation of "fellow servant" does not exist between the offending employe and the injured servant. A driver in a coal mine, after putting his mule away for the day, returned through the main entry of the face of the coal to get his coat and bucket. While he was walking through the entry, an explosion of dynamite occurred in the roof above his head, and he was injured as a result. The shot had been placed and ignited by two of defendant's timbermen, whose duty it was to keep the roof in safe condition, and in the performance of such the timbermen were "vice principals" engaged in performing the master's nondelegable duty to keep the mine safe, and the master was responsible for their negligence in failing to warn plaintiff of the impending explosion. Whether servants are fellow servants of the person injured or vice principals does not depend on whether they were engaged in a common employment under the same general contract and paid by the same principal, but whether the negligent servant in the act or omission complained of by the direction or consent of the master was in discharge of a duty which the master personally owed to the injured servant. Donk Bros. Coal & Coke Co. v. Thil, 81 N. E. 857, 859, 228 Ill. 233 (citing Hess v. Rosenthal, 43 N. E. 743, 160 Ill. 621; Chicago & A. R. R. Co. v. Scanlan, 48 N. E. 826, 170 Ill. 106; Chicago & Alton R. R. Co. v. Maroney, 48 N. E. 953, 170 Ill. 520, 62 Am. St. Rep. 396; Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Sawusch, 75 N. E. 797, 218 Ill. 130, 1 L. R. A. [N. S.] 670; Mobile & O. R. R. Co. v. Godfrey, 39 N. E. 590, 155 Ill. 78; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 32 N. E. 285, 143 Ill. 242, 18 L. R. A. 215; Libby, McNeill & Libby v. Scherman, 34 N. E. 801, 146 Ill. 540, 37 Am. St. Rep. 191; Hines Lumber Co. v. Ligas, 50 N. E. 225, 172 Ill. 315, 64 Am. St. Rep. 38; Leonard v. Kinnare, 51 N. E. 688, 174 Ill. 532; Kewanee Boiler Co. v. Erickson, 54 N. E. 1044, 181 Ill. 549).

The responsibility of the master is not determined by the difference in rank between the servant injured and the one in fault, or by the fact that the negligent servant is foreman or in control of others, but upon the nature of the act complained of, whether it is an act of service or an attempted performance of a nondelegable duty of the master. Plaintiff was injured by an explosion of gas while cleaning a hydraulic main in defendant gas company's plant under the direction of defendant's foreman. Defendant had provided valves for shutting off the gas from its mains while they were being cleaned, and it does not appear that the act of shutting off the gas or airing the mains required any special skill. Held, that the negligence of the foreman in failing to shut off the gas from the main or to air it before it was cleaned was not negligence in the performance by him of a nondelegable duty owed by defendant to plaintiff, but such action was purely an act of service, which defendant could properly delegate, and for the negligent performance of which defendant was not liable. Nor can plaintiff recover on the ground that defendant had failed to provide a safe place for him to work, since defendant provided proper appliances for securing plaintiff's safety, and the place was rendered unsafe only by the neglect of the foreman to properly use these appliances; the operation of the appliances being a duty defendant could delegate to an employe. Tilley v. Rockingham County Light & Power Co., 67 Atl. 946, 947, 74 N. H. 316 (citing Hilton v. Fitchburg R. Co., 59 Atl. 625, 73 N. H. 116, 119, 68 L. R. A. 428; McLaine v. Head & Dorost Co., 52 Atl. 545, 71 N. H. 294, 58 L. R. A. 462, 93 Am. St. Rep. 522; Galvin v. Pierce, 54 Atl. 1014, 72 N. H. 79; Wallace v. Boston & M. R. R., 57 Atl. 913, 72 N. H. 504).

A superintendent or foreman is not necessarily a "vice principal" simply because he occupies that position. Title or rank has not of itself any special significance in this connection. When engaged with the other servants in the common employment of the master, the superintendent or foreman is a fellow servant, and for his personal negligence the master is not responsible; but when clothed with special authority in respect to the management and conduct of the master's business, a general supervision of it, the control and direction of the other servants under his charge, authority to direct them in the performance of their duties, he is, in respect to those absolute duties the master owes such other servant, a vice principal. He stands in the place of the master in the performance of those duties, whether in reference to the selection of safe instrumentalities, a safe place to work, or in giving proper warning of dangers and risks not known to the servant, or which he could not by the exercise of reasonable prudence discover; and his failure and neglect to perform such absolute duties render the master liable. Dixon v. Union Ironworks, 97 N. W. 375, 377, 90 Minn. 492.

As determined by power to hire and discharge

It is not essential that one have the power to employ and discharge employes, in order to be a "vice principal." Wichita Cotton Oil Co. v. Hanna (Tex.) 139 S. W. 1000, 1001.

Authority to employ and discharge makes an employe a "vice principal," regardless of his grade of service. Lantry-Sharpe Contracting Co. v. McCracken, 117 S. W. 453, 456, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 627.

Where a foreman had general charge of a mine, including the particular work in which plaintiff, a miner, was engaged when injured, and hired the miners and told them what to do and where to work, he was a "vice principal," and not a fellow servant of plaintiff. Vasby v. United States Gypsum Co., 128 Pac. 606, 607, 46 Mont. 411.

The one in immediate charge of the work of loading lumber on a vessel from a dock, with power to hire and discharge the hands, is not a fellow servant of a laborer placing the lumber in a sling to be hoisted but a "vice principal." Schroeder v. Brown & McCabe, 116 Pac. 335, 336, 59 Or. 81.

A yard foreman, who had no authority over a yard engineer except to direct him when and where to move his engine, and who did not have the right of employment or discharge of the engineer, was not a "vice principal" as to the latter but a fellow servant. Southern Ry. Co. v. Smith, 59 S. E. 372, 374, 107 Va. 553.

One who is the foreman of a department in an establishment divided into departments, with power to hire and discharge employes in that department, is a "vice principal" in the conduct of that department, and any negligence on his part in the conduct of the business committed to him is negligence of the master. Hugo, Schmeltzer & Co. v. Paiz (Tex.) 128 S. W. 912, 916.

A servant who is the medium of communication between the master and his servants, who was the proper person to make repairs when requested and who had the power to dismiss a servant requesting such repairs, is a "vice principal" within the meaning of the law. Suchomel v. Maxwell, 88 N. E. 553, 144 Ill. App. 543, 550; Id., 88 N. E. 558, 240 Ill. 231.

An employe directing a gang engaged in loading iron rails on a flat car and controlling the manner of performing the work is a "vice principal" and not a fellow servant, though he has no power to employ or discharge the men. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Rathneau, 80 N. E. 119, 120, 225 Ill. 278.

A man placed on a barge by the owner, with authority to direct its movements and to hire additional men when needed about the cargo, is a "vice principal" in respect to the performance of the owner's duty as master towards men so hired. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hartell, 157 Fed. 667, 668, 85 C. C. A. 335.

A master mechanic in the employ of an iron and steel company, whose duty it is to keep the machinery and appliances in repair and safe for employes to work about, who has full power to hire and discharge men, is a "vice principal" of the company. Republic Iron & Steel Co. v. Lee, 81 N. E. 411, 412, 414, 227 Ill. 246.

A statement does not show that an employe was other than a fellow servant when it shows no more than that he was foreman of a gang, and does not disclose that he has power either to employ or discharge. Pipkin v. Hayward Lumber Co. (Tex.) 96 S. W. 635, 636.

An assistant general manager of a corporation, who has general authority in the conduct of its business and the direction of its work, is a "vice principal," and not a "fellow servant" engaged in the actual operation of the business, although he has no power to employ and discharge such inferior servants. Abilene Cotton Oil Co. v. Anderson, 91 S. W. 607, 608, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 342.

The fact that a foreman in charge of a single job of work being done by defendant corporation, who worked with the men under him, had the power to hire and discharge them and to direct their movements in that particular work did not erect that single job into a department of defendant's business so as to make the foreman a "vice principal," but he remained a "fellow servant" with the men under him, and for his negligence, resulting in an injury to one of such men, defendant cannot be held liable. Vilter Mfg. Co. v. Otte, 157 Fed. 230, 232, 84 C. C. A. 673.

The conductor or "boss" or "foreman" of a log train used by a sawmill company solely for its own purposes, who has no authority to employ or discharge, and who is subordinate to others engaged in the same business, is not in law necessarily the "vice principal" of the master discharging a duty peculiarly devolving upon it while signaling the movements of a machine used in loading the log train so as to give a right of action against the company by an employé who was injured because of negligence of the conductor in signaling. Stearns & Culver Lumber Co. v. Fowler, 50 South. 680, 684, 58 Fla. 362.

School-teachers

One who entered into a contract with the board of education to render such services as teacher as would be required of him for a certain time was not a "vice principal" or "first assistant," within laws 1900, p. 1605, c. 751, and entitled to the compensation provided by that law. Wood v. Board of Education of City of New York, 112 N. Y. Supp. 578, 580, 59 Misc. Rep. 605.

On June 30, 1898, the Richmond borough school board appointed plaintiff as "vice principal, subject to the rules and regulations prescribed by the city superintendent of schools." The rules of the city superintendent limited appointment to the position of "assistant principal" to those holding a "first assistant teacher's license or a principal's license for high schools." Plaintiff did not have either one of the licenses mentioned in the city superintendent's rule, but possessed a certificate of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction. Held, that the term "assistant principal," as used in the city superintendent's rules, was equivalent to the term "vice principal," and plaintiff was not entitled to the salary of a "vice principal" or "head of department." Gormley v. Board of Education, 129 N. Y. Supp. 153.

Under a contract releasing a railroad from all liability for loss by fire of any property "situated or hereafter placed in the vicinity of such track, whether such loss result from negligence or other cause," it was error to submit to the jury the question whether the property destroyed by the fire, which started at a point about 40 feet from the track, and consumed lumber situated some 400 feet from that point and near the tracks, the ground being littered with shavings, which it was the duty, under the contract, of the property owner to clear away, was situated in the vicinity of the tracks, but the court should have so declared as a matter of law. Mann v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 97 N. W. 721, 724, 135 Mich. 210.

The term "vicinity," as used in a charter act granting the right to lay gas pipes in the streets of the "town of Millville and its vicinity," Millville being at the time an unincorporated village included in a township by the same name, held to refer to the immediate vicinity of the village, and not to the whole township and its vicinity. Landis Tp. v. Millville Gas Light Co., 65 Atl. 716, 72 N. J. Eq. 347.

A firm engaged in business at L. sold its business and agreed for 10 years not to enter into similar business at L. "or vicinity." Within a few months thereafter they started a similar business at W.,  $6\frac{1}{2}$  miles from L., and shortly thereafter engaged in a similar business at Z., the same distance from L. They advertised their business in the L. newspapers and sold a small quantity of goods to customers at L. About 11 months thereafter, the assignees of the purchaser of the business at L. threatened to sue if they engaged in business at L., but said nothing as to the business at Z. and W. About 4 years thereafter, the assignees wrote another letter, stating their belief that the sellers were proposing to violate their contract by engaging in business at L., but made no claim that they had breached their contract by engaging in business at any other point. Held, that the word "vicinity" does not express any definite idea of distance, but may mean in some connections a trifling space, and in others thousands of miles, and that the construction placed upon the contract by the parties thereto and their successors did not extend the word "vicinity" to include the towns Z. and W. Burton v. Douglass, 123 N. W. 631, 633, 141 Wis. 110, 18 Ann. Cas. 734.

As neighborhood

To be in the "vicinity" of a certain county or state is not to be in that county or state but to be outside of it, though near it; only in the neighborhood of it. "Etymologically and by common understanding 'in the vicinity' means in the neighborhood, and 'neighborhood,' as applied to place, signifies nearness. 'In the vicinity' does not even mean adjoining to or abutting on, but merely close by, or neighboring country." In this case, the words "in the vicinity" were used in the return on an execution for sale of land describing the land as "in the vicinity of Mississippi," and it was held that there was an utter failure to show their location. Jones v. Rogers, 38 South. 742, 745, 85 Misc. 802.

VICINITY CONTRACT

By the terms of a contract plaintiff was appointed by defendant an agent for the sale of machinery at De Pere, such agent to have the privilege of making sales in the vicinity of De Pere. On the back of the printed form of contract was the following indorsement: "The design of a 'vicinity contract' is to pay an agent the stipulated commission on whatever machinery he may sell under the provisions of the contract, not in the territory of another agent who had the exclusive right to sell in a defined territory." The agent's territory is not a "defined territory," within the meaning of the indorsement on the contract. The business of these agents is not to sit still at some place and sell machinery to those who come to the agent and want to buy it, but to canvass or work their territory; and these vicinity contracts are made rather than those of a definite territory on purpose to meet cases of this kind, where a locality may be more closely connected in a business way with any one village than one near by, and to avoid conflict between different agents from broader territory. McGeehan v. Gaar, Scott & Co., 100 N. W. 1072, 1074, 122 Wis. 630.

VICIOUS

VICIOUS PROPENSITY

A "vicious propensity" of a dog is not confined to a disposition to attack every person but includes as well a natural fierceness or disposition to mischief as might occasionally lead him to attack human beings without provocation. Merritt v. Matchett, 115 S. W. 1066, 1069, 135 Mo. App. 176.

VIDELICET

See, also, That Is To Say.

"The term 'that is to say' has undergone judicial interpretation. In Stuckeley v. Butler, Hobart's Reports, 168, it was held, as stated in the syllabi, that: 'A scilicet cannot restrict a grant where the former words are express and special. Secus, where the former words are so indifferent that they may receive such a restriction without apparent injury. A scilicet may particularize what before was general, or distribute what was in gross, or explain what was uncertain, but it must not be inconsistent with the premises.' And in the body of the opinion Sir Henry Hobart said: 'Now I come to the use of a "viz." or "sc." or, in the English, "that is to say," and the nature and force of it. It is neither a direct several clause nor a direct entire clause, but it is intermedia. First, it is clear that it is not a substantive clause of itself, and therefore you can neither begin a sentence with it nor make a sentence of it by itself; but it is, as I may say, clausula ancillaris—a kind of handmaid to another clause, and to deliver her mind not her own. And therefore it is a kind of interpreter. Her natural and proper use is to particularize that that is before general, or distribute that that is in gross, or explain that that is doubtful or obscure.' Hobart's Reports, p. 181b. The term 'that is to say,' as employed in an indictment, underwent judicial interpretation in King v. Powell, 2 Blackstone's Reports, 787, and was there construed to be intended as explanatory of what preceded it." Under a codicil bequeathing to testator's half-sister a portion equal to the share of his trustee's wife and her children, to be paid to her by testator's executor on final settlement of the estate ("that is to say," should the trustee's wife take a child's part, then the half-sister should take a child's part), the clause introduced by "that is to say" explained the portion of the estate intended for testator's half-sister and did not fix the time when she should receive the same. Brooks v. Brooks, 86 S. W. 158, 161, 162, 187 Mo. 476.

The natural and proper use of either a "scilicet" or "videlicet" is to particularize that which has been before stated generally, and to explain that which is indifferent, doubtful, or obscure. It may sometimes work a restriction of the preceding allegation, but cannot, in general, be used to preface anything contrary or repugnant to the premises, nor to increase or diminish the preceding matter, and, if it attempts to do so, the statement made under it will be rejected as surplusage. Tullis v. Shaw, 83 N. E. 376, 378, 169 Ind. 662 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 7319, 7320).

The office of a "videlicet" is to indicate that the plaintiff does not undertake to prove the precise circumstances as alleged. Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v. Young, 118 Ill. App. 226, 229.

VIEW

See Fully in View; Plain View.

As receiving evidence, see Receiving Evidence.

The purpose of a "view" is not to supply evidence, but to enable the jury to apprehend it. Granting or refusing a view is a matter necessarily largely in the discretion of the trial court; and an appellate tribunal will not undertake to control such discretion, unless it plainly appears that it was erroneously exercised. Stanley v. Commonwealth, 63 S. E. 10, 11, 109 Va. 796.

VIEWED AND LAID OUT

That a highway has been "viewed and laid out" means that the land constituting it has been given the status and subjected to the servitude of a public highway. Bradley v. Crane, 94 N. E. 359, 361, 201 N. Y. 14.

VIEWERS

Since the enactment of Sess. Laws 1901, c. 96, p. 200, giving to the county surveyor all the duties previously required of "viewers" in the laying out of county roads, the word "viewers," wherever it occurs, either in the statute or the road proceedings, must be interpreted as meaning or referring to the county surveyor, so that under Bal. Ann. Codes and St. §§ 3871, 3872, providing for notice to landowners and proceedings by commissioners on the report of "viewers," a service of notice of a hearing on the report of the surveyor was sufficient. State ex rel. Pagett v. Superior Court, Pierce County, 91 Pac. 241, 242, 47 Wash. 11.

VIGILANT WATCH

A "vigilant watch" means, in the common acceptation of the term, an exceedingly careful watch. Theobald v. St. Louis Transit Co., 90 S. W. 354, 366, 191 Mo. 395.

VILLAGE

See Incorporated Village.

A place which was not incorporated, but at which there was a post office, store, one residence, and a sawmill, and another building in process of construction, was a village within a statute authorizing the removal, of a county seat to any "village," etc. Court of Com'rs of Washington County v. State ex rel. Bowling, 44 South. 465, 466, 151 Ala. 561.

Where the owner of farm lands platted it into lots, blocks, and streets, filing the plat with the county clerk, but there was no acceptance of dedication, no incorporation, and no buildings there but a post office, the land did not become a "town" or "village," within Sand. & H. Dig. § 3712, limiting the homestead therein to one acre. Clements v. Crawford County Bank, 40 S. W. 132, 133, 64 Ark. 7, 62 Am. St. Rep. 149.

The name "village" always carries to the mind the idea of a small urban community. A city is a town, and a village is a town, but the word "city" or "village" indicates the size of the town. State ex rel. Scott v. Lichte, 126 S. W. 466, 470, 226 Mo. 273.

The word "villages," as used in Comp. St. 1903, c. 14, § 40, art. 1, providing that whenever a majority of the taxable inhabitants of any town or village not heretofore incorporated under any law of this state shall present a petition to the county board of the county in which said petitioners reside, praying that they may be incorporated as a village designating the name they wish to assume and the metes and bounds of the proposed village, and if such county board or a majority of the members thereof shall be satisfied that a majority of the taxable inhabitants of the proposed village have signed such petition, and that inhabitants of 200 or more are actual residents of the territory described in the petition, the said board shall declare the said proposed village incorporated, applies to villages in the ordinary and popular sense of the term and was not intended to clothe large rural districts with extended municipal powers and subject them to special taxation for purposes for which they are in no wise adapted, and that lands adjacent to the town or village might be incorporated therewith, provided they were in such close proximity as to be suburban in character, and have some unity of interest with the platted portion in the maintenance of municipal government, but did not contemplate the incorporation of removed territory having no natural connection with the village and not adapted to municipal purposes. Commonwealth Real Estate Co. v. City of South Omaha, 110 N. W. 1007, 1008, 78 Neb. 368.

As assemblage of houses

A "village" means an assemblage of houses, less than a town or city, but nevertheless urban or semiurban in its character. State ex rel. Young v. Village of Gilbert, 120 N. W. 528, 530, 107 Minn. 364.

As incorporated village

Where a statute required all railroads to provide, at all villages and boroughs on their respective roads, depots with suitable waiting rooms, the word "villages" means incorporated villages and not every isolated hamlet at which a railroad may have a flag station. State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 56 S. E. 518, 519, 61 W. Va. 367 (citing and adopting definition in State ex rel. Railroad & Warehouse Com'rs v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 79 N. W. 510, 76 Minn. 469).

Under the Minnesota statute, which requires railroad companies to establish stations at towns and villages, the word "villages" means not every sparsely settled hamlet but an incorporated village. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. State, 112 Pac. 1010, 1016, 27 Okl. 565 (quoting and adopting definition in State ex rel. Railroad & Warehouse Commission v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 79 N. W. 510, 76 Minn. 469).

Town synonyms

At the time of the granting of a franchise to a gas company to lay pipes in streets of the "town of Millville and its vicinity," there was a village of Millville situated within the township of Millville. Held, that the words "town of Millville and its vicinity" referred, not to the entire township of Millville, but to the village of Millville and its vicinity. McCarter v. Millville Gaslight Co., 69 Atl. 248, 73 N. J. Eq. 739.

A complaint, in a prosecution for carrying concealed weapons, was not defective because in the name of the "village of O." instead of the town of O., though Rev. St. 1899, § 6004, declares that the inhabitants of a village shall be a body politic and corporate by the name and style of "the town of"; the entire statute (sections 6004-6066) using the words "town" and "village" interchangeably, and the complaint having also used them in like manner. Town of Orrick v. Akers, 83 S. W. 549, 109 Mo. App. 662.

VILLAGE BRIDGE

Generally speaking, a town bridge is one wholly within a town, and a "village bridge" one wholly within a village, but the Legislature having seen fit to provide that a town road, which is intersected by a village plat and crossed by a navigable stream, requiring to be bridged to make a road usable, shall be deemed to be a town road and the bridge a town bridge to the same extent that it is a village street and "village bridge" as regards the maintenance of the bridge, the meaning of the statute on the subject is perfectly plain. Village of Bloomer v. Town of Bloomer, 107 N. W. 974, 979, 128 Wis. 297.

VILLAGE COUNCIL

The "village council," under the Minnesota statutes, is the governing body of the municipality, charged with the management of its affairs, legislative and administrative, and alone clothed with power and authority to enter into such contracts as are deemed necessary for the public welfare. Jewell Belting Co. v. Village of Bertha, 97 N. W. 424, 91 Minn. 9.

VILLAGE DATUM

A "village datum" is a certain monument or object, of a permanent character, which has been adopted by the municipality as a base or starting point for the grades and levels of the municipality. Chicago Consol. Traction Co. v. Village of Oak Park, 80 N. E. 42, 44, 225 Ill. 9.

VILLAGE PROPERTY

A pleading relating to the taxing of farm lands within the limits of an incorporated village in referring to the "village property," will be understood as using that phrase to mean the same as the words "physical village," as used in prior opinions of the court. Atherton v. Village of Essex Junction, 74 Atl. 1118, 1119, 83 Vt. 218, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 695, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 339.

VILLAGE PURPOSE

Laws 1907, c. 93, authorizing the application of village funds to the care and maintenance of streets which the trustees are unable to accept by dedication, etc., is in conflict with Const. art. 8, § 10, prohibiting a village from incurring any indebtedness except for village purposes, for a "village purpose" must be for a public use and for the benefit and advantage of all of the public and in which all have a right to share, and the statute cannot be sustained on the ground that it relieves the owners of the property abutting on the streets from the care and maintenance thereof. Smith v. Smythe, 90 N. E. 1121, 1123, 197 N. Y. 457, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 524.

VINDICTIVE DAMAGES

See, also, Exemplary Damages; Punitive Damages; Smart Money.

The word "vindictive," as used to describe damages, is synonymous with punitive and exemplary. Doerhoefer v. Shewmaker, 97 S. W. 7, 10, 123 Ky. 646 (citing Chiles v. Drake [Ky.] 2 Metc. 146, 74 Am. Dec. 406).

"Vindictive damages," sometimes called "smart money," are only awarded in actions of tort against a telegraph company for failure to properly transmit a message, where the failure was the result of intention or gross negligence. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Reeves, 126 Pac. 216, 217, 34 Okl. 468 (quoting Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Chamberlain, 46 Pac. 499, 4 Okl. 542).

While the damages to which a plaintiff may become entitled in an action of tort, to the amount of his expenses in litigation, in addition to his actual damages, are in fact and in effect "compensatory damages" and not punitive, they are in practice variously termed "exemplary," "punitive," "vindictive," or "smart money," and in an action for personal injuries, in which plaintiff was entitled to recover such additional damages, it was not error to refer to them as "exemplary." Hull v. Douglass, 64 Atl. 351, 353, 79 Conn. 260.

A sum assessed by a jury additional to compensation for damages, by way of punishment for wrongdoing, is termed "smart money," or "exemplary," "vindictive," or "punitive" damages. Farrow v. Hoffecker (Del.) 79 Atl. 920, 921, 7 Pennewill, 223.

VINOUS

VINOUS AND SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS

Beer, as commonly prepared, is a malt liquor, as distinguished from "vinous and spirituous liquors," and the charge of selling "vinous and spirituous liquors" was not sustained by proof of a sale of beer. Smith v. State, 49 South. 113, 94 Miss. 255.

VINOUS LIQUOR

As intoxicating liquor, see Intoxicating Liquor.

"Vinous liquor" is liquor which has undergone fermentation. State v. Coverdale (Del.) 77 Atl. 754, 756, 1 Boyce, 555.

"Vinous liquor" means liquor made from the juice of grapes, and it may also include wines made from fruits or berries by process of fermentation, by addition of sugar and alcohol. Marks v. State, 48 South. 864, 867, 159 Ala. 71, 133 Am. St. Rep. 20.

Where the production of alcohol by fermentation is preceded by no malting process, as in the case of wine, the product is called "vinous liquor." Pennell v. State, 123 N. W. 115, 116, 141 Wis. 35.

VIOLATE—VIOLATION

See Action for the Violation of a Law; Die in Consequence of Violation of Law; Each Violation.

Employed in violation of law, see Employed.

Willful violation, see Willful—Willfully.

The word "violation," as used in Acts 1905 (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8597), giving a right of action for injuries occasioned by any violation or willful failure to comply with the provisions of the act, means not only acts of omission but of commission in failing to do the things which are provided shall be done; that is nonconformity, simple negligence. Princeton Coal Min. Co. v. Lawrence, 95 N. E. 423, 426, 96 N. E. 387, 176 Ind. 469.

The phrase "violating the local option law," in a bond in a criminal proceeding, does not describe an offense. Stephens v. State, 98 S. W. 859, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 531.

Under Rev. St. § 1563, declaring all places in which intoxicating liquors are sold in "violation of law" to be public nuisances, it was held that a sale of liquor on Sunday by a licensed saloon keeper is not, in the absence of evidence showing that a city ordinance had been passed forbidding the sale of liquor on that day, such a "violation of the law" as to render the place in which it was sold a nuisance, though a general statute (section 4595) prohibits any person from keeping open his shop or from doing any kind of business on Sunday, except works of necessity or charity. Section 1563 was intended only to apply to a violation of the excise law itself, which was the subject-matter before the Legislature, and a sale in "violation of law" must be understood to mean a sale prohibited by the provisions of the excise law itself, either expressly or by implication. State v. Wacker, 38 N. W. 189, 71 Wis. 672.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1781, subd. 2, and section 1782, provide that an action may be maintained against the director of a corporation by a creditor thereof to procure a judgment, compelling him to pay to the corporation, or its creditors, the value of any property which he may have acquired, transferred, lost, or wasted by a "violation of his duty." Held, that the statutes referred to the violation of their duties as such corporate officers, and did not authorize the maintenance of an action by a creditor against a director of a dissolved corporation, on defendant's promise to pay all the debts of the corporation in case he should be allowed to acquire its property at a judicial sale for less than its real value and his failure to fulfill that promise, as such action was not predicated on any official act or omission. Lilienthal v. Betz, 77 N. E. 1002, 1003, 185 N. Y. 153, 7 Ann. Cas. 41.

VIOLATION OF PROFESSIONAL DUTIES

See Gross Violation of Professional Duties.

VIOLENCE

See Force and Violence; Unlawful Violence.

External violence, see External.

As force

"Force," in the Georgia Penal Code definition of robbery, is the same as the "violence" of the common-law definition. Johnson v. State, 57 S. E. 1056, 1 Ga. App. 729.

An indictment, under Gen. St. 1906, § 3500, providing for the punishment of any person resisting an officer in the execution of any legal duty "by offering or doing violence" to the person of such officer, which charges the gripping of the hand of the officer and forcibly preventing him from opening the door of the room in which the person for whose arrest the officer held a capias, was, sufficiently charges the essentials of the offense; the allegation that defendant gripped the hand of the officer alleging unlawful force, which as such is synonymous with "violence." Johnson v. State, 50 South. 529, 530, 58 Fla. 68.

Pen. Code 1911, art. 1327, defines robbery as an assault, or violence, or putting in fear of life or bodily injury, by which one fraudulently takes from another any property with intent, etc., and permits capital punishment where a firearm or other deadly weapon is used. Code Cr. Proc. 1911, art. 460, declares that the words "with force and arms" are not necessary to the validity of an indictment, and that an indictment which charges the offense in ordinary and concise language so as to enable a person of common understanding to understand it is sufficient. An indictment under section 1327 alleged that accused, "with force and arms" by unlawfully using a firearm, fraudulently took personal property from the owner without his consent and with intent to appropriate the same to his own use. Held, that "violence" was a general term including all sorts of force, synonymous with physical "force," and used interchangeably in relation to assault; that "violently" meant by or with "force"; that "violent" meant impelled with "force"; and hence that the term "with force and arms" sufficiently alleged that the robbery was affected by "violence" as used in the statute. Robinson v. State (Tex.) 149 S. W. 186, 187.

The expression in the act relating to forcible entry and detainer by "violence or circumstances of terror" is the equivalent of the English statutory law expression of an entry "with strong hand and a multitude of people." To constitute such an entry under either law, it is not necessary that it should be accompanied with tumult or riot directed against the person of the party in possession. It will be sufficient if it is attended with such a display of force as manifests an intention to intimidate the party in possession or to deter him from defending his rights or to excite him to repel the invasion of his possession, and thus bring about a condition of things which the law was intended to prevent and punish, namely, acts tending to excite a breach of the peace. Where an entry is made with such a display of force, accompanied by destruction of property upon the land on which the entry is made, it is a forcible entry. For one to enter on land in the actual peaceable possession of another, with a number of men acting under his direction and control, with such acts as tend to intimidate the occupant against resisting the intrusion and maintaining his possession, is sufficient to constitute a forcible entry, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1159, declaring one guilty of a forcible entry who, by "violence or circumstances of terror," enters real property. Knowles v. Crocker Estate Co., 86 Pac. 715, 718, 149 Cal. 278 (quoting and adopting definition from Ely v. Yore, 11 Pac. 868, 71 Cal. 130).

"Violent" means impelled with "force." Robinson v. State (Tex.) 149 S. W. 186, 187.

VIOLENT AND ACCIDENTAL MEANS

VIOLENT INJURY

The term "violent injury," as defined by Pen. Code, § 240, to be "an unlawful attempt, coupled with a present ability to commit injury upon the person of another," is not synonymous with "bodily harm," but includes any wrongful act committed by means of physical force against the person of another, even though only the feelings of such person are injured by the act. People v. Bradbury, 91 Pac. 497, 151 Cal. 675.

VIOLENTLY

"Violently" means by or with "force." Robinson v. State (Tex.) 149 S. W. 186, 187.

An indictment charging that the accused feloniously and violently assaulted a female, and violently and against her will feloniously did ravish and carnally know, charges rape, the word "violently," being equivalent to the term "forcibly," or "by force," and the word "ravish" importing the employment of force. State v. Rohn, 119 N. W. 88, 90, 140 Iowa, 640.

In an instruction defining defendant's liability if plaintiff, a passenger, was "violently handled" by the conductor, "violently handled" simply indicates the result of the physical assault, which, coupled with the insult, had been inflicted upon plaintiff. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Williams, 39 South. 489, 490, 87 Miss. 344.

VIRTUAL POSSESSION

Defendants in error being in actual possession of part of the tract by their tenant living in a house built upon the tract, holding under color of title and claiming the land as their own at the time the timber was felled and the logs taken away, their possession extended to the limits or boundaries contained in their title papers, which covered the space where the trees grew. This possession was an "effective possession" or "virtual possession" and was an adverse possession" in the sense in which that term is used in the law. Lieberman, Loveman & O'Brien v. Clark, 85 S. W. 258, 264, 114 Tenn. 117, 69 L. R. A. 732.

VIRTUE

See By Virtue of; In Virtue of His Office.

VIRTUOUS

The test as to whether a female is "virtuous" is not purity of mind or purity of heart, but actual physical purity of person. "Every virgin is virtuous." If, at the time of the alleged seduction, the female had never had unlawful sexual intercourse with man, she was a virtuous female, within the meaning of the law. Woodward v. State, 63 S. E. 573, 574, 5 Ga. App. 447.

A "virtuous female," as applied to an unmarried woman, in reference to the crime of seduction, is one who, prior to the intercourse with defendant, had never had sexual intercourse with another man by her consent. The jury should treat prosecutrix as having been virtuous before the alleged seduction, unless the evidence, direct or circumstantial, satisfied them that she had lost her virtue, by having illicit intercourse. Washington v. State, 528 S. E. 910, 912, 124 Ga. 423 (citing O'Neill v. State, 11 S. E. 856, 857, 85 Ga. 383, 407, 408; McTyler v. State, 18 S. E. 140, 91 Ga. 254).

A "virtuous female" is one who has not had sexual intercourse unlawfully, out of wedlock, knowingly, and voluntarily. Marshall v. Territory, 101 Pac. 139, 143, 2 Okl. Cr. 136.

A "virtuous woman," within the meaning of Revisal 1905, § 3354, punishing seduction under promise of marriage, is a woman who has never had illicit sexual intercourse. State v. Whitley, 53 S. E. 820, 821, 141 N. C. 823.

"A chaste female is one that has never had sexual intercourse, who yet retains her virginity. A 'virtuous female' is one who has not had sexual intercourse unlawfully, out of wedlock, knowingly and voluntarily." Marshall v. Territory, 101 Pac. 139, 143, 2 Okl. Cr. 136. Whatever may be the language which one may choose to define a female of previously chaste character, it certainly cannot be contended that one who, moved by lewd desire and libidinous impulse, submits herself to the carnal embrace of a man from November to July, whenever the time and the place are opportune, is a female of such a character on the 30th day of June. It is argued by the state that, as to the appellant, the prosecutrix is exempt from this requirement of the law; that, being the author of her undoing, he cannot take advantage of his own wrong and hide himself under the cloak of this statutory requirement, as a shield for his protection. Such an argument is purely a sentimental one, and, although it may be abhorrent to the moral sense to permit a man to protect himself with the shield of his own wrong, we are dealing with a legal question, and not one of sentiment nor morals; and, in order to find a man guilty of such an offense as the one named in this information, we must first find a female who can in all its essentials measure up to the requirement of the law charged to be violated. The test of virtue in a woman is a personal and physical test, and when, by reason of her voluntary sin, she has lost her virginal purity, it matters not who contributed to that loss; she is no longer chaste. It is not a sound argument to say that the prosecutrix in this case was immune from rape as to all other men, but not from appellant. The statute makes no such distinction; neither can we. As is said in Shirwin v. People, 69 Ill. 55: "The right of the accused to defend must be as broad as that of the prosecution to criminate." State v. Dacke, 109 Pac. 1050, 1051, 59 Wash. 238, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 173.

VIS MAJOR

"Vis major" is an irresistible, natural cause, which cannot be guarded against by the ordinary exertions of human skill and prudence. Evans v. Wabash R. Co., 121 S. W. 36, 42, 222 Mo. 435.

Injury caused by the "vis major" is equivalent to injury caused by an act of God. Southern Pac. Co. v. Schuyler, 135 Fed. 1015, 1018, 68 C. C. A. 409.

As respects the liability of carriers for loss or damage of goods, the term "vis major" (superior force) is used in the civil law in the same way that the words "act of God" are used in the common law, meaning inevitable accident or casualty. Lehman, Stern & Co. v. Morgan's Louisiana & T. R. & S. S. Co., 38 South. 873, 874, 115 La. 1, 70 L. R. A. 562, 112 Am. St. Rep. 259, 5 Ann. Cas. 818.

VISCERA

The word "intestines" is synonymous with the word "viscera," which is defined as being applied to the organs contained in the abdomen. Hampton v. State, 39 South. 421, 426, 50 Fla. 55.

VISIBLE

The explosive character of dust combined with air in an elevator or grinding mill is not a condition "visible" to one who does not know the danger of explosion from such combination, although he may see the dust in the air. Barney v. Quaker Oats Co., 82 Atl. 113, 127, 85 Vt. 372.

The word "evident" means "clear to the vision, especially clear to the understanding, and satisfactory to the judgment." It is a synonym of "visible." State v. Kauffman, 108 N. W. 246, 20 S. D. 620 (quoting with approval from Webst. Dict.).

Though Acts 1911, p. 605, c. 240, denouncing as unlawful the sale, keeping for sale, etc., of "milk containing visible dirt," fixed no standard by which visible dirt can be determined, it is not thereby rendered indefinite and incapable of enforcement, as the term "visible" has the common and specific meaning of being perceivable to the eye, and "dirt" contemplates any foul or filthy substance, or whatever, adhering to anything, renders it foul, unclean, or offensive. State v. Closser (Ind.), 99 N. E. 1057, 1060.

VISIBLE BUSINESS

The words "visible or lawful business" in Pen. Code, § 647, subd. 6, defining as a vagrant "Every person who wanders about the streets at late or unusual hours of the night without any visible or lawful business," are used in the sense of good and sufficient reason, and refer to the reason why he is roaming the street, rather than to any business or avocation in life from which support is derived. Ex parte McLaughlin, 116 Pac. 684, 685, 16 Cal. App. 270.

VISIBLE COMMENCEMENT OF WORK

Under the Pennsylvania mechanic's lien law (Act June 4, 1901 [P. L. 437] § 13), which provides that such liens, in case of original construction, relate back and take effect "as of the date of the visible commencement upon the ground of the work of building the structure or other improvement," the mere delivery of materials on the ground or the tearing down of the ruins of a previous building destroyed by fire to clear the ground is not sufficient to fix the date of the lien, but so much must be done of a permanent character, as by the making of a substantial part of the excavation for foundations, as will apprise observers that a building is in progress. Pusey & Jones v. Pennsylvania Paper Mills, 173 Fed. 634, 647.

VISIBLE MARK

Shrinkage of the muscles of insured's hip and leg, lameness of the leg and the breaking down of the bones in the hip joint, perceptible to a digital examination, sufficiently fulfilled a clause in an accident policy requiring a "visible mark of the injury" on insured's body. United States Casualty Co. v. Hanson, 79 Pac. 176, 177, 20 Colo. App. 393.

VISIBLE PERSONAL ESTATE

Raw material necessary for the manufacture of paper, paper in process of manufacture, and manufactured paper, being "visible personal estate," must under the act of March 19, 1891 (Pub. Laws 1891, p. 189), be assessed for taxes in the township, ward, or taxing district where the same is found. State v. Dalrymple, 28 Atl. 671, 673, 56 N. J. Law, 449.

VISIBLE RISK

See Open Visible Risk.

VISIBLE SIGN OF INJURY

"Visible signs of injury," within the meaning of an accident insurance policy, "are not to be confined to broken limbs or bruises on the surface of the body. There may be other external indications or evidences of an injury." Complaint of pain or internal soreness is not a visible sign. But if the internal injury produces, for example, a pale and sickly look in the face, if it causes vomiting and retching, or bloody and unnatural discharges from the bowels, if, in short, it sends forth to the observation of the eye, in the struggle of nature, any sign of injury, then those are external and visible signs, provided they are the direct result of the injury. Dezell v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 75 S. W. 1102, 1105, 176 Mo. 253 (quoting and adopting definition in Barry v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 23 Fed. 712, affirmed United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n v. Barry, 9 Sup. Ct. 755, 131 U. S. 100, 33 L. Ed. 60).

VISIT

VISITATION—VISITORIAL POWER

By "visitation" of a corporation is meant the act of examining into its affairs. The purpose of visitation is to supervise, direct, and control the management of the corporation. An application by a bona fide stockholder of a national bank to examine its books, accounts, and loans, etc., in order to determine the value of his stock, is not a "visitation" of the corporation, within Rev. St. U. S. § 241, providing that no national banking association shall be subject to any visitorial powers. Harkness v. Guthrie, 75 Pac. 624, 625, 27 Utah, 248, 107 Am. St. Rep. 664, 1 Ann. Cas. 129 (quoting Merrill, Mandamus, § 175).

"Visitation" is defined by Bouvier as "the act of examining into the affairs of a corporation." "The power of 'visitation' is applicable only to ecclesiastical and eleemosynary corporations. 1 Bl. Com. 480. The 'visitation' of civil corporations is by the government itself, through the medium of the courts of justice. See 2 Kent, Com. 240. In the United States, the Legislature is the visitor of all corporations founded by it for public purposes." "'Visitation,' in law, is the act of a superior or superintending officer, who visits a corporation to examine into its manner of conducting business, and enforce an observance of its laws and regulations. Burrill defines the word to mean 'inspection; superintendence; direction; regulation.'" Guthrie v. Harkness, 26 Sup. Ct. 4, 7, 199 U. S. 148, 50 L. Ed. 130, 4 Ann. Cas. 433.

The statutes are not an exercise of the "visitorial powers" prohibited by U. S. Rev. St. § 5241, providing that no association shall be subject to any visitorial powers, other than such as are authorized by the title on national banks, or are vested in the courts; the term "visitorial power," as there used, meaning power to control and arrest abuses and enforce due observance of the statutes, under section 5240, providing for the employment of bank examiners, authorized to examine the affairs of every banking association and make a report of the bank's condition to the controller. State v. First Nat. Bank of Portland, 123 Pac. 712, 714, 61 Or. 551.

VISITOR

A "visitor" is an inspector or judge (Whart. Law Lex. ad verbum; Bouv. Law Dict. ad verbum; Ency. of Laws of Eng. vol. 12, p. 483), and his visitation is a judicial visit or perambulation. When a charity rests upon a private endowment, the founder and his heirs become the legal "visitors," but the founder may delegate his power of visitation either generally or specially. No technical form of words is necessary for the appointment of either a general or special "visitor." MacKenzie v. Trustees of Presbytery of Jersey City, 61 Atl. 1027, 1033, 67 N. J. Eq. 652, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227.

VIVA VOCE

The term "viva voce," when applied to elections, is used in opposition or contradistinction to the ballot, and simply means that the voter shall declare himself by voice, instead of by ballot. In re Brearton, 89 N. Y. Supp. 893, 899, 44 Misc. Rep. 247.

VIVUM VADIUM

See Vadium Vivum.

VOCATION

As occupation, see Occupation (Vocation).

The word "occupation" is a generic term, and is that to which one's time and attention are habitually devoted, vocation, calling, trade, business, and a "vocation" is an employment, occupation, calling, trade, including professions as well as mechanical occupations. Village of Dodge v. Guidinger, 127 N. W. 122, 87 Neb. 349, 138 Am. St. Rep. 494.

VOID

See Invalid; Wholly Void.

A "void" thing is, in legal effect, no thing, and has no effect whatever. Russell v. First Nat. Bank of Hartselle, 56 South. 868, 871, 2 Ala. App. 342 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7332).

The phrase "of no effect," as used in rule 40 of the Supreme Court, providing that all rules, whether granted by the court or by a justice, shall be entered in the minutes within ten days, or in default thereof shall be "of no effect," is synonymous with "void." Mayor and Aldermen of Jersey City v. Davis, 76 Atl. 969, 80 N. J. Law, 609.

Where a court renders a judgment in excess of its powers, it is a nullity and void, and in such a case the jurisdiction or lack of it does not depend on any fact to be judicially ascertained by the court in connection with the trial of the case. In the matter of jurisdiction of the person, the fact of service must necessarily be judicially ascertained by the court, and, having adjudged it to have been done, the record is regular and may not be collaterally impeached. The rights acquired by a bona fide purchaser for value under an execution upon a judgment of a justice of the peace fair on its face will not be disturbed, though the judgment is invalid. Carpenter v. Anderson, 77 S. W. 291, 293, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 491.

A "void act" is neither a law nor a command. It is a nullity, conferring no authority and affording no protection, and whoever seeks to enforce such unconstitutional statute and justify an act thereunder must fail. Hopkins v. Clemson Agricultural College of South Carolina, 31 Sup. Ct. 654, 657, 221 U. S. 636, 644, 55 L. Ed. 890, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 243.

As used in an insurance policy, providing that it "shall be void" unless consent in writing is indorsed thereon by the company in certain instances, such as if the assured is not the sole and unconditional owner, the words "shall be void" can only be held to apply to such changes as arise after the policy has been delivered and accepted, and do not apply to an existing state or condition. This follows the construction in a similar case on the words in a policy "shall become void," and the difference in verbiage is not to be regarded as requiring a different construction. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Northern Assur. Co., 105 N. W. 76, 79, 142 Mich. 29.

Construed as voidable

It is rarely that things are wholly "void" and without force and effect as to all persons and for all purposes, and incapable of being made otherwise. Things are "voidable" which are valid and effectual until they are avoided by some act, while things are often said to be "void" which are without validity until confirmed. Toy Toy v. Hopkins, 29 Sup. Ct. 416, 417, 212 U. S. 542, 53 L. Ed. 644 (quoting and adopting the definition in 8 Bac. Abr., and citing Ewell v. Daggs, 2 Sup. Ct. 408, 108 U. S. 143, 27 L. Ed. 682; Weeks v. Bridgman, 16 Sup. Ct. 72, 74, 159 U. S. 541, 40 L. Ed. 253, 255; Louisville Trust Co. v. Comings, 22 Sup. Ct. 293, 296, 184 U. S. 18, 25, 46 L. Ed. 413, 416).

While there is a distinction between the words "void" and "voidable," which may often be important, yet the word "void" is often used in the sense of "voidable." Whatever may be avoided may in good sense be called "void." In re Silkman, 105 N. Y. Supp. 872, 873, 121 App. Div. 202.

The statutes have often used the word "void" where it meant "voidable"; ground or cause for making void. Woodcock v. Bolster, 35 Vt. 632, 636.

The term "void" is an indefinite expression, having no fixed meaning, what is "voidable" often being called "void," it being a common practice of Legislatures and courts to use the words interchangeably, where the distinction is not material in the particular case; but strictly the word "void" means "of no legal force or effect whatever, null and incapable of confirmation or ratification," and where it is used to secure a right or confer a benefit on property it will, as a rule, be held to have such meaning, but if used respecting the rights of individuals capable of protecting themselves it will often be held to mean only "voidable." Southern Nat. Ins. Co. of Austin v. Barr (Tex.) 148 S. W. 845, 846 (quoting and adopting the definition in 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7334).

Where a contract for the sale of onion seed contained a provision that, if the seller found that identical contracts did not exist between the buyer and certain other growers, the contract should become void, such provision was for the sole benefit of the seller, and a breach thereof only rendered the contract void at the seller's election, and it was incumbent upon them, as soon as they ascertained the facts upon which they could exercise such election, to determine whether they would abide by its terms, or treat it as null, and notify the buyer of their election. Bernard v. Sloan, 84 Pac. 232-234, 2 Cal. App. 737.

The words "void" and "invalid," when used in regard to contracts not immoral or against public policy, usually mean voidable at the option of one of the parties or some one legally interested therein. Doney v. Laughlin, 94 N. E. 1027, 1028, 50 Ind. App. 38 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 7334, 7335).

Where a contract is expressly declared void by statute, or where the law declares the making of the contract a misdemeanor, or imposes a penalty upon the parties to the contract for the act of contracting, there is no doubt of the general rule of law that the courts will neither enforce that contract at the suit of one party, nor, if the contract has been executed, aid either party to recover back anything he may have paid thereon.

Where the contract is declared "void" by statute, and the statute is within the power of the Legislature to enact, there is not much room for discussion, although even then the whole purview of the statute may indicate that the word "void" is used in the sense of "voidable." Where the statute does not expressly declare the contract void, but prohibits by penalty the making thereof, the courts infer a legislative intent that the contract shall be void, because to enforce the contract would practically set the statute at naught. But these rules do not obtain where the contract itself is not prohibited by law, but is declared to be void because not made or evidenced in the manner prescribed by law, or where the contract is declared void by law as to one party in order to protect the other against injustice or oppression. Laun v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. of California, 111 N. W. 660, 661, 131 Wis. 555, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1204.

Same—Assignments for benefit of creditors

The word "void," as used in a statute relating to making general assignments by debtors for the benefit of creditors null and void as against creditors, means nothing more than inoperative or voidable. Though a conveyance was, as between the parties, within the statute providing that all fraudulent conveyances shall be "null and void," the fraudulent grantee having conveyed the property to a third person, who was not made a party to a suit by creditors of the vendor to subject the land to their claims, he was not bound by a decree in favor of complainant. Tudor v. Tudor, 67 Atl. 539, 540, 80 Vt. 220, 130 Am. St. Rep. 977 (citing and adopting Merrill v. Englesby, 28 Vt. 150).

The term "void" is often employed in statutes and judicial writings to characterize acts which are void as to some persons or for some purposes, and valid as to other persons and purposes, or to acts which are not absolutely void, but only voidable, and which may be ratified or confirmed. Under Rev. St. § 1094, which declares that an assignment for the benefit of creditors, which is wanting in any of the essential requisites prescribed by statute, shall be void as to the assignor's creditors, an assignment which has been declared void at the suit of one creditor, because the court commissioner failed to indorse on the assignee's bond his approval thereof, does not thereby become invalid as to the assignor's other creditors. Boynton Furnace Co. v. Sorensen, 50 N. W. 773, 774, 80 Wis. 594 (citing State v. Richmond, 26 N. H. 232).

Same—Attorney's fee in note

Although the statute declares that obligations in notes to pay attorney's fees are void, the word "void" is to be construed as more nearly the equivalent of "voidable," since the statute allows such promise to be enforced on certain terms. Browne v. Edwards, 50 S. E. 110, 122 Ga. 277.

Same—Contract to convey

The word "void," as used in a contract to convey, in a provision that if a balance of the price be not paid on a specified date the amount paid is to be forfeited and the contract is to be "void," means voidable at the vendor's election. Stewart v. Griffith, 30 Sup. Ct. 528, 529, 217 U. S. 323, 54 L. Ed. 782, 19 Ann. Cas. 639; Jersey City v. Davis, 76 Atl. 969, 80 N. J. Law, 609.

Same—Conveyances

Though, with certain exceptions, Const. art. 2, § 33, makes conveyances of land to aliens void, where plaintiff conveyed land to an alien for a valuable consideration, he divested himself of all title to the property, since the word "void" is construed as meaning voidable. Abrams v. State, 88 Pac. 327, 332, 45 Wash. 327, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 186, 122 Am. St. Rep. 914, 13 Ann. Cas. 527.

Same—Discharge of administrator

The construction to be placed upon Civ. Code 1895, § 3511 (which declares that a discharge obtained by an administrator "by means of any fraud practiced on the heirs or ordinary is void, and may be set aside on motion and proof of the fraud"), is that while the judgment of the court of ordinary discharging an administrator is open to attack on the ground that it was fraudulently procured, it is to be deemed "void" only when, in a proceeding to set it aside, the proof shows it was secured by practicing a fraud upon the heirs at law or upon the ordinary. Read in connection with the context, the term "void" is to be understood as the equivalent of "voidable." The provisions of this section of the Code do not alter the cardinal rule that a judgment rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction and regular upon its face is to be deemed conclusive until it is duly set aside, either on motion in the court in which it was rendered or in an equitable proceeding instituted in the superior court. Summerlin v. Floyd, 53 S. E. 452, 124 Ga. 980.

Same—Fraudulent conveyance

The word "void," in St. 1898, § 2320, making conveyances in fraud of creditors void, means voidable. Hyman v. Landry, 116 N. W. 236, 237, 135 Wis. 598, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1044.

A deed made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, which is declared "void" by Rev. St. 1895, art. 2544, is voidable only, and the land cannot be recovered from the grantee or his successor in title without first procuring a decree setting it aside by action for that purpose. Rutherford v. Carr (Tex.) 84 S. W. 659, 660 (citing Stephens v. Adair, 18 S. W. 102, 82 Tex. 214; Robb v. Robb [Tex.] 41 S. W. 92; Stockbridge v. Crockett, 38 S. W. 401, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 69; Groesbeck v. Crow, 20 S. W. 49, 85 Tex. 200; Miller v. Koertge, 7 S. W. 691, 70 Tex. 185, 8 Am. St. Rep. 587).

Gen. St. 1894, § 4227, declaring "void" transfers for the purpose of hindering and defrauding creditors, must be construed as rendering such conveyances voidable only at the election of creditors. Lucy v. Freeman, 101 N. W. 167, 168, 93 Minn. 274.

Same—Infant's contract

The courts of this state, and very generally, construe infants' contracts as "voidable," and not "void." What confusion exists on the subject has arisen from a careless use of the words "void" and "voidable." An infant's contract might be void for reasons that would render a contract of an adult void. But the better reasoning supports the rule that no contract of an infant is void because of his nonage, but all such contracts are voidable only, except contracts for necessities, and such contracts as he may make by statutory authority, which are binding. Shroyer v. Pittenger, 67 N. E. 475, 476, 31 Ind. App. 158.

Same—Insurance policy

The term "void," is often used in the sense of "voidable," so that, although an insurance policy be conditioned to be "void" in certain cases, it may be construed to be only "voidable" at the option of the insured. German Ins. Co. of Freeport, Ill., v. Shader, 93 N. W. 972, 975, 68 Neb. 1, 60 L. R. A. 918 (citing Hanover Fire Ins. Co. v. Dole, 50 N. E. 772, 20 Ind. App. 333; Kalmutz v. Northern Mut. Ins. Co., 40 Atl. 816, 186 Pa. 571; Schmurr v. State Ins. Co., 46 Pac. 363, 30 Or. 29; Horton v. Home Ins. Co., 29 S. E. 944, 122 N. C. 498, 65 Am. St. Rep. 717; Stevenson v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 83 Ky. 7, 4 Am. St. Rep. 120; Kingman v. Lancashire Ins. Co., 32 S. E. 762, 54 S. C. 599; Bouton v. American Mut. Life Ins. Co., 25 Conn. 542).

The word "void," as used in an application for benefit life insurance, providing that the certificate should be "void" in case of misrepresentation, means voidable at the election of the insurer. Modern Woodmen of America v. Vincent, 80 N. E. 427, 428, 82 N. E. 475, 40 Ind. App. 711, 14 Ann. Cas. 89.

A provision of an insurance policy issued by a mutual fire insurance company organized under the laws of this state, and of the by-laws of the company attached to such policy, to the effect that the procuring of additional insurance upon the property covered shall render the policy void, unless the written consent of the company be indorsed on the policy, are waived by the failure of the company either to cancel the policy or to indorse its consent within a reasonable time after notice to it of the additional insurance, and before loss occurs. The term "void," as used in the contract, is to be regarded as meaning that the insurer had, at its exclusive option, the right to treat the policy as a nullity. Swedish-American Ins. Co. v. Knutson, 72 Pac. 526, 527, 67 Kan. 71, 100 Am. St. Rep. 382.

Where the words of a policy are that the insurance shall be "void" if the premises insured be and remain vacant longer than ten days without the consent of the insurer, the meaning is simply that if a loss occurs during the prohibited vacancy the policy is void, and it does not mean that the policy shall be "absolutely void," so as to the result in a forfeiture of the insurance in case of a temporary vacancy for a reasonable period beyond the ten days. Athens Mut. Ins. Co. v. Toney, 57 S. E. 1013, 1015, 1 Ga. App. 492.

The word "void," as applied to contracts, has been given different meanings. A contract may be void in the sense of being illegal; that is, prohibited by law and incapable of ratification and enforcement. It may also in some connections be construed as merely meaning voidable; that is, in force and effect until repudiated by the affirmative act of the party, but it may also be void in the sense of being merely ineffective, of no force and effect, and this is the meaning attached to the words as used in a contract of insurance providing that if the applicant for insurance had made false statements in his application it was null and void. Taylor v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. of Minnesota, 105 N. W. 408, 410, 96 Minn. 441, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 114.

A provision of a policy of insurance, declaring the same "void" in case the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership in fee simple, in effect renders the policy voidable, instead of absolutely "void," in the contingency specified, and requires the insurer, in case the insured's title is not one in fee simple, to act promptly on discovery of that fact and notify the insured of its decision to avoid the policy, and tender or manifest its willingness to restore the unearned premium, or the provision will be deemed to have been waived by it. Glens Falls Ins. Co. v. Michael,

Same—Issue of corporate stock

Under St. 1898, § 1753, providing that stock issued by a corporation, except in consideration of money or its equivalent, to the amount of the par value of the stock, shall be void, the word "void" was not used in the sense that corporate stock, issued in violation of the provisions of the section, cannot be validated by subsequently paying full consideration therefor, in view of sections 1751, 1754, and 1756, providing for collecting the difference between the amount paid and the face value of the stock issued. Haynes v. Kenosha St. Ry. Co., 119 N. W. 568, 572, 139 Wis. 227.

Same—Judgment

The statement of the court in Matter of Leggat, 56 N. E. 1009, 162 N. Y. 437, and People ex rel. Asmus v. Melody, 86 N. Y. Supp. 837, 91 App. Div. 570, to the effect that a discharge of a judgment debtor from custody on a writ of habeas corpus, without notice to the judgment debtor's creditors, "was without jurisdiction, and the order made in the premises was 'void' and should have been vacated," must be taken as meaning that there was an irregularity requiring reversal of judgment, and not that the judgment was "void"; and the statement of the court in the Leggat Case that, because of the failure to serve the parties in interest, the court had no "jurisdiction of the subject-matter," may have been made to distinguish, instead of to overrule, the case of Savacool v. Boughton (N. Y.) 5 Wend. 171, commented on in 21 Am. Dec. 181. A judgment may be "void" as to the parties, and valid for the purpose of protecting the ministerial officers, where the court issuing process on the judgment had "jurisdiction of the subject-matter," and nothing appears on the face of the process to apprise the officer that the court was without jurisdiction of the person. Levy v. Melody, 99 N. Y. Supp. 153, 156, 50 Misc. Rep. 509 (citing Murfree, Sheriffs, § 101a; Savacool v. Boughton [N. Y.] 5 Wend. 170, 21 Am. Dec. 181; Young v. Stone, 53 N. Y. Supp. 656, 33 App. Div. 268; Welles v. Thornton [N. Y.] 45 Barb. 393; Porter v. Purdy, 29 N. Y. 106, 113, 86 Am. Dec. 283; Kerr v. Mount, 28 N. Y. 659; Roderigas v. East River Sav. Inst., 76 N. Y. 316, 32 Am. Rep. 309).

Same—Mining location notice

Rev. St. 1901, par. 3241, describes the manner in which the relocation of a forfeited or abandoned lode claim shall be made, and declares that the location notice shall state if the whole or any part of the new location is located as abandoned property, else it shall be "void." Held, that the word "void" meant voidable, and that a location notice, defective in that it failed to state that the claim was located in whole or in part as an abandoned claim, might be amended to comply with the statute, in the absence of any intervening rights. The word "void" in its strictest sense means that which, has no force or effect, and is defined in the Century Dictionary as "without legal efficacy; incapable of being enforced by law; having no legal or binding force." But the courts very generally have refused to accept this narrower, stricter construction, and frequently construed it as used in the sense of voidable. Kinney v. Lundy, 89 Pac. 496, 498, 11 Ariz. 75.

Same—Note

A note given to and accepted by an investment company for the first rate installment on an investment bond stipulating for annual payments for a specified period, delivered to and retained by the maker of the note, is enforceable after maturity at its election, though it stipulates in event of non-payment at maturity the bond shall be void; the word "void" meaning voidable at its election. Pacific Northwest Inv. Society v. Cunningham, 103 Pac. 9, 10, 54 Wash. 294.

Same—Organization of corporation

The words "void," "void and of no effect," and "null and void," are often used in statutes and legal documents in the sense of voidable merely—that is, capable of being avoided—and not as meaning that the act or transaction is absolutely a nullity, as if it never had existed, incapable of giving rise to any rights or obligations under any circumstances. Code 1896, § 1286, provides that no certificate of incorporation shall issue when the corporate name assumed is that of a person or firm, unless there be joined thereto some name designating the business to be carried on, followed by the word "company" or "corporation," and if any corporation shall fail to comply with this qualification its organization is void. Section 1282 provides that, when any corporation fails to comply with the requirements of the statute in its organization, the failure may be remedied by filing with the probate judge who issued the certificate of incorporation a statement setting forth the omission and supplying the same. Failure of a corporation to comply with the qualifications of section 1286, by inserting the word designating the business to be carried on, did not render its incorporation "void," but "voidable" only, such being the evident import of the two sections of Code 1896, which are pari materia. State ex rel. Thompson v. Collas, 43 South. 190, 191, 192, 150 Ala. 515 (citing Ewell v. Daggs, 2 Sup. Ct. 408, 108 U. S. 148, 27 L. Ed. 682; Inskeep v. Lecony, 1 N. J. Law, 112; Matter of New York & L. I. Bridge Co., 42 N. E. 1088, 148 N. Y. 540; Columbia & P. S. R. Co. v. Brailard, 40 Pac. 382, 12 Wash. 22; Van Shaack v. Robbins, 36 Iowa, 201; Rhein v. Union Depot, etc., Co., 17 N. W. 623, 31 Minn. 289; Brown v. Brown, 50 N. H. 538, 552).

Same—Preference by insolvent

"Under the bankrupt act of 1867, a preference to a creditor was declared to be void, while in the act of 1898 it is declared to be voidable. It seems to us that the word 'void' in the act of 1867 must be held to be used in the sense of voidable, and not void. A preference under the act of 1867 was good, not only between the parties, but as to all the world, unless judicial proceedings were brought by the assignee under that act to avoid it. If no suit was brought, the preference in the hands of the party preferred could not be assailed by the creditors of the bankrupt, or by any other person." Capital Nat. Bank v. Wilkerson, 75 N. E. 837, 838, 36 Ind. App. 467.

Same—Sale by administrator

Though St. 1898, § 3914, provides that a purchase by an administrator at his own sale, directly or indirectly, shall be void, such a sale vests legal title, which can only be divested in a proper action, brought within proper time, by one entitled to challenge the validity of the sale; the word "void," as used in the statute, meaning "voidable." Keilly v. Severson, 135 N. W. 875, 876, 149 Wis. 251.

Comp. St. Neb. c. 23, § 85, relating to administrator's sales, provides that the executor or administrator making the sale and the guardian of any minor heir of the deceased shall not directly or indirectly purchase or be interested in the purchase of any part of the real estate so sold, and all sales made contrary to the provisions of this section shall be void. Held that, as construed by the Supreme Court of Nebraska, the word "void" employed therein meant voidable at the suit of any proper party in interest. Burns v. Cooper, 140 Fed. 273, 278, 72 C. C. A. 25 (citing Veeder v. McKinley-Lanning Loan & Trust Co., 86 N. W. 982, 61 Neb. 892).

Same—Sale under deed of trust

A sale under a power in a deed of trust, made after the death of the grantor or mortgagor, and before the expiration of the four years within which administration might be begun, but where no administration had been begun, was valid, and passed the title to the lands conveyed, subject only to be set aside by an administration for the payment of such preferred claims as might have existed under the law at the time, and is not invalid or void, nor in a state of suspense, except as subject to such administration; the terms "invalid" and "void," sometimes applied to such trust deeds, meaning nothing more than ineffectual to pass title; the term "void" being seldom regarded as implying a complete nullity, but as being, in a legal sense, and under certain circumstances, subject to qualification. Wiener v. Zweib, 141 S. W. 771, 777, 105 Tex. 262.

Contracts

A "void contract" is in fact no contract, since an instrument of that nature does not alter the relations previously existing between the contracting parties, nor will it serve as the foundation of any right. Allen v. City of Davenport, 132 Fed. 209, 216, 65 C. C. A. 641.

"Strictly speaking, 'void' means without legal efficacy; ineffectual to bind parties, or to convey or support a right." A contract which is illegal as contrary to public policy is absolutely void, and may be attacked by any one, and in any proceeding in which it is sought to found rights thereon. A sale by a telephone company of its property and franchises is contrary to public policy and void, in the absence of legislative authority. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Evansville, 127 Fed. 187, 197.

The word "void," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 3739, declaring that all contracts or agreements made in violation of the section shall be void (the section providing that no member of Congress shall directly or indirectly make, hold, or enjoy any contract entered into in behalf of the United States), is obviously used in the sense of null or of no effect from the beginning, and not admitting of ratification. It is not intended to say that contracts or agreements made in violation of the statute shall be only voidable, or that they shall be only capable of being avoided, at the election of some officer of the government. This statute applies to a contract made between the United States and one who was not at the time a member of Congress, and who became such while the contract was still executory in whole or in part, and in such a case, on his becoming a member, the contract was dissolved, and his obligation to further perform it and his right to enjoy further benefit from it were terminated by operation of law. United States v. Dietrich, 126 Fed. 671, 674.

A note which is "void" in its inception on account of usury continues void forever, whatever may be its subsequent history. It is void in the hands of an innocent purchaser for value, since no validity can be given to it by sale or exchange. Schlesinger v. Kelly, 99 N. Y. Supp. 1083, 1086, 114 App. Div. 546 (citing Clafin v. Boorum, 25 N. E. 360, 122 N. Y. 385).

The term "void" can only accurately be applied to those contracts that have no effect whatsoever and which are mere nullities, such as those which are against law, illegal, criminal, or in contravention of law and incapable of confirmation or ratification; hence a married woman's deed defectively acknowledged is not void. Downs v. Blount, 170 Fed. 15, 22, 95 C. C. A. 289, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1076.

A contract growing out of the unlicensed practice of medicine denounced by Comp. St. art. 1, c. 55, is not a "void contract," where not specifically declared to be such by the statute. Citizens' State Bank of Newman Grove v. Nore, 93 N. W. 160, 161, 67 Neb. 69, 60 L. R. A. 737, 2 Ann. Cas. 604 (citing Columbia Bank & Bridge Co. v. Haldeman [Pa.] 7 Watts & S. 233, 42 Am. Dec. 229; Holt v. Green, 73 Pa. 198, 13 Am. Rep. 737; Johnston v. McConnell, 65 Ga. 129; Conley v. Sims, 71 Ga. 161; Smith v. Columbus State Bank, 1 N. W. 893, 9 Neb. 31; Kittle v. De Lamater, 3 Neb. 325; Wortendyke v. Meehan, 2 N. W. 339, 9 Neb. 221).

"A 'void contract' is one destitute of legal effect. It is a mere nullity, and good for no purpose whatever. It is binding upon neither party, and may be attacked as invalid by strangers. It does not require any disaffirmance to avoid it, but may be simply disregarded, and it cannot be ratified and made valid." Conditions printed on the back of a pass, which was void because in violation of Laws 1891, p. 277, c. 320, § 4, forbidding discrimination, have no application in an action by the holder of the pass against the railroad company for injuries received while riding on the pass. McNeill v. Durham & C. R. Co., 47 S. E. 765, 766, 135 N. C. 682, 67 L. R. A. 227 (quoting and adopting the definition in Lawson, Cont. § 350).

Married woman's deed

The term "void" can only accurately be applied to those contracts that have no effect whatsoever and which are mere nullities, such as those which are against law, illegal, criminal, or in contravention of law and incapable of confirmation or ratification; hence a married woman's deed defectively acknowledged is not void. Downs v. Blount, 170 Fed. 15, 22, 95 C. C. A. 289, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1076.

Null synonyms

See Null and Void.

Voidable distinguished

A void contract is one which offends against public law or policy, or is without the scope of proper authority, and a contract of a municipal corporation authorized by an irregular resolution is not "void," but simply "voidable." Aspinwall-Delafield Co. v. Borough of Aspinwall, 77 Atl. 1098, 1100, 229 Pa. 1.

The word "void" is so often used in the sense of "voidable" as to have almost lost its primary meaning. It is often used even by legal writers and jurists, where the purpose is nothing further than to indicate that a contract is invalid and not binding in law. The distinction between "void" and "voidable" in their application to contracts is sometimes one of practical importance. When entire technical accuracy is desired, the term "void" can be properly applied only to those contracts that are of no effect whatsoever, mere nullities, such, for example, as are against the law, illegal, or criminal, or in contravention of that which the law requires, and therefore incapable of confirmation or ratification. Haggart v. Wilczinski, 143 Fed. 22, 27, 74 C. C. A. 176.

It is rarely that things are wholly "void" and without force and effect as to all persons and for all purposes, and incapable of being made otherwise. Things are "voidable" which are valid and effectual until they are avoided by some act; while things are often said to be "void" which are without validity until confirmed. Toy Toy v. Hopkins, 29 Sup. Ct. 416, 417, 212 U. S. 542, 53 L. Ed. 644 (citing 8 Bac. Abr.; Ewell v. Daggs, 2 Sup. Ct. 408, 108 U. S. 143, 27 L. Ed. 682; Weeks v. Bridgman, 16 Sup. Ct. 72, 74, 159 U. S. 541, 40 L. Ed. 253, 255; Louisville Trust Co. v. Cominger, 22 Sup. Ct. 293, 296, 184 U. S. 18, 25, 46 L. Ed. 413, 416).

In a strict legal sense, "void" means without force or effect, something that does not bind or conclude anybody, or serve to convey or divest a right; while "voidable" means that which has some force or effect, but which may be set aside or annulled for some error or inherent vice or defect. The word "void" is frequently used in statutes, contracts, and other instruments without regard to its strict legal signification, and is not infrequently used in judicial opinions without a special regard to its strict sense and the distinction between it and "voidable," where the subject-matter does not necessarily demand exactness of definition or limitation. Briscoe v. Macfarland, 32 App. D. C. 167, 172.

The words "void" and "voidable" are often loosely used, and much confusion has resulted therefrom. "Void" is so frequently employed in the sense of "voidable" as to have lost its primary significance; and, when it is found in a statute, judicial opinion, or contract, it is generally necessary to resort to the subject-matter or context to determine precisely the meaning given to the word. Capps v. Hensley, 100 Pac. 515, 518, 23 Okl. 311.

There is a vast difference between the two words "void" and "voidable," or the two situations they describe. It is true that there are decided cases and instances where text-writers use the two words interchangeably; but, when attention is called to the distinction between them and the difference in the consequences which result from the conditions they stand for, it is believed there can be but one opinion. A voidable contract is valid until avoided. While a defrauded party to an ordinary contract may rescind, and the parties may voluntarily place themselves in their former position, rescission of marriage must be pronounced by a competent court. Jordan v. Missouri & K. Telephone Co., 116 S. W. 432, 433, 136 Mo. App. 192.

A sale to the sheriff of land sold by him to satisfy a judgment enforcing a lien for street improvements is a nullity when attacked, within a reasonable time, by the owner of the land, seeking to redeem it from the sale; the word "void" meaning a nullity, as distinguished from the meaning of the word "voidable," meaning that which may be avoided at the suit of an interested party, subject to ratification by lapse of time or acceptance of benefits. Miller v. Winslow, 126 Pac. 906, 907, 70 Wash. 401.

VOID AB INITIO

A contract "void ab initio" is one that never went into effect. In re Millers' & Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 106 N. W. 485, 493, 97 Minn. 98.

VOID AND OF NO EFFECT

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1511, 1512, 1514, declaring what acts shall excuse performance, and providing that, where performance is prevented by the creditor, the debtor is entitled to all the benefits which he would have obtained if the obligation had been performed by both parties, etc., a provision in a contract for the sale and purchase of a designated quantity of oil, as ordered by the buyer from month to month, that a violation thereof shall render the agreement "void and of no effect," only means that a party, by violating the contract, loses his rights under it, but the contract remains in force to protect the rights of the other party, who may maintain an action for damages for such violation. Central Oil Co. of Los Angeles v. Southern Refining Co., 97 Pac. 177, 154 Cal. 165.

The words "void and of no effect," are "often used in statutes and legal documents * * * in the sense of voidable merely—that is, capable of being avoided—and not as meaning that the act or transaction is absolutely a nullity, as if it never had existed, incapable of giving rise to any rights or obligations under any circumstances." Code 1896, § 1286, provides that no certificate of incorporation shall issue when the corporate name assumed is that of a person or firm, unless there be joined thereto some name designating the business to be carried on, followed by the word "company" or "corporation," and if any corporation shall fail to comply with this qualification its organization is void. Section 1282 provides that, when any corporation fails to comply with the requirements of the statute in its organization, the failure may be remedied by filing with the probate judge who issued the certificate of incorporation a statement setting forth the omission and supplying the same. Failure of a corporation to comply with the qualifications of section 1286, by inserting the word designating the business to be carried on, did not render its incorporation "void," but "voidable" only; such being the evident import of the two sections of Code 1896, which are pari materia. State ex rel. Thompson v. Collas, 43 South. 190, 191, 192, 150 Ala. 515 (citing Ewell v. Daggs, 2 Sup. Ct. 408, 108 U. S. 148, 27 L. Ed. 682; Inskeep v. Lacony, 1 N. J. Law, 112; Matter of New York & L. I. Bridge Co., 42 N. E. 1088, 148 N. Y. 540; Columbia & P. S. R. Co. v. Brailard, 40 Pac. 382, 12 Wash. 22; Van Shaack v. Robbins, 36 Iowa, 201; Rheiner v. Union Depot, etc., Co., 17 N. W. 623, 31 Minn. 289; Brown v. Brown, 50 N. H. 538, 552).

VOID AS TO CREDITORS

Laws 1909, c. 69, § 1, relating to sales of merchandise in bulk, provides that the sale in bulk of any part or the whole of a stock of merchandise otherwise than in the ordinary and regular course of the seller's business shall be fraudulent and void as against the seller's creditors, unless the purchaser demands a list of the creditors, and notifies each of them five days before taking possession. Held, that the phrase "fraudulent and void as to creditors" relates to attaching creditors seeking to set aside the sale, and that the word "void" means "voidable," and, under the statute as so construed, a creditor cannot charge the purchaser of a stock of goods in violation of the act as trustee of the vendor for the value of the goods. MacGreenery v. Murphy, 82 Atl. 720, 721, 76 N. H. 338, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 374.

The sales in bulk act declares that a sale in violation thereof shall be "void" as to creditors, provided that no proceedings at law or in equity shall be brought against the purchaser to invalidate such "voidable" sale after 90 days from the consummation thereof. Held, that the word "void" was used in the sense of voidable, and that the sale was a nullity only when attacked by creditors within the prescribed period. Dickinson v. Harbison, 72 Atl. 941, 942, 78 N. J. Law, 97.

St. 1903, p. 389, c. 415, provides that the sale in bulk of any part or the whole of a stock of merchandise otherwise than in the ordinary course of trade and in the regular and usual prosecution of the seller's business shall be fraudulent and "void" as against creditors of the seller, unless the seller and purchaser make a full inventory of the goods and the purchaser notifies all the creditors of the seller at least five days before taking possession of the merchandise. Held that the term "void" is not used in its strict technical sense, but the Legislature intended, in view of the subject-matter of the statute, the condition of the law prior to its passage, and the abuse which it aims to correct, to place the kind of sale named in the statute in the class theretofore existing as fraudulent, and for that reason voidable by creditors, unless the conditions prescribed were complied with. Kelly-Buckley Co. v. Cohen, 81 N. E. 297-299, 195 Mass. 585 (citing Squire & Co. v. Teller, 69 N. E. 312, 185 Mass. 18, 102 Am. St. Rep. 322).

A mortgage of a stock in trade executed by a debtor to his creditor which authorizes the mortgagor to remain in possession, and sell the stock in the usual course of business, without obligating himself to apply the proceeds to the payment of the debt, is constructively fraudulent, and "void" as to other creditors, within Rev. St. Mo. 1909, §§ 2880, 2881, declaring that any conveyance in trust for the use of person making it or with intent to defraud creditors is void as to creditors, but, in the absence of actual fraud, the constructive fraud is purged by the mortgagee taking possession before the other creditors seize the property or take any action to enforce their rights to it. Johansen Bros. Shoe Co. v. Alles, 197 Fed. 274, 277, 116 C. C. A. 636.

VOID BALLOT

Election Law (Consol. Laws, c. 17) § 368, rule 9, providing that a "void ballot" is a ballot upon which there shall be found any mark other than a single X mark made for the purpose of voting, and section 358, rule 7, providing that one straight line crossing another straight line at any angle within a party circle or within the voting spaces shall be deemed a "valid voting mark," should be liberally construed, so that a tremulous line drawn by an infirm elector, or an irregular or curved line drawn by an elector with poor eyesight, or with muscles untrained to the use of a pencil, or any single line but once crossing another single line in such a way as to substantially comply with the statute, though the line has been retraced and the pencil has not been kept exactly on the line at parts removed from the point where the lines cross, should not be held void. Fallon v. Dwyer, 90 N. E. 942, 943, 197 N. Y. 336.

VOID IF DETACHED

A condition, "Void if detached," etc., in railway coupon tickets, must be reasonably construed to avoid injustice to either party, and the holder cannot be denied passage merely because the ticket had been inadvertently detached, if both book and ticket are presented, and it can be seen by inspection that they correspond. Fairfield v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 48 South. 513, 514, 94 Miss. 887, 136 Am. St. Rep. 611, 19 Ann. Cas. 456.

VOID JUDGMENT

"A 'void judgment' is in legal effect no judgment. By it no rights are divested. From it no rights can be obtained. Being worthless in itself, all proceedings founded upon it are equally worthless. It neither binds nor bars any one. All acts performed under it, and all claims flowing out of it, are void. The parties attempting to enforce it may be responsible as trespassers." State ex rel. Reed v. Gormley, 82 Pac. 929, 930, 40 Wash. 601, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 256, 5 Ann. Cas.

856; In re Killan's Estate, 65 N. E. 561, 562, 172 N. Y. 547, 63 L. R. A. 95 (quoting and adopting statement in 1 Freem. Judgm. [4th Ed.] § 117); Cook v. Edson Keith & Co., 82 S. W. 918, 919, 5 Ind. T. 595 (quoting Freem. Judgm. [3d Ed.] § 117).

"The first and most material inquiry in relation to a judgment or decree is in reference to its validity, for, if it be null, no inaction upon the part of the defendant, no resulting equity in the hands of third persons, no power residing in any legislative or other department of the government, can invest it with any of the elements of power or of validity." A default judgment against an infant who has been personally served is voidable only. Cook v. Edson Keith & Co., 82 S. W. 918, 919, 5 Ind. T. 595 (quoting Freem. Judgm.).

A judgment of a court of general jurisdiction cannot be attacked, except in a direct proceeding, unless it is void; and under the weight of authority, when jurisdiction has been obtained by service of process, all subsequent proceedings are an exercise of jurisdiction, and, however erroneous, they are not "void," but voidable only, and not subject to collateral attack. People v. McKelvey, 74 Pac. 533, 534, 19 Colo. App. 131 (quoting and adopting the definition in Brown v. Tucker, 1 Pac. 221, 7 Colo. 30).

"A 'void judgment' is in reality no judgment at all. It is a mere nullity. It is attended by none of the consequences of a valid adjudication, nor is it entitled to the respect accorded to one. It can neither affect, impair, or create rights. As to the person against whom it professes to be rendered it binds him in no degree whatever. It has no effect as a lien upon his property. It does not raise an estoppel against him. As to the person in whose favor it professes to be, it places him in no better position than he occupied before. It gives him no new right, but an attempt to enforce it will place him in peril." A proceeding to revive a dormant judgment is not a proceeding to breathe life into that which was dead. It is rather a proceeding to awaken that which is asleep. In the instant case the judgment was void. It never possessed any vitality, and it was impossible to impart any vitality to it by revivor proceedings. Minn. Thresher Mfg. Co. v. L'Heureux, 118 N. W. 565, 566, 82 Neb. 692 (quoting and adopting 1 Black, Judgm. § 170, and citing and adopting Rice v. Allen, 95 N. W. 704, 69 Neb. 349, 355).

"The word 'void' can with no propriety be applied to a thing which appears to be sound, and which, while in existence, can command and enforce respect, and whose infirmity cannot be made manifest. If a judgment rendered without in fact bringing the defendants into court cannot be attacked collaterally on this ground unless the want of authority over them appears in the record, it is no more void than if it were founded upon a mere misconception of some matter of law or of fact occurring in the exercise of an unquestionable jurisdiction. In either case the judgment can be avoided and made functus officio by some appropriate proceeding instituted for that purpose; but, if not so avoided, must be respected and enforced." Dunn v. Taylor, 94 S. W. 347, 349, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 241 (quoting and adopting the definition in Freem. Judgm. § 116).

The words "void" and "voidable," as applied to judgments, do not denote different degrees of faultiness, but are a classification based upon the source from which the evidence comes to show the fault, and generally dependent on the method of attack; the judgment being void and subject to collateral attack if the record proper discloses that the court was without jurisdiction, but merely voidable and subject only to direct attack where the record shows jurisdictional facts which are untrue, but does not show want of jurisdiction. Kavanagh v. Hamilton, 125 Pac. 512, 515, 53 Colo. 157.

VOID PROCESS

"Void process" is an absolute nullity from the beginning, and is not amendable. Roy v. Phelps, 75 Atl. 13, 14, 83 Vt. 174.

"Void process" is defined to be such as is issued without power in the court to award it, or which the court has not acquired jurisdiction to issue in the particular case, or which fails in some material respect to comply with the requisite form of legal process. "Irregular process" is such as a court has general jurisdiction to issue, but which is unauthorized in the particular case, by reason of the existence or nonexistence of some fact or circumstance rendering it improper in such a case. Jochem v. Cooley, 176 Fed. 719, 722, 100 C. C. A. 155.

VOID TAX SALE

A "void sale" for taxes is no sale, and the purchaser acquires no rights. Beggs v. Paine, 109 N. W. 322, 332, 15 N. D. 436.

VOID UNDERTAKING

A "void undertaking" is nothing—a mere nullity; and hence, where a single appeal bond is given to support separate appeals, instead of a separate bond for each appeal, as required by statute, the bond was wholly void, and not merely insufficient, and hence not within a statute providing that no appeal shall be dismissed for insufficiency of the undertaking, if a sufficient undertaking be filed before the hearing on motion to dismiss. Pirrie v. Moule, 81 Pac. 390, 391, 33 Mont. 1.

VOIDABLE

Things are "voidable" which are valid and effectual until they are avoided by some act. Toy Toy v. Hopkins, 29 Sup. Ct. 416, 417, 212 U. S. 542, 53 L. Ed. 644 (quoting and adopting the definition in 8 Bac. Abr.).

The phrase "of no effect," as used in rule 40 of the Supreme Court, providing that all rules, whether granted by the court or by a justice, shall be entered in the minutes within ten days, and in default thereof shall be "of no effect," is not synonymous with "voidable." Mayor and Aldermen of Jersey City v. Davis, 76 Atl. 969, 80 N. J. Law, 609.

The words "void" and "voidable," as applied to judgments, do not denote different degrees of faultiness, but are a classification based upon the source from which the evidence comes to show the fault, and generally dependent on the method of attack; the judgment being void and subject to collateral attack if the record proper discloses that the court was without jurisdiction, but merely voidable and subject only to direct attack where the record shows jurisdictional facts which are untrue, but does not show want of jurisdiction. Kavanagh v. Hamilton, 125 Pac. 512, 515, 53 Colo. 157; Miller v. Winslow, 126 Pac. 906, 907, 70 Wash. 401.

A "voidable act" of an infant is binding on the adult contracting party until disaffirmed by the infant, and is therefore capable of being affirmed when the infant attains his majority. "Whenever the act done may be for the benefit of the infant, it shall not be considered void, but he shall have his election when he comes of age to affirm or avoid it." Damron v. Ratliff, 97 S. W. 401, 402, 123 Ky. 758 (quoting Whitney v. Dutch, 14 Mass. 462, 7 Am. Dec. 229).

Appointment of guardian

Under Gen. Laws 1896, c. 248, § 7, and Court and Practice Act 1905, § 803, declaring that a probate decree shall not be deemed invalid in any collateral proceeding, or quashed for want of proper form, or for want of jurisdiction appearing upon its face, a probate decree appointing a guardian for an inebriate and spendthrift, which only adjudged the incompetent to be a person lacking in discretion in managing his estate, was voidable only, and not "void." Brown v. Probate Court of Warwick, 67 Atl. 527, 28 R. I. 370, 125 Am. St. Rep. 747.

Marriage contract

A "voidable marriage contract" exists where, though prohibited by law, it may be ratified or confirmed by the subsequent cohabitation and conduct of the parties, and is valid until dissolved by judicial decree. State v. Yoder, 130 N. W. 10, 12, 113 Minn. 503.

Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, c. 51, art. 1, § 3, par. 3484, prohibits any male under the age of 18 years, and any female under the age of 15 years, to marry. Chapter 51, art. 1, § 16, par. 3497, makes it criminal to solemnize or enter into a marriage contrary to foregoing provisions. Held, that while a marriage of a youth of 16 and a girl of 14 was illegal, it was "voidable" only, and not void. Hunt v. Hunt, 100 Pac. 541, 542, 23 Okl. 490, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1202.

Preference

It is an essential element of a "voidable preference" in bankruptcy that the preferred creditor had grounds to believe that a preference was intended. In re Burlage Bros., 169 Fed. 1006, 1007.

The assignment by a corporation within four months prior to its bankruptcy of accounts receivable to a bank to secure a prior indebtedness did not constitute a "voidable preference" under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60b, 30 Stat. 562, although the corporation was known to be insolvent, where such accounts were merely substituted for other valid accounts held by the bank, which had been paid, for the purpose of keeping the security good. In re Reese-Hammond Fire Brick Co., 181 Fed. 641, 643, 104 C. C. A. 371.

A mercantile dealer had sold a bankrupt goods for only a few months prior to his bankruptcy. He was slow in making payments, and, learning that he had placed a mortgage on his stock, the creditor sent an attorney to look after the claim. The bankrupt stated to him that he did not have sufficient capital to meet his bills promptly, but was doing a profitable business and was entirely solvent; that he had an offer for his stock in cash and land amounting in value to a sum largely in excess of his indebtedness, which he could accept at once. The attorney advised its acceptance, and meantime took a chattel mortgage on the stock for the amount of his claim. The debtor was in fact insolvent, and became within four months thereafter bankrupt. Held, that such facts supported a finding of the District Court that the creditor did not have a reasonable cause to believe, when the mortgage was taken, that a "preference" was intended, and that it was not "voidable" under Bankr. Act 1898, § 60b, 30 Stat. 562. Hussey v. Richardson-Roberts Dry Goods Co., 148 Fed. 598, 599, 78 C. C. A. 370.

Evidence considered, and held insufficient to establish the insolvency of a corporation at the time it made an assignment of a debt due it to a bank as security for past and future overdrafts, or that the bank had reasonable cause to believe that a preference was intended, so as to render the transfer a "voidable preference" on the bankruptcy of the corporation. McDonald v. Clearwater Shortline Ry. Co., 164 Fed. 1007, 1016, 1017.

A mortgage or transfer of his property by an insolvent debtor within four months of the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against him, which otherwise constitutes a "voidable preference," is not deprived of that character or validated by the fact that it was executed in the performance of a contract to do so made more than four months before the filing of the petition. In re Great Western Mfg. Co., 152 Fed. 123, 128, 81 C. C. A. 341 (citing Wilson Bros. v. Nelson, 22 Sup. Ct. 74, 183 U. S. 191, 198, 46 L. Ed. 147; In re Sheridan, 98 Fed. 406; In re Dismal Swamp Contracting Co., 135 Fed. 415, 417, 418; In re Ronk, 111 Fed. 154; Pollock v. Jones, 124 Fed. 163, 61 C. C. A. 555; Anniston Iron & Supply Co. v. Anniston Rolling Mill Co., 125 Fed. 974; Johnston v. Huff, Andrews & Moyler Co., 133 Fed. 704, 66 C. C. A. 534; In re Mandel, 127 Fed. 863).

The essential elements of a "voidable preference," within Bankr. Act 1898, as amended, are that the debtor at the time of the transaction was insolvent, that there was a pre-existing debt paid or secured by the transaction within four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, and the creditor must have had reasonable cause to believe that a preference was thereby intended. Seager v. Lamm, 104 N. W. 1, 2, 95 Minn. 325.

Process

"Voidable process" is valid until attacked, and is amendable. Roy v. Phelps, 75 Atl. 13, 14, 83 Vt. 174.

VOLENTI NON FIT INJURIA

See Assumption of Risk.

The maxim, "Volenti non fit injuria," means that he who consents cannot receive an injury. Rigsby v. Oil Well Supply Co., 91 S. W. 460, 463, 115 Mo. App. 297.

The maxim, "Volenti non fit injuria," means that to which a person assents is not esteemed in law an injury. Adolf v. Columbia Pretzel & Baking Co., 78 S. W. 321, 323, 100 Mo. App. 199.

The maxim, "Volenti non fit injuria," applies between strangers as well as between master and servant. Drown v. New England Telephone & Telegraph Co., 66 A. 801, 804, 80 Vt. 1.

Intercourse between persons engaged to marry, whether the act be innocent or guilty, under the maxim, "Volenti non fit injuria," takes from both consenting parties the right to sue at common law. Wrynn v. Downey, 63 Atl. 401, 405, 27 R. I. 454, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 615, 114 Am. St. Rep. 63, 8 Ann. Cas. 912.

The principle that a person cannot make his own wrong, or his voluntary act, whether wrongful or not, the ground of recovering damages from another, has found expression in the maxim, "Volenti non fit injuria." Whenever contributory negligence is established as the proximate cause of an injury, it is always a complete defense, and bars a recovery for such injury. In such case the maxim, "Volenti non fit injuria," applies. Smith v. Centennial Eureka Min. Co., 75

Pac. 749, 755, 756, 27 Utah, 307 (citing 1 Thomp. Neg. § 185).

Assumption of risk

The maxim, "Volenti non fit injuria," cuts off a recovery, where the injury is caused by one of the risks incident to the business, which the servant assumes when he enters the employment. Blundell v. William A. Miller Elevator Mfg. Co., 88 S. W. 103, 105, 189 Mo. 552.

The defense of assumed risk comes within the principle expressed by the maxim, "Volenti non fit injuria." Such maxim, upon which a rule of assumption of risk is based, is not "Scienti non fit injuria," but "Volenti non fit injuria." Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Jones, 92 S. W. 244, 246, 247, 77 Ark. 367, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 837, 7 Ann. Cas. 430.

Where a father hires his minor son to an employer to do a certain work, and the employer, without the father's consent, puts the son to a different and more dangerous employment, and the latter is injured, the maxim, "Volenti non fit injuria," cannot be set up against the father, even though it would bar the minor himself from recovery. Braswell v. Garfield Cotton Oil Mill Co., 66 S. E. 539, 540, 7 Ga. App. 167.

"Assumption of risk is a term of the contract of employment, express or implied from the circumstances of the employment, by which the servant agrees that dangers of injury obviously incident to the discharge of the servant's duty shall be at the servant's risk. In such cases the acquiescence of the servant in the conduct of the master does not defeat a right of action on the ground that the servant causes or contributes to cause the injury to himself; but the correct statement is that no right of action arises in favor of the servant at all, for under the terms of the employment the master violates no legal duty to the servant in failing to protect him from dangers the risk of which he agreed expressly or impliedly to assume." The defense of assumption of risk is not based on contract, but is based on the doctrine of "Volenti non fit injuria" (one who, knowing and appreciating a danger, voluntarily assumes the risk of it), and is recognized by Rev. Codes, § 6183, declaring, "He who consents to an act is not wronged by it;" and hence the doctrine of assumed risk was not abrogated by Const. art. 15, § 16, and Rev. Codes, §§ 5052, 5053, declaring that a contract releasing an employer from liability for his negligence is void. Osterholm v. Boston & Montana Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 107 Pac. 499, 504, 40 Mont. 508.

The defense of assumed risk comes within the principle expressed by the maxim, "Volenti non fit injuria." This defense does not impliedly admit negligence on the part of defendant, and defeat the right of action therefor, as the defense of contributory negligence does. Southern Pac. Co. v. Allen, 106 S. W. 441, 446, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 66.

VOLITION

See Rational Volition.

VOLONTÉ

"Volonté" and "dernière volonté" are used as equivalents of "will" and "last will." In re Billis' Will, 47 South. 884, 885, 122 La. 539, 129 Am. St. Rep. 355.

VOLT

The unit of pressure, called the "volt," is that electrical force which, when steadily applied to a wire or other conductor having a resistance of 1,000,000,000 units of the C. G. S. system, will produce a current of one-tenth of a unit per second of that system. Peoria Waterworks Co. v. Peoria Ry. Co., 181 Fed. 990, 1001.

Willful synonyms

Willful is not the synonym of "voluntary." In truth, they express no distinct idea which is common to both. The former is a word of much greater strength than the latter. Roberts v. United States, 128 Fed. 897, 903, 61 C. C. A. 427 (quoting and adopting definition in McManus v. State, 36 Ala. 291).

In a prosecution for conspiracy to murder, an instruction that the words "willful" and "willfully" mean intentional, not accidental or "voluntary," is correct. Gambrell v. Commonwealth, 113 S. W. 476, 480, 130 Ky. 513.

The word "willfully," within U. S. Comp. St. 1901, § 5341, making one who unlawfully and willfully, but without malice, injures another, of which injury the other dies, guilty of manslaughter, means not merely "voluntarily," but with a bad purpose, being synonymous with "intentionally," "designedly," "without lawful excuse." Miller v. State, 107 Pac. 948, 3 Okl. Cr. 575.

While the word "willful" is sometimes synonymous with "voluntary" or "intentional," yet, when used in penal or quasi penal statutes, it usually implies an evil intent, and it is so used in Code, § 1251, providing that any county officer may be removed for willful misconduct or maladministration in office, so that, in a proceeding thereunder to remove a county treasurer, evidence of his good faith and innocence of intentional wrong was admissible, so as to take the question of the willfulness of his wrongful act to the jury. State v. Meek, 127 N. W. 1023, 1024, 148 Iowa, 671, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 566, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1075.

The word "willfully," in Pen. Code, § 639, subjecting to punishment any person who willfully or maliciously displaces, injures, or destroys any water main, means something more than a "voluntary act," and more, also, than an intentional act which in fact is wrongful. It includes the idea of an act intentionally done with a wrongful purpose, or with a design to injure another, or one committed out of mere wantonness or lawlessness. McMorris v. Howell, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1018, 1021, 89 App. Div. 272 (citing Wass v. Stephens, 28 N. E. 21, 128 N. Y. 123).

In Pen. Code, § 639, providing for the punishment of a person who "willfully" removes, injures, or destroys a public highway, the word "willfully" means something more than a "voluntary act," and more than an intentional act which is in fact wrongful. It includes the idea of an act intentionally done with a wrongful purpose, or with design to injure another, or one committed out of mere wantonness or lawlessness. People v. Gilles, 109 N. Y. Supp. 945, 946, 57 Misc. Rep. 568.

A "willful injury" involves a deliberate purpose not to discharge some duty necessary to safety, which duty the person owing it has assumed by contract, or which is imposed on him by law. It is differentiated from negligence by the fact that the latter arises from inattention or thoughtlessness. The word "willful" or "willfully," as used in this connection, means the quality of being willful, obstinate, stubborn, perverse, "voluntary." As so used, it implies nothing blamable, but merely that the person of whose action or default the expression is used is a free agent, and that what has been done arises from the spontaneous action of his will. It implies nothing more than that he knows what he is doing, and intends to do what he is doing, and is a free agent. Southern Ry. Co. v. McNeeley, 88 N. E. 710, 711, 44 Ind. App. 126.

In Act June 29, 1906, c. 3594, known as the "Twenty-Eight Hour Law," which prohibits carriers of live stock from keeping the same confined in cars, etc., for more than 28 consecutive hours without unloading for rest, water, and feeding, unless prevented by storm or by other accidental or unavoidable causes, which cannot be anticipated or avoided by the exercise of due diligence and foresight, and imposes a penalty on any carrier, which "knowingly and willfully" fails to comply with its provisions, the word "willfully" is not used as implying a vicious or evil intent, but as meaning intentionally or "voluntarily." United States v. Union Pac. R. Co., 169 Fed. 65, 67, 68, 94 C. C. A. 433; United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 166 Fed. 160.

VOLUNTARY ABSENCE

"Voluntary" means by the free exercise of the will; done by design; purposely. A voluntary act proceeds from one's own free will; done by choice, or of one's own accord; unconstrained by external interference, force, or influence; not prompted or suggested by another. An unavoidable absence would not be voluntary; an unintentional absence, where under the circumstances his presence could not be reasonably required, would not be voluntary. Even an absence, though in somewhat serious negligence, which was neither purposeful, deliberate, nor under circumstances from which such an intention could be presumed, would not be voluntary. Derden v. State, 120 S. W. 485, 488, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 396, 133 Am. St. Rep. 986 (citing Thompson v. State, 6 S. W. 296, 24 Tex. App. 386).

VOLUNTARY ACCEPTANCE

The term "voluntary acceptance," in Willson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 760, providing that a "voluntary acceptance" of the benefit of a transaction is equivalent to a consent to all the obligations arising from it, so far as the facts are known or ought to be known to the person accepting, does not include payment of money to an agent, unless it is shown that he has authority to accept such payment. Halsell v. Renfrow, 73 Pac. 118, 124, 14 Okl. 674, 2 Ann. Cas. 286.

VOLUNTARY ACT

A "voluntary act" is an intentional act. Dillon v. Continental Casualty Co., 109 S. W. 89, 91, 130 Mo. App. 502.

VOLUNTARY ALIENATION

A "voluntary alienation" occurs where an estate is voluntarily resigned by one person and accepted by another person, whether the transfer be effected by will, gift, marriage settlement, devise, or other transmission of the property by mutual consent of the parties. A deed by the United States to an Indian, forbidding alienation, deprives the grantee of the power to dispose of the property by will. Jackson v. Thompson, 80 Pac. 454, 456, 38 Wash. 282 (quoting and adopting And. Law Dict. p. 48).

VOLUNTARY APPEARANCE

"The 'voluntary appearance' of a defendant is equivalent to service." Hence, where a voluntary appearance has been made by nonresident defendant, the action of the court in making an ex parte order permitting him to withdraw his appearance, and in refusing an application seasonably made by plaintiff to vacate such order, is prejudicial error. Insurance Trust & Agency v. Failing, 71 Pac. 826, 827, 66 Kan. 336.

The signing of the stipulation and the consent to an adjournment to a future day constitute a "voluntary appearance" and joinder of issues by the parties, within the contemplation of Municipal Court Act (Laws 1902, p. 1498, c. 580) § 26. Berliner v. M. Zimmermann Co., 104 N. Y. Supp. 407, 408, 54 Misc. Rep. 246.

VOLUNTARY ASSIGNEE

A "voluntary assignee" is not a bona fide purchaser for value, but is a mere representative of the debtor, enjoying his rights only, and is bound where he would be bound. Smith v. Equitable Trust Co., 64 Atl. 594, 215 Pa. 418.

"A 'voluntary assignee' for the benefit of creditors is a mere representative of the debtor, and is bound where he would be bound; but when the assignee, trustee, or whatever he may be called, derives his authority, not from the mere voluntary act of the assignor, but from the mandate of the law, even when enforced in the language of that case, through a "compulsory assignment" from the debtor in the interest of the creditors, he represents the latter, and is vested with their powers. The same principle applies a fortiori to a receiver deriving his authority, not at all from the debtor, but altogether from the court, acting in the interest and for the enforcement of the rights of creditors. When, therefore, on a creditors' bill, a receiver is appointed for an insolvent corporation, he is not limited, like an assignee for the benefit of creditors, by the rights of the debtor corporation as to property held by it under a conditional sale, but has the rights of a levying creditor, and a sale by him passes a good title against the vendor, irrespective of the purchaser's status as a creditor, either with or without notice. Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Clipper Pub. Co., 62 Atl. 841, 843, 213 Pa. 207 (quoting and adopting definition in Wright v. Wigton, 84 Pa. 163).

VOLUNTARY ASSOCIATION

See Club.

VOLUNTARY CONFESSION

See Voluntary Statement.

An accused is not compelled to testify against himself when he makes a "voluntary confession," and a confession is voluntary when it is not induced by a threat of harm or a promise of favor or reward held out by a person in authority. State v. Potonlec, 134 N. W. 305, 117, Minn. 80.

That a member of the grand jury stated to accused that, if she desired them to be light on her, she had better tell the truth, and that a justice of the peace stated to her, after her arrest, that she had better tell the truth, does not justify the exclusion of the confession on the ground that it was not a "voluntary confession." Grimsinger v. State, 69 S. W. 583, 585, 586, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 1.

VOLUNTARY CONTRACT

Civ. Code 1895, § 2502, providing that parental power over a child is lost "by voluntary contract releasing the right to a third person," does not relate to a contract of a parent apprenticing his child to a third person, and such "voluntary contract" of a father may be valid and binding on the father, although he does not therein apprentice his child. Eaves v. Fears, 64 S. E. 289, 131 Ga. 820.

VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE

"A 'voluntary conveyance' is a conveyance without any valuable consideration. If there is a valuable consideration, no matter how trivial or inadequate, the conveyance is not voluntary." Hopkins v. White, 128 Pac. 780, 785, 20 Cal. App. 234 (quoting and adopting the definition of 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7345).

All conveyances not supported by a valuable consideration are "voluntary," and voidable by creditors or others having legal or equitable rights in the property for a valuable consideration and where defendants' grantor had agreed to devise certain property to complainant in consideration for personal services, but, instead, conveyed to defendants voluntarily, in a suit to reach the proceeds thereof decedent's love and affection for defendants was not a sufficient consideration for the conveyance. Oswald v. Nehls, 84 N. E. 619, 622, 233 Ill. 438.

A "voluntary conveyance" by an insolvent is a conveyance without any valuable consideration, and, where there is a valuable consideration, no matter how inadequate, the conveyance is not voluntary, and actual intent to defraud the creditors of the transferor must be found as a fact to defeat the transfer. Commercial Bank of Boonville v. Kuehner, 115 S. W. 510, 511, 135 Mo. App. 63.

A "voluntary conveyance" is one without any valuable consideration. At law, if there is a valuable consideration, although inadequate, or even trivial, the conveyance is not deemed voluntary; but in equity, when the consideration is inadequate, the conveyance, at the suit of existing creditors of the grantor, will be regarded as having been made with the design on his part to make a gift to the grantee of the difference between the price paid and the actual value of the property. Polk County Nat. Bank v. Scott, 132 Fed. 897, 899, 66 C. C. A. 51.

VOLUNTARY DEED

"A 'voluntary deed' is one founded merely and exclusively on a good, as distinguished from a valuable, consideration, on motives of generosity and affection, rather than on a benefit received by the donor, or detriment, trouble, or prejudice to the donee. If the donor receives a benefit, or the donee suffers detriment, as the consideration of the conveyance, the consideration is valuable, not good, merely." Pippin v. Tapla, 42 South. 545, 547, 148 Ala. 353 (citing Bibb v. Freeman, 59 Ala. 615; Early & Lane v. Owens, 68 Ala. 174).

A deed may be founded on some consideration, and still be technically a "voluntary instrument," and when a valuable consideration is necessary to support a deed, the bare recital of a nominal pecuniary consideration does not show a valuable consideration; and hence, if the purchaser of land for $960, who had paid no cash therefor, but had given notes reserving a vendor's lien, subsequently, when insolvent and without having paid the notes, conveyed the land to another on a recited consideration of $2, for the purpose of hindering and defrauding his creditors and defeating the lien of the notes, his grantee was a mere volunteer, and the deed ineffective, so far as the rights of the original purchaser's prior creditors were concerned. York v. Leverett, 48 South. 684, 685, 159 Ala. 529.

VOLUNTARY DRUNKENNESS

"Voluntary drunkenness" consists in a man simply becoming intoxicated, so that he is for the time being incapable of attending to business, and is not a ground for continuance, yet the illness which results from long-continued alcoholism is regarded as involuntary, and is a ground for continuance. Harrod v. Hutchinson (Ky.) 105 S. W. 365, 366.

VOLUNTARY EXPOSURE

"Voluntary exposure" to unnecessary danger or obvious risks, within the meaning of an accident policy, is a conscious or intentional exposure to a known risk, and not a mere inadvertent or accidental one. Continental Casualty Co. v. Deeg (Tex.) 125 S. W. 353, 355; Whalen v. Peerless Casualty Co., 73 Atl. 642, 643, 75 N. H. 297, 139 Am. St. Rep. 695.

To render a person guilty of a "voluntary exposure to danger," within the terms of an accident policy providing that such exposure would release the insured from liability, he must have intentionally done some act which reasonable and ordinary prudence would pronounce dangerous, so that he must not only have been guilty of contributory negligence, but guilty of negligence which proximately contributed to the injury. Payne v. Fraternal Acc. Ass'n of America, 93 N. W. 361, 362, 119 Iowa, 342 (quoting and adopting the definition in Follis v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 62 N. W. 807, 94 Iowa, 439, 28 L. R. A. 78, 58 Am. St. Rep. 408, and citing Jones v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n of City of New York, 61 N. W. 485, 92 Iowa, 654; Sutherland v. Standard Life & Acc. Ins. Co., 54 N. W. 453, 87 Iowa,

"A 'voluntary' performance of an act must require an exercise of the will of the actor; in other words, it is an act done in obedience to, and regulated by, the will of the person who does it. It follows, therefore, that it must be done designedly, and not accidentally, and consequently one cannot be said to be guilty of a 'voluntary' exposure to danger, unless he intentionally and consciously assumes the risk of an obvious danger." Bateman v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 85 S. W. 128, 129, 110 Mo. App. 443 (quoting and adopting definition in Lehman v. Great Eastern Casualty & Indemnity Co., 39 N. Y. Supp. 912, 7 App. Div. 424).

Steeplechase riding is a "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," within an insurance policy providing that it shall not cover injuries caused by voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger. Smith v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 69 N. E. 1059, 185 Mass. 74, 64 L. R. A. 117, 102 Am. St. Rep. 326.

Either reckless or deliberate encountering of known danger or danger so obvious that a reasonably prudent person would have observed and avoided it, if the circumstances were not such as necessitated the encountering thereof, is a voluntary exposure within an accident policy limiting liability in case of an injury resulting from "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger or obvious risk of injury." Diddle v. Continental Casualty Co., 63 S. E. 962, 964, 65 W. Va. 170, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 779.

Under a policy exempting insurer from liability for an accident caused by "voluntary or unnecessary exposure to apparent danger," to constitute such exposure, the danger must either be known, or one which in the exercise of ordinary prudence should be known, to insured. Correll v. National Acc. Soc., 116 N. W. 1046, 1048, 139 Iowa, 36, 130 Am. St. Rep. 294.

The term "voluntary or unnecessary exposure to danger," in an accident policy exempting the insurer from liability for injuries caused by voluntary or unnecessary exposure to danger, means a realization that an accident will in all probability result and an injury follow from an action about to be taken, and the danger of injury must be obvious. Hunt v. United States Accident Ass'n, 109 N. W. 1042, 1043, 146 Mich. 521, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 938, 117 Am. St. Rep. 655, 10 Ann. Cas. 449.

In a proviso in a contract of insurance exempting the insurer from liability for an accident resulting from voluntary exposure to "unnecessary danger," "the words 'unnecessary danger' signify that the danger meant is one not incident to the duty or vocation of the insured, and this view consists with another term of policy in which the occupation of deceased was referred to, and he was insured as a train porter, a hazardous calling. The words 'voluntary exposure' signify that the insured must be exposed to danger with the consent of his will, which carries the idea that the danger incurred must be realized, instead of unexpected." Bateman v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 85 S. W. 128, 129, 110 Mo. App. 443.

"Voluntary exposure to danger, or obvious risk of injury," within the meaning of an accident policy, is a conscious or intentional exposure to a known risk, and not a mere inadvertent or accidental one. The act of a railroad employé traveling as a passenger, in alighting from a slowly moving train, was not, as a matter of law, such voluntary exposure. Continental Casualty Co. v. Deeg (Tex.) 125 S. W. 353, 355.

A provision exempting an accident insurer from liability, where death or disability results from insured's "voluntary exposure to unnecessary dangers," applies where insured is injured by doing something voluntarily which ordinary prudence forbids. A man 66 years of age, and with an umbrella under his arm, who attempts to board a train running six or eight miles an hour, is guilty of a "voluntary exposure to unnecessary dangers." Rebman v. General Accident Ins. Co., 66 Atl. 859, 860, 217 Pa. 518, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 957.

Plaintiff, as was his custom, in going from his place of business to a railroad station in the evening, instead of selecting one of two safe ways over the public streets of the city, passed through certain railroad yards, where trains were momentarily passing in opposite directions. Finding his way blocked, he climbed upon a slowly moving freight train which was going in his direction, and shortly after in alighting therefrom was struck by a semaphore and injured. Held, that he was guilty of "voluntary exposure" to an avoidable danger within the terms of an accident policy, and was therefore only entitled to recover under a limited liability clause therein. "To make him guilty of a 'voluntary exposure' to danger, he must intentionally have done some act which reasonable and ordinary prudence would pronounce dangerous." Alter v. Union Casualty & Surety Co., 83 S. W. 276, 277, 108 Mo. App. 169 (citing Burkhard v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 102 Pa. 262, 48 Am. Rep. 205).

An accident insurance policy for $1,000 provided for a reduction of the amount to $100 "where the accidental injury results from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, or obvious risk of injury, or the intentional act of the insured." Insured was a car repairer, and while riding through the railroad yards by standing on a step on the side of a car and holding onto a handhold he was struck by a brake rod on a car standing on a neighboring track, which rod was bent towards the track on which insured was riding, and was knocked from the car and killed. In an action on the policy, the court was asked to instruct that his act, where there were other cars standing on another track so close as not to permit the body of a person so riding to clear said stationary cars, "is a 'voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger' or obvious risk of injury, which prevents a recovery in this case" except as to a reduced amount. The court gave the declaration, with the qualification that deceased had "knowledge of these facts." Held erroneous, as the acts specified in the policy which would reduce the amount of the insurance are affirmative acts, implying knowledge and excluding mere negligence, and the insured will be held to have known that which an ordinarily prudent man of ordinary intelligence in the same situation would have known. Dillon v. Continental Casualty Co., 109 S. W. 89, 91, 130 Mo. App. 502.

Negligent cumulative

The use of the word "negligent" in the clause "voluntary or negligent exposure to unnecessary danger," in an accident policy exempting the insurer from liability for injury so caused, is cumulative or redundant, and the clause means no more than voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger. Beard v. Indemnity Ins. Co., 64 S. E. 119, 120, 65 W. Va. 283.

VOLUNTARY HOMICIDE

See Voluntary Manslaughter.

One who fires a shot, knowing that he cannot do so without hitting an innocent person, is guilty of a "voluntary homicide," the grade of which is to be determined by the circumstances under which the shot is fired. Ringer v. State, 85 S. W. 410, 412, 74 Ark. 262.

VOLUNTARY INDEBTEDNESS

Indebtedness incurred by a county for the construction of a bridge on a county road is a "voluntary indebtedness," within the prohibition of Const. art. 11, § 10, fixing the limit for such indebtedness. Bowers v. Nell, 128 Pac. 433, 436, 64 Or. 104.

VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER

See Voluntary Homicide.

"Voluntary manslaughter" arises where one kills another in the heat of blood, as in a fight or upon provocation. State v. Morahan, 77 Atl. 488, 489, 7 Pennewill, 494; State v. Blackburn (Del.) 75 Atl. 536, 539, 7 Pennewill, 479.

If the killing by a defendant or his aiding or abetting of the killing by another was done in sudden heat of passion upon provocation reasonably calculated to excite defendant's passion beyond his power of control, it was "voluntary manslaughter." Watkins v. Commonwealth, 97 S. W. 740, 742, 123 Ky. 817.

If upon a sudden quarrel the parties fight upon the spot, or presently agree and fetch their weapons and fight, and one of them is killed, such killing is "voluntary manslaughter," no matter who strikes the first blow. Sapp v. State, 58 S. E. 667, 669, 2 Ga. App. 449 (quoting and adopting Gann v. State, 30 Ga. 67).

"Voluntary manslaughter" arises where, upon a sudden quarrel, two persons fight and one kills the other, or where one greatly provokes the other by personal violence, etc., and the other immediately kills him. State v. Woods (Del.) 77 Atl. 490, 491, 7 Penne-will, 499.

The unlawful killing of one who has given the slayer no provocation, other than the use of words, threats, menaces, or contemptuous gestures, cannot in this state be graded to "voluntary manslaughter," under the doctrine of mutual combat. Pen. Code, § 65. Bird v. State, 57 S. E. 320, 128 Ga. 253 (citing Cumming v. State, 27 S. E. 177, 99 Ga. 662).

"Voluntary manslaughter" is where the act causing death is committed in the heat of sudden passion caused by provocation. The provocation must be such as the law deems adequate to excite uncontrollable passion in the mind of a reasonable man. The act must be committed under and because of the passion." State v. White, 51 S. E. 44, 50, 138 N. C. 704 (quoting and adopting definition in Clark, Cr. Law, p. 197).

A constable, after arresting a prisoner under a warrant for misdemeanor, is not justified in killing him on his attempt to escape, but in so doing is guilty of "voluntary manslaughter." Commonwealth v. Loughhead, 67 Atl. 747, 748, 218 Pa. 429, 120 Am. St. Rep. 896.

Absence of malice

"Voluntary manslaughter" is the unlawful killing of another, without malice, in the heat of passion. Tyner v. United States, 103 Pac. 1057, 1058, 2 Okl. Cr. 689.

An instruction that if defendant in sudden heat and passion, created by such provocation as is ordinarily calculated to excite the passions beyond control, and which did then and there excite defendant's passions beyond control, and without previous malice, willfully shot, etc., he was guilty of "voluntary manslaughter," was not erroneous; the term "without previous malice" being included in the term "in sudden heat and passion." Metcalfe v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 86 S. W. 534, 535.

"Voluntary manslaughter" is the intentional, unlawful, and felonious, but not deliberate or malicious, taking of human life. State v. Clifford, 52 S. E. 981, 985, 59 W. Va. 1.

An instruction that to strike and kill with a deadly weapon in sudden affray, or sudden heat and passion, without malice, and not in necessary self-defense, is "voluntary manslaughter," is not erroneous for failing to state the law of self-defense. Austin v. Commonwealth, 98 S. W. 295, 296, 124 Ky. 55.

An instruction, on a trial for homicide, that if the jury should believe that accused, in sudden affray and sudden passion, without previous malice, or not in his necessary or to him apparently necessary self-defense, willfully killed decedent, and from which shooting decedent died within a year and a day thereafter, accused was guilty of "voluntary manslaughter," sufficiently defined "voluntary manslaughter." Williamson v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 101 S. W. 370, 371.

Though the evidence for the state authorize a conviction of murder and the evidence for accused clearly justify the killing, yet, if the jury believe the state's witnesses in preference to the evidence of the defense, they are not required to find accused guilty of murder, where it is inferable from the evidence that the killing was due, not to malice, but to a sudden, violent, and irresistible impulse of passion, provoked by the assault of decedent upon accused's brother, who had just been unjustifiably shot down by decedent in accused's presence, but may find him guilty of "voluntary manslaughter." Mattox v. State, 70 S. E. 1120, 9 Ga. App. 292.

To reduce an intentional blow resulting in death to voluntary manslaughter, there must be a sufficient cause for provocation, and a state of rage or passion without time to cool. An instruction, on trial for murder, that if the jury believed the deceased had just made an attack on a third person, who was much inferior in strength to the deceased, and this was done in the presence of the accused, who was a friend of the person attacked, and that this attack so excited the passion of accused as to destroy all self-control, and, without sufficient cooling time, he killed the person so attacking, the crime was manslaughter, was properly refused. Though serious injury to a relation will reduce a killing to manslaughter, the rule does not apply to a case of a friend or companion. "Voluntary manslaughter" is never attended by legal malice or depravity of heart, and, being sometimes a willful act, it is necessary that the circumstances should take away every evidence of cool depravity of heart or wanton cruelty. Commonwealth v. Paese, 69 Atl. 891, 892, 894, 220 Pa. 371, 123 Am. St. Rep. 699, 13 Ann. Cas. 1081.

"Manslaughter" is a killing in a sudden affray, without malice, but in the heat of such passion, produced under provocation, as to render the person deaf to reason. State v. Primrose (Del.) 77 Atl. 717, 719, 2 Boyce, 164.

"Manslaughter" is the unlawful killing of another without malice, express or implied, and may be voluntary or involuntary. State v. Morahan (Del.) 77 Atl. 488, 489, 7 Pennewill, 494; Same v. Woods (Del.) 77 Atl. 490, 7 Pennewill, 499.

Where one without malice, and not under circumstances excusing the killing, voluntarily kills another under a sudden violent impulse or irresistible passion produced by some actual assault or attempt by the person killed to commit a serious personal injury, or by other circumstances sufficient to justify the passion, the homicide is "voluntary manslaughter." Wall v. State, 55 S. E. 484, 485, 126 Ga. 549.

The one essential element of "voluntary manslaughter" is passion—hot blood. When an unlawful killing is shown by the state, the presumption is that it was prompted by malice, and, to reduce the homicide below the grade of fraud, it is necessary for the evidence to show the absence of malice. Rentfrow v. State, 51 S. E. 596, 597, 123 Ga. 539.

An unlawful, willful, and felonious killing without malice, or in sudden affray, heat, and passion, and not in self-defense, constitutes "voluntary manslaughter." Arnett v. Commonwealth, 125 S. W. 700, 701, 137 Ky. 270.

An instruction on a trial for homicide, authorizing a verdict of "willful murder" if the jury believe that the killing was done with malice aforethought, and a verdict of "voluntary manslaughter" if they believe that the killing was done in sudden heat of passion and without previous malice, is not erroneous, as placing on accused the burden of showing that the killing was without previous malice to reduce the homicide to manslaughter. Ball v. Commonwealth, 101 S. W. 956, 959, 125 Ky. 601.

If the killing by defendant, or his aiding or abetting of the killing by another, was done without malice, unlawfully and willfully in a sudden affray, it was "voluntary manslaughter." Watkins v. Commonwealth, 97 S. W. 740, 742, 123 Ky. 817.

"Voluntary manslaughter" is the unlawful, willful, and felonious killing of another, without previous malice, in a sudden affray, or in sudden heat and passion, not in the necessary or apparently necessary self-defense of the slayer. Commonwealth v. Mosser, 118 S. W. 915, 916, 133 Ky. 609 (citing Whart. Cr. Law [10th Ed.] § 303; Mitchell v. Commonwealth, 11 S. W. 209, 88 Ky. 351; Roberson, Cr. Law, § 189).

If accused undertook to shoot over decedent's head, and had reason to know that to shoot as he did would endanger decedent's life, and fired his pistol recklessly and without malice he would be guilty of "voluntary manslaughter." Lewis v. Commonwealth, 131 S. W. 517, 518, 140 Ky. 652.

As requiring intention to kill

"To constitute the crime of 'voluntary manslaughter,' it is essential that the homicide be willfully and intentionally committed, or under such circumstances as to strike one at first blush as so reckless and wanton as to be felonious, though apparently not intended by the perpetrator." Wheeler v. Commonwealth, 87 S. W. 1106, 1108, 120 Ky. 697; Brown v. Commonwealth, 92 S. W. 542, 544, 122 Ky. 626.

"It is essential to the commission of 'voluntary manslaughter' that the homicide should have been willfully and intentionally committed; that is, in a sudden affray, or in sudden heat or passion, or under such circumstances as to strike one at first blush as so reckless and wanton as to be felonious, though apparently not intended by the perpetrator." Smith v. Commonwealth, 118 S. W. 368, 369, 133 Ky. 532 (citing Montgomery v. Commonwealth [Ky.] 81 S. W. 264; 1 Bish. New Cr. Law, § 314; York v. Commonwealth, 82 Ky. 360; Smith v. Commonwealth, 20 S. W. 229, 93 Ky. 318).

The indictment does not charge "involuntary manslaughter," defined as the unintentional killing of another in the performance by the slayer of an unlawful act, or the doing of a lawful act in an unlawful manner. Commonwealth v. Mosser, 118 S. W. 915, 133 Ky. 915.

It is not necessary that there should be an intent to kill to constitute "voluntary manslaughter" when one person shoots another with a deadly weapon; but if the shooting is intentionally done, and if the slayer knew or had reason to know that to shoot as he did would endanger the life of another, and acted recklessly of such other's safety, an intent to injure him may be inferred. Lewis v. Commonwealth, 131 S. W. 517, 519, 140 Ky. 652.

If defendant struck decedent, not for the purpose of defending his brother from what he honestly believed to be a felonious assault, but from sudden heat and passion aroused by the attack upon his brother, intending to kill decedent, he would be guilty of "voluntary manslaughter." Warnack v. State, 60 S. E. 288, 290, 3 Ga. App. 590.

Wherever a homicide is neither justifiable nor malicious, and is intentional, it is "voluntary manslaughter." Mixon v. State, 68 S. E. 315, 316, 7 Ga. App. 805.

A homicide committed by the wanton, reckless, or grossly careless use of a firearm, without malice aforethought, is "voluntary manslaughter," although there was no intent to kill; the recklessness of the act supplying the criminal intent. Ewing v. Commonwealth, 111 S. W. 352, 355, 129 Ky. 237.

"Voluntary manslaughter" is homicide intentionally committed under the influence of passion, suddenly arising from adequate cause, but neither justified nor excused by law. State v. Edmunds, 104 N. W. 1115, 1116, 20 S. D. 135.

"Voluntary manslaughter" is the intentional, unlawful, and felonious, but not deliberate or malicious, taking of human life. State v. Clifford, 52 S. E. 981, 985, 59 W. Va. 1.

Murder distinguished

"Voluntary manslaughter" is distinguished from "murder" solely by the absence of malice as a constituent element of the crime. State v. Edmunds, 104 N. W. 1115, 1116, 20 S. D. 135.

"Manslaughter" is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, express or implied, and without any mixture of deliberation whatever. It must be voluntary, upon a sudden heat of passion, caused by a provocation apparently sufficient to make the passion irresistible. In "voluntary manslaughter" there must be a serious and highly provoking injury inflicted upon the person killing, sufficient to excite an irresistible passion in a reasonable person, or an attempt by the person killed to commit a serious personal injury on the person killing. The killing must be the result of that sudden, violent impulse of passion supposed to be irresistible; for, if there should appear to have been an interval between the assault or provocation given and the killing sufficient for the voice of reason to be heard, the killing shall be attributed to deliberate revenge, and punished as murder. People v. Bissett, 92 N. E. 949, 951, 246 Ill. 516.

The offense which would otherwise be murder becomes "voluntary manslaughter," where the jury find that the killing was not done with malice aforethought. Ewing v. Commonwealth, 111 S. W. 352, 354, 129 Ky. 237.

"At common law, 'voluntary manslaughter' is the unlawful killing of another, without malice, on a sudden quarrel, or in the heat of passion; and generally, if a man be greatly provoked by any gross indignity, and immediately kills his aggressor, it is voluntary manslaughter, and not excusable homicide." A proposed instruction to the jury, telling them that, where one kills another, though intentional, but in passion, in the heat of blood, upon sudden provocation, by gross indignity or by threat of personal violence, was rightly rejected. By the use of the disjunctive "or," the instruction would have justified the murder if only the deceased threatened the defendant with personal violence. Words alone, however insulting or contemptuous, are never sufficient to reduce murder to manslaughter, at least when a deadly weapon is used; but, when accompanied by the acts of the deceased, showing a purpose to commit personal violence on the accused, as by raising and pointing at him a gun, as if in the act of shooting, accused is entitled to an instruction based on the theory of manslaughter. State v. Crawford, 68 S. E. 110, 116, 66 W. Va. 114.

VOLUNTARY NONSUIT

A "voluntary nonsuit" is where the suit is terminated by the voluntary action and free will of the plaintiff; and where defendant, at the close of plaintiff's evidence, asks an instruction in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence, and the court announces an intention to give the instruction, plaintiff's nonsuit, taken before the ruling is made and exception saved thereto, is premature and voluntary. Diamond Rubber Co. v. Wernicke, 148 S. W. 160, 166 Mo. App. 128.

Where a plaintiff takes a nonsuit after the court has indicated its intention to give an instruction in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence, but before such instruction is actually given, it is a "voluntary nonsuit." Gray v. Ward, 136 S. W. 405, 407, 234 Mo. 291.

VOLUNTARY PAYMENT

Where a person without mistake of fact or fraud, duress, coercion, or extortion pays money on a demand which is not enforceable against him, the payment is a "voluntary payment," and cannot be recovered. Ritchie v. Bluff City Lumber Co., 110 S. W. 501, 592, 86 Ark. 175.

Of execution

A payment of money made on execution is not a "voluntary payment," though there has been no seizure of the property of the one making the payment. Chambliss v. Hass, 101 N. W. 153, 156, 125 Iowa, 484, 68 L. R. A. 126, 3 Ann. Cas. 16.

Of fine

A payment of a fine assessed upon conviction of a violation of a municipal ordinance is "voluntary," in the legal sense, when the time for obtaining a supersedeas has expired, and the defendant is required either to pay the fine or be committed. White v. City of Tifton, 57 S. E. 1038, 1039, 1 Ga. App. 571.

Of freight rates

To constitute a "voluntary payment," the person paying must have the freedom of exercising his will, and not act under compulsion, and hence, where a captain of a vessel holding possession of property of a shipper refused to deliver it up unless the shipper paid him a larger amount of freight than was due, and the shipper paid the sum demanded to obtain possession of his property, the payment was under compulsion and could be recovered back. Clancy v. Dutton, 113 N. Y. Supp. 124, 126, 129 App. Div. 23.

An insurance company, pursuant to a settlement by which it paid 50 per cent. of the loss, stipulated that if at any time in the future it adopted any other plan of settlement under or by reason of which the rate of payment was "voluntarily" raised by the company in the district in which plaintiff's property insured at the time of the fire was situated, or if as to any policy holder of the company having a claim for loss in such district under similar conditions a payment at a higher rate was made, plaintiff should be given the benefit of that rate and the settlement increased to that extent. Held, that the clause "if as to any policy holder * * * a payment at a higher rate is made" should be construed in connection with the provision that if the rate of payment was "voluntarily raised," etc., and hence the fact that defendant was compelled to pay judgments recovered for losses in the district, imposing full liability, did not entitle plaintiff to recover the unpaid portion of his loss; payment of such judgment not being "voluntary" within the terms of the settlement. Ralph Brown Co. v. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Society, 180 Fed. 933, 935.

The payment of the judgment in good faith by the surety on an appeal bond, after an affirmance on the appeal to a territorial Supreme Court, and after receiving notice from the Governor that unless the judgment were paid the surety would forfeit its right to do business in the territory, cannot be said to have been made "voluntarily" or negligently, so as to defeat the surety's right to reimbursement from its principals, although execution had not then issued on the judgment, and the governor may not have had the power to carry out his threat. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Sandoval, 32 Sup. Ct. 298, 300, 223 U. S. 227, 56 L. Ed. 415.

Of tax

A payment under protest of taxes before the time payment can be enforced is a "voluntary payment," and the sum paid cannot be recovered by the taxpayer unless a payment under protest prior to that time is authorized by statute. Williams v. Merritt, 116 N. W. 386, 387, 152 Mich. 621.

Payment without coercion of a tax or assessment (1) which is void on its face, but not known by the payor to be void, or (2) of a tax or assessment which is void, but not void on its face, with knowledge by the payor of facts dehors which make it void, is technically called "voluntary payment." Where taxes were paid and received under the mutual mistake that the property on which they were levied was taxable in New York City, the payment was not voluntary, since not made with knowledge, either presumed or actual, that the levy was void, and they may be recovered. Betz v. City of New York, 103 N. Y. Supp. 886, 887, 119 App. Div. 91.

Where, at the time a payment of taxes sought to be recovered was made, the collector had no warrant authorizing him to proceed with the collection of any taxes against plaintiff on the tax list in question, the pendency of plaintiff's appeal from the assessment having suspended all action in that regard, as provided by Gen. St. 1902, § 2356, and no coercive measures against her estate were resorted to or threatened, her payment of the taxes under protest, in response to a bill merely inviting her so to do, was a "voluntary payment," precluding her from recovering the same, under the doctrine that a party cannot recover money voluntarily paid with a full knowledge of all the facts, although no obligation to make such payment existed. Morris v. City of New Haven, 63 Atl. 123, 124, 78 Conn. 673.

Payment of illegal taxes under protest, before the taxes had become delinquent and without any demand or threat to levy, merely to prevent the imposition of a penalty and interest which would accrue on the succeeding day, was "voluntary," so that the taxes paid could not be recovered. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Hamilton County, 113 S. W. 361, 362, 120 Tenn. 1.

Payment under protest

A mere declaration by one at the time he pays money that the payment is "made under protest" does not show that the payment is not "voluntary." Town of Phœbus v. Manhattan Social Club, 52 S. E. 839, 840, 106 Va. 144.

"A mere protest accompanying a payment does not change its character. It remains, nevertheless, a 'voluntary payment,' and concludes the parties." Gerry v. Siebrecht, 38 N. Y. Supp. 1034, 1036 (citing Flower v. Lance, 59 N. Y. 603).

VOLUNTARY PEONAGE

"Peonage" is a status or condition of compulsory service, based upon the indebtedness of the peon to the master. "Voluntary peonage" exists where the debtor voluntarily contracts to enter the service of his creditor, while "involuntary peonage" is forced upon the debtor by some provision of law. Ex parte Hollman, 60 S. E. 19, 24, 79 S. C. 9, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242, 14 Ann. Cas. 1105.

VOLUNTARY PROCEEDING

See In Voluntary Proceedings.

VOLUNTARY RATE REDUCTION

The reduction of rates made by a railroad company, because forced to do so, as it could not otherwise continue to successfully compete for the business, is not "voluntary," within the meaning of the Interstate Commerce Act. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co., 141 Fed. 1003, 1017 (citing East Tennessee, V. &

G. Ry. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 21 Sup. Ct. 516, 181 U. S. 1, 45 L. Ed. 719.

VOLUNTARY RETURN

To constitute "voluntary return" of property, it must be willingly restored to the owner within a reasonable time, the motive inducing its return being immaterial, but a return after accused is found in possession or taken in the act, or after prosecution is instituted, is not voluntary. Petty v. State, 129 S. W. 615, 618, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 586.

VOLUNTARY SELF-DESTRUCTION

"Voluntary self-destruction" obviously can mean nothing more than the taking of one's life purposely and intentionally. "Involuntary self-destruction" would then include all those cases where a person, without intending to accomplish his own death, carelessly and negligently does acts which may naturally and probably result, and do in fact result, in death." Courtemanche v. Supreme Court I. O. O. F., 98 N. W. 749, 751, 136 Mich. 30, 64 L. R. A. 668, 112 Am. St. Rep. 345.

VOLUNTARY SEPARATION

As used in Rev. St. 1898, § 2356, subd. 7, authorizing a divorce where the parties have voluntarily lived separate for five years, the separation must have been mutually voluntary by the parties; and hence, where a wife was compelled to leave her husband by reason of his cruelty, their subsequent living apart for five years was not "voluntary" on her part, and did not entitle him to a divorce. Jakubke v. Jakubke, 104 N. W. 704, 705, 125 Wis. 635.

To constitute a "voluntary separation" of husband and wife for a period of five years next preceding the commencement of the action a ground of divorce, it must appear that the separation was mutually voluntary in its inception, and so continued throughout the statutory period. Sanders v. Sanders, 116 N. W. 176, 135 Wis. 613.

VOLUNTARY SETTLEMENT

The delivery by a father of a deed in favor of his son to a third person, with directions to keep the deed until the grantor's death and to then have it recorded, is a transaction in the nature of a "voluntary settlement"; such directions clearly disclosing the intent of the grantor to irrevocably divest himself of all dominion over the deed, and that the grantee should thereby be invested with the title to the land, and become entitled to the deed after it was recorded. Thompson v. Calhoun, 74 N. E. 775, 776, 216 Ill. 161.

VOLUNTARY STATEMENT

See Voluntary Confession.

A "voluntary statement," which may be used in evidence against a defendant in a criminal prosecution, is one which is not made under the influence of a threat or menace which inspires dread or alarm, or induced by artifice, or by promise or inducement of profit, or amelioration of punishment. Anderson v. State, 114 N. W. 112, 114, 133 Wis. 601 (citing Hintz v. State, 104 N. W. 110, 125 Wis. 405).

The word "voluntary" is not in all instances used in contradistinction to "compulsory." Failure to claim the privilege of not being required to make incriminating statements, or testifying without objection at inquests, seems in some cases to have been regarded sufficient from which to deduce the conclusion that testimony was "voluntary," without considering whether or not extraneous influence was the inducing cause of the statements by the accused. No hard and fast rule can be formulated as a test to determine the voluntary character of statements by an accused, but each case must be determined upon its own circumstances. The mere fact that an oath is or is not administered cannot ordinarily of itself serve as a true test. It is said that, to be voluntary, a statement must proceed from a spontaneous suggestion of the party's own mind, free from the influence of any extraneous disturbing cause. Where defendants, being suspected of having committed a homicide, were examined before arrest as witnesses at a coroner's inquest, and without being represented by counsel, or warned, they testified, though knowing that they were suspected of complicity in the offense under investigation, the statements made by them were inadmissible against them in a subsequent prosecution for the homicide. Tuttle v. People, 79 Pac. 1035, 1038, 33 Colo. 243, 70 L. R. A. 33, 3 Ann. Cas. 513.

VOLUNTARY SURRENDER

Where tenants were summarily ejected, their retirement, without immediate removal of trade fixtures, could not be regarded as a "voluntary surrender" thereof to the lessor. Bergh v. Herring-Hall-Marvin Safe Co., 136 Fed. 368, 371, 69 C. C. A. 212, 70 L. R. A. 756.

VOLUNTARY TAKING OF POISON

The taking of poison unintentionally is not a "voluntary taking," within an accident policy providing that the insurance did not cover an accident or death resulting wholly or partially from "voluntary or involuntary taking of poison," and hence the taking was accidental, and liability would accrue, unless such an accidental taking is excluded by the term "involuntary." Kennedy v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 72 S. W. 602, 603, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 509.

VOLUNTARY TRANSFER

Civ. Code, § 1040, defines a "voluntary transfer" to be an executed contract, subject to all the rules of law concerning contracts in general, except that a consideration is not necessary to its validity. Curtin v. Kowalsky, 78 Pac. 962, 963, 145 Cal. 431.

VOLUNTARY TRUST

Gift distinguished, see Gift.

A "voluntary trust" is a device by which a donor effectuates a gift either of property or of its beneficial use to a designated donee. In re Podhajsky's Estate, 115 N. W. 590, 592, 137 Iowa, 742.

To create a valid "voluntary trust" inter vivos, where the donor is not trustee, there must be an intent to make a present transfer of ownership upon trust, and the donor must do everything that, according to the nature of the property, is necessary to execute that intent. Talbot v. Talbot, 78 Atl. 535, 540, 32 R. I. 72, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1221.

"A 'voluntary trust' is an obligation arising out of a personal confidence reposed in, and voluntarily accepted by, one for the benefit of another. * * * A 'voluntary trust' is created as to the trustor and beneficiary by any words or acts of the trustor indicating, with reasonable certainty: (1) An intention on the part of the trustor to create a trust; and (2) the subject, purpose, and beneficiary of the trust." A will giving to testatrix's children certain property, and to her husband one-tenth of her other property, naming him, with two others, trustees for testatrix's whole estate, to be so protected by them that her children shall receive at the age of 25 one half of all that is due, and at 30 the remaining half, providing that they shall receive a commission for their services, assigning to them the duty of keeping the children in such circumstances as will permit them to have every comfort of dress, etc., and all needed education, and providing that in case of her husband's death a certain other person shall act as trustee with the survivors creates a trust as to the property, except that given her husband; the purpose being sufficiently plain, and a devise, in terms, to the trustees not being necessary. In re Reith's Estate, 77 Pac. 942, 943, 144 Cal. 314 (citing Civ. Code, § 2221).

VOLUNTARY WASTE

"Voluntary waste" is active or positive, and consists in some act of destruction or devastation. Norris v. Laws, 64 S. E. 499, 501, 150 N. C. 599.

VOLUNTARILY

A husband "voluntarily" fails to support his wife and children, when his failure to do so is the result of drunkenness, and not owing to some physical or mental disability, or other cause over which he has no control. Wheeler v. Wheeler, 61 Atl. 216, 218, 101 Md. 427.

The terms "voluntarily" and "unnecessarily," in the rule that a passenger who voluntarily and unnecessarily undertakes to ride on the platform of a moving train cannot recover for damages sustained from such perilous exposure, impose a limitation on the rule; and where it appears that owing to the overcrowded condition of the car, there is neither sitting nor standing room on the inside, it may not be negligence to occupy the platform. But so long as there is standing room inside the car the passenger cannot occupy the platform. A declaration for injuries to a passenger, alleging that he took passage on the rear coach of defendant's train, and not being able to secure a seat in that coach, because of its overcrowded condition, stood on the rear platform thereof and was thrown from the train while it was passing around a curve at a rapid speed, but failing to allege that the defendant attempted to gain a seat in any other coach of the train, or requested any of the trainmen to secure a seat for him, or that there was no standing room inside the rear coach, was demurrable, it not appearing that plaintiff was not "voluntarily" and unnecessarily riding on the platform. Meyere v. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry., 72 S. W. 114, 116, 110 Tenn. 166.

Where there was evidence that confessions of accused to the officers were induced by threats or promises of assistance, an instruction that unless the statements were made voluntarily, and not induced by threats or promises, the jury could not consider them in the case, was sufficient, under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, arts. 789, 790, requiring that the confessions be made "freely" and without compulsion in order to be admissible as evidence, though it be conceded that "freely" and "voluntarily" are not synonymous. Cross v. State (Tex.) 101 S. W. 213, 214.

Acts 1909, No. 291, § 39, provides that, on proper application, township boards shall approve bonds of retail liquor dealers, not to exceed the number doing business in such township in April, 1909, provided that, if thereafter the number of retail liquor dealers in any township shall exceed the ratio of one to each 500 inhabitants, no license shall be issued to take the place of licenses revoked, or which shall "voluntarily have been surrendered" until the ratio of licenses shall not exceed one saloon for every 500 inhabitants. In April, 1909, there were six licensed places for the retail sale of liquor in a township having a population of 1,249, and for the license term running to May, 1910, only five licenses were issued therein, one of the six licensees not applying for renewal, and for the year 1910-1911 only four licenses were issued, one of the five licensees of the preceding year not applying for renewal, and there being no new applicants. Held, on application for license, that licenses expiring by limitation, and for which neither the holder nor any other person made application for renewal, were "voluntarily surrendered," within the meaning of the act, and hence that no additional license could be issued until the population warranted its issuance. Ploof v. Township Board of Bangor Tp., 134 N. W. 3, 4, 168 Mich. 697.

VOLUNTEER

The term "volunteer," when used to designate persons as against whom equity will enforce an equitable assignment or lien upon a particular fund, means one who has received money from the debtor without consideration therefor, and does not contemplate an attaching creditor undertaking to secure a valid subsisting indebtedness. Love v. Ardmore Stock Exchange, 82 S. W. 721, 726, 5 Ind. T. 202, 67 L. R. A. 617, 5 Ann. Cas. 183.

"One who, in the performance of his own interests, or those of his master, assists servants of another in the performance of their work, is not, a 'fellow servant' of such servants, nor a 'volunteer,' but occupies a third position, viz., that of a 'licensee with an interest.'" A "volunteer" is one who intrudes himself into matters which do not concern him, or does or undertakes to do something which he is not legally nor morally bound to do, and which is not in pursuance or protection of any interest. To one who is a volunteer, properly speaking, even if assisting in the master's work at the request of a servant, no affirmative duty to exercise care is due originally, but only after knowledge of peril. Kelly v. Tyra, 114 N. W. 750, 752, 753, 103 Minn. 176, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 334 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 1557, and quoting and adopting definition in Ryan v. John O'Brien Boiler Works, 68 Mo. App. 148, 151).

"A 'volunteer' is a person who gives his services without any express or implied promise of remuneration in return, and is entitled to no remuneration for his services. * * * But a person who, though not obliged to do an act, yet has an interest in doing it, is not necessarily a volunteer." Slate v. Henkle, 78 Pac. 325, 327, 45 Or. 430.

"The terms 'stranger' and 'volunteer,' as used with reference to the subject of subrogation, mean one who in no event resulting from the existing state of affairs can become liable for the debt, and whose property is not charged for the payment thereof, and cannot be sold therefor." Hoffman v. Hahighorst, 91 Pac. 20, 21, 49 Or. 379.

A person who gives his services without any express or implied promise of remuneration in return is a "volunteer," and entitled to no remuneration for his services. Where it was shown that six members of the fire department of defendant city were paid annual or monthly salaries, and all other members of the department were paid, in accordance with the ordinance of the city, $1 for the first hour, and 50 cents per hour for all subsequent time in the daytime, and 75 cents in the nighttime, for time spent in actual attendance at fires, such department was a "paid department," within the meaning of section 2968, Rev. Codes 1905, relating to distribution of certain funds. Continental Hose

Co. No. 1 v. City of Fargo, 114 N. W. 834, 836, 17 N. D. 5 (citing Black's Law Dict.).

VOTE

See Casting Vote; Equal Vote; Give in His Vote; Greatest Number of Votes; Illegal Vote; Two-Thirds Vote.

Unanimous vote, see Unanimous—Unanimously.

Votes taken, see Taken.

"The Century Dictionary defines 'vote' as the formal expression of a will, preference, wish, or choice in regard to any measure proposed, in which the person voting has an interest in common with others, either in electing a person to fill a certain situation or office, or in passing laws, rules, regulations, etc." Warren v. Pim, 59 Atl. 773, 783, 66 N. J. Eq. 353.

The word "vote," used as a noun, is the expression of the choice or preference of a voter. The choice may be exercised in several different manners—viva voce, by the use of a "ballot," by show of hands, by a division of the house or meeting, and possibly by other methods. State v. Blaisdell, 119 N. W. 360, 363, 18 N. D. 31.

As majority vote

The word "vote," when used in statutes, unless otherwise expressed, means a majority vote. Bean v. Prudential Committee of School Dist. No. 11 in Glover, 38 Vt. 177, 178.

Ballot distinguished

"Ballot" and "vote," though sometimes used synonymously, are not synonymous, and a "ballot" is the instrument by which a voter expresses his choice between candidates, or in respect to propositions; while his "vote" is the choice or election as expressed by his ballot. Clary v. Hurst, 138 S. W. 566, 569, 104 Tex. 423 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 7358, 7359).

A ballot, as distinguished from a "vote," in the legal sense, and in a general way, is the piece of paper upon which the voter expresses his choice. State v. Blaisdell, 119 N. W. 360, 363, 18 N. D. 31.

"While the terms 'ballot' and 'vote' are sometimes confused, and while they may sometimes be used synonymously, the 'ballot' is in fact * * * the instrument by which the voter expresses his choice between two candidates or two propositions, and his 'vote' is his choice or election between the two, as expressed by his 'ballot,' and when his 'ballot' makes no choice between any two candidates, or on any question, then he casts no 'vote' for either of these candidates or on the question. Those 'ballots' are not 'votes.' * * * The official 'ballot,' so called, is not complete when furnished to the elector as he enters the booth to prepare his 'ballot.' It is a mere form for a 'ballot.' When marked and prepared by a voter so as to show his choice at the election, then, and not until then, does it become his constitutional 'ballot.'" State v. Custer, 66 Atl. 306-308, 28 R. I. 222 (quoting and adopting definitions in Davis v. Brown, 34 S. E. 839, 841, 46 W. Va. 716, 723, and State ex rel. Runge v. Anderson, 76 N. W. 482, 484, 100 Wis. 523, 530, 42 L. R. A. 239).

The term "votes," in Const. art. 17, § 6, requiring a majority of the votes at a special election for the relocation of a county seat, is not the equivalent of "ballots," and distinguished, illegal, and blank ballots will not be considered. Town of Eufaula v. Gibson, 98 Pac. 577, 578, 22 Okl. 507.

Under St. 1912, c. 559, pt. 3, § 1, revising the charter of the city of Salem, which provided that the act should be submitted to the registered voters at the state election in 1912, for a vote primarily on the question whether the present charter should be repealed, and secondarily on the question whether, if it was repealed, the new charter should be plan 1 or plan 2, and that if, on a "majority of the ballots cast," the votes should be for a repeal, the plan receiving the largest number of votes cast should be adopted as the city charter, the ballot on which the questions were printed contained, besides the names of a large number of candidates for state and national offices, questions upon the adoption of constitutional amendments, and the total number of ballots cast was 6,906, of which, on the question of repealing the charter, 1,676 were blank, 2,240 were against repeal, and 3,050 were for repeal. Held that, in view of the legislative policy to make an acceptance of a city charter turn upon the affirmative votes of a majority of those voting on the question, the word "ballots" was synonymous with "votes," and that only the ballots carrying votes on the question of repeal were to be counted, and hence that, as there was a "majority of the ballots cast" in favor of repeal, the old charter was repealed, and the plan receiving the larger number of votes was adopted as the new charter. Cashman v. Entwistle, 100 N. E. 58, 59, 213 Mass. 153; State ex rel. Weinberger v. Miller, 99 N. E. 1078, 1081, 87 Ohio St. 12, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 712, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 761.

VOTE OF THE MAJORITY

See Majority.

VOTER

See Disfranchised Voters; Legal Voter; Qualified Voters; Registered Voter; Three-Fifths of the Voters.

The word "elector," or "voter," is a technical term, descriptive of a citizen having constitutional and statutory qualifications to vote. Greenough v. Board of Police Com'rs of Town of Tiverton, 74 Atl. 785, 788, 30 R. I. 212, 136 Am. St. Rep. 953.

A nonregistered voter may sign a petition for the nomination of a candidate for a public office, though the statute uses the words "voter" and "legally qualified voter or elector." In re Herman, 96 N. Y. Supp. 144, 145, 108 App. Div. 335.

The word "voters" has two meanings—persons who perform the act of voting, and persons who have the qualifications entitling them to vote. The term "legal voter" is defined, and we think properly so, as meaning unless a different meaning appears from other language in the act, a qualified voter who does in fact vote. State v. Blaisdell, 119 N. W. 360, 363, 18 N. D. 31.

As used in a requirement that a certain thing, to be adopted, should be favored by a certain percentage of the voters at a stated election, a "voter" is one who votes, and not one who, though qualified to vote, does not do so. Fox v. City of Seattle, 86 Pac. 379, 381, 43 Wash. 74, 117 Am. St. Rep. 1037.

As used in Rev. St. 1899, § 3027 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1733), providing that on application by petition signed by one-tenth of the qualified voters of any county who shall reside outside the corporate limits of any city or town having at the time a population of 2,500 inhabitants or more, who are qualified to vote for members of the Legislature in any county in the state, the county court shall order an election to determine whether intoxicating liquors shall be sold within the county outside the corporate limits of such city or town, the word "inhabitants" is not synonymous with "voters." Hence it does not require that a city, in order to be excluded, shall have 2,500 qualified voters within its limits, but 2,500 general residents are sufficient. State ex rel. Holladay v. Rinke, 121 S. W. 159, 163, 140 Mo. App. 645.

Const. § 157, declaring that no city shall become indebted to an amount exceeding the income and revenue for the year in which the debt is incurred without the assent of "two-thirds of the voters" at an election to be held for the purpose, requires the assent of two-thirds of the voters voting on the proposition, and not two-thirds of all the voters at the election; and this requirement is not altered by Ky. St. 1903, § 3490, subsec. 34, authorizing the incurring of such an indebtedness if two-thirds of all the qualified voters of the town shall have voted in favor of incurring the indebtedness, for every provision of the Constitution is mandatory, and the Legislature can neither subtract from nor add to the constitutional requirement, which regulates the subject and removes it entirely from legislative control. Moreover, "the usual construction of such statutes, where no means are provided to ascertain the number of votes in the municipality, is that it refers to the votes cast on the question. Board of Education of Winchester v. City of Winchester, 87 S. W. 768, 120 Ky. 591.

As citizen

See Citizen.

Elector distinguished

A "voter," as distinguished from an "elector," is an elector who actually votes. State v. Blaisdell, 119 N. W. 360, 363, 18 N. D. 31; Fabro v. Lown of Gallup, 103 Pac. 271, 275, 15 N. M. 108.

"Voter" is not synonymous with "citizen," or "elector," as persons who cannot vote may be eligible to citizenship. In re Rousos, 119 N. Y. Supp. 34, 36.

The word "voters," as ordinarily used, has two meanings—persons who perform the act of voting, and persons who have the qualifications entitling them to vote. Its meaning depends on the connections in which it is used, and is not always equivalent to "electors." Mills v. Hallgren, 124 N. W. 1077, 1079, 146 Iowa, 215.

Inhabitant synonymous

See Inhabitancy—Inhabitant.

As people

See People.

Registered voters

Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 3, 4, provide the qualifications of voters, and declare that every person shall be able to read and write, unless registered under another clause, before being entitled "to register," as required by section 3, and that before he shall be entitled to "vote" he shall have paid his poll tax for the previous year. Laws 1903, p. 290, c. 233, § 7, requires an order for a municipal election to determine whether saloons shall be licensed in lieu of a city dispensary on petition of one-third of the "registered voters" therein for the preceding municipal election; and section 9 declares that "any person entitled to vote for," etc., "shall have the right to vote at such election." Held, that "registered voters" did not include all persons whose names were on the permanent registration roll at the preceding municipal election, but only included those who had paid their poll tax as required and were entitled to vote. Pace v. City of Raleigh, 52 S. E. 277, 278, 282, 140 N. C. 65.

VOTERS PRESENT AND VOTING

The act of Congress authorizing municipal bonds notwithstanding the limitations on municipal indebtedness, and if two-thirds of the qualified voters as defined shall vote therefor, requires two-thirds of those actually voting only, and not a two-thirds of all of the "voters" in the community. Fabro v. Town of Gallup, 103 Pac. 271, 275, 15 N. M. 108.

St. 1904, p. 469, c. 457, authorizing a town to establish a water system after acceptance of the act by "two-thirds of the voters present and voting" at a meeting called for the purpose, does not require acceptance by two-thirds of all the voters of the town; but a vote adopted by two-thirds of all the voters present is sufficient. Seward v. Revere Water Co., 87 N. E. 749, 750, 201 Mass. 453.

VOTES CAST

Under Const. art. 17, § 1, providing for an amendment of the Constitution by a majority of "votes cast," a majority of the votes cast on the proposition for amendment is sufficient. Itasca Independent School Dist. v. McElroy (Tex.) 124 S. W. 1011, 1013.

Blank ballots are not "votes cast." Hicks v. Krigbaum, 108 Pac. 482, 486, 13 Ariz. 237.

Const. § 168, provides that changes in the boundaries of organized counties shall be submitted to the electors of the county or counties to be affected, and be adopted by a majority of all the legal votes cast at such election. Held, that the phrase "votes cast" means the total of the separate votes, or expressions of voters' preference for or against such a change, and should be limited to mean the votes cast on that proposition, and that to effect such change requires merely a majority of the votes cast upon the question of a change, and not a majority of the highest number of votes cast for any candidate, or upon any proposition voted upon at the election, since to hold otherwise would be to give as much effect to the act of an elector who did not vote on such change as that of one who voted in the negative. State v. Blaisdell, 119 N. W. 360, 362, 18 N. D. 31.

If by virtue of Const. art. 17, § 6, the majority of the votes cast at a special county seat election shall not be received by or counted in favor of any place voted for, where there are more than two contestants for the location of the county seat, the names of all except the two receiving the greatest number of votes shall be dropped, and the Governor shall cause a second election to be held at which only such two places shall be voted for, but, where there were only two candidates, the Governor shall call a second election at which the same two places shall be voted for, and the place then receiving the requisite majority shall be the county seat. A ballot cast by a qualified elector who has not subscribed and sworn to the affidavit required by Sess. Laws 1907-08, p. 382, c. 31, art. 4, § 12, cannot be counted for any of the contesting places at a county seat election, but, where the elector was qualified and acted in good faith, it must be counted as one of the votes cast in determining the requisite authority for the determination of the question at issue at the election. For the purpose of determining the majority of "votes cast" at a county seat election held under the provisions of Const. art. 17, § 6, and Sess. Laws 1907-08, p. 378, c. 31, art. 4, there must be a majority of all the ballots cast on such question by the qualified electors of the county, whether counted or not for one of the contestants. Incorporated Town of Westville v. Incorporated Town of Stilwell, 105 Pac. 664, 667, 24 Okl. 892.

The word "votes," in Acts 1887, p. 59, c. 3, § 9, authorizing an election to determine whether a county shall subscribe to the stock of a railway company, and providing that, if three-fourths of the votes cast at the election are in favor of subscription, the election officers shall take such action as may be required to make the subscription effective, means legal votes, for illegal ballots do not really constitute votes and are not to be counted in determining whether or not three-fourths of the votes are in favor of subscription. Catlett v. Knoxville, S. & E. Ry. Co., 112 S. W. 559, 562, 120 Tenn. 699.

Under St. 1912, c. 559, pt. 3, § 1, revising the charter of the city of Salem, which provided that the act should be submitted to the registered voters at the state election in 1912, for a vote primarily on the question whether the present charter should be repealed, and secondarily on the question whether, if it was repealed, the new charter should be plan 1 or plan 2, and that if, on a "majority of the ballots cast," the votes should be for a repeal, the plan receiving the largest number of votes cast should be adopted as the city charter, the ballot on which the questions were printed contained, besides the names of a large number of candidates for state and national offices, questions upon the adoption of constitutional amendments, and the total number of ballots cast was 6,966, of which, on the question of repealing the charter 1,676 were blank, 2,240 were against repeal, and 3,050 were for repeal. Held that, in view of the legislative policy to make an acceptance of a city charter turn upon the affirmative votes of a majority of those voting on the question, the word "ballots" was synonymous with "votes," and that only the ballots carrying votes on the question of repeal were to be counted. Cashman v. Entwistle, 100 N. E. 58, 60, 213 Mass. 153.

VOTING

Under Const. Ark. 1874, art. 19, § 22, which provides that proposed amendments thereto shall be submitted to the electors of the state for approval or rejection at a general election for senators and representatives, and that, if a majority of the electors "voting at such election" adopt such amendments, the same shall become a part of this Constitution, the approval of a proposed amendment by a majority of the electors voting on that proposition is not sufficient for its adoption, unless they also constitute a majority of all those voting at the election. Knight v. Shelton, 134 Fed. 423, 428.

VOTING BOXES

An order of the commissioners' court for an election under the local option law was not invalid because it authorized the voting at "voting boxes," instead of "voting places," since the terms have a similar import, and no voter was deceived thereby. Neal v. State, 102 S. W. 1139, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 513.

VOTING BY BALLOT

A "vote by ballot" consists in depositing a ballot in a box in such a way as to conceal the voter's choice, if he so desires it. State v. Custer, 66 Atl. 306, 308, 28 R. I. 222 (quoting and adopting the definition in State ex rel. Runge v. Anderson, 76 N. W. 482, 484, 100 Wis. 523, 530, 42 L. R. A. 239).

The word "ballot" is used to mean the ball or ticket used in voting; the act of voting; the result of voting. From the earliest times, "voting by ballot" has been a term used to contradistinguish open, viva voce, or public voting and secret voting (Bouv. Law Dict.); hence Const. art. 7, § 2, requiring all votes, except for township officers, to be given by ballot, merely declares the policy of the state to assure to the elector a secret, as distinguished from an open, vote, and does not permanently establish a particular mode of voting, and is not infringed by Pub. Acts 1903, p. 383, No. 234, amending Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 3750-3758, authorizing the use of voting machines, and requiring all voting by machine to be by a secret vote. City of Detroit v. Board of Inspectors of Election for Fourth Election District of Second Ward of City of Detroit, 102 N. W. 1029, 1031, 139 Mich. 548, 69 L. R. A. 184, 111 Am. St. Rep. 430, 5 Ann. Cas. 861.

VOTING MARK

See Valid Voting Mark.

VOTING PLACES

An order of the commissioners' court for an election under the local option law was not invalid because it authorized the voting at "voting boxes," instead of "voting places," since the terms have a similar import, and no voter was deceived thereby. Neal v. State, 102 S. W. 1139, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 513.

VOUCH

VOUCHER

A "voucher," in Sess. Laws 1899, pp. 405, 406, directing that the sheriff shall at the end of each quarter file with the commissioners a sworn statement, accompanied by proper vouchers, showing all expenses incurred, is a written acquittance or receipt showing the payment of the debt. Mombert v. Bannock County, 75 Pac. 239, 241, 9 Idaho, 470.

The ordinary meaning of "voucher" is a document which shows that services have been performed or expenses incurred. It covers any acquittance or receipt discharging the person or evidencing payment by him. When used in connection with the disbursement of moneys it implies some instrument that shows on what account or by what authority a particular payment has been made, or that services have been performed which entitle the party to whom it is issued to payment. First Nat. Bank of Chicago v. City of Elgin, 136 Ill. App. 453, 465.

The process called "voucher" at the common law was one whereby an unpleaded warrantee might bring in his warrantor as the real party and thus make him defend the action. Seyfried v. Knoblauch, 96 Pac. 993, 995, 44 Colo. 86.

VOUCHERING

The "vouchering" by a railroad company of a claim for repayment of freight charges paid, and the taking by the company of the amount of the claim as allowed for labor, supplies, equipment, and improvements and interest on bonded indebtedness, do not make the claim a lien prior to the mortgage bonded indebtedness, nor give the claimant the right to follow a specific fund into the hands of the receiver of the company and a purchaser from the receiver of the property of the company, subject to liens superior to the mortgage and bonds secured thereby, not chargeable with knowledge of the vouchering of the claim, and the creation of a lien thereby is not liable to the claimant for the amount of the claim; the "vouchering" of a claim merely meaning that the same has been investigated, passed on, and approved. First Trust & Savings Bank v. Southern Indiana Ry. Co., 195 Fed. 330, 332.

VOYAGE

See Earnings of Voyage; Half Line Voyage.

The term "voyage" has no fixed or technical meaning. It may refer to the outward voyage or to the homeward voyage or to the round voyage. The Lucy, 39 Ct. Cl. 221, 224.

Where a vessel was chartered for a "voyage" to St. Michael's, Alaska, the voyage began when she set about doing what was required of her to earn freight money for the owner; thus, where she was delivered at Seattle, where she took on coal, then proceeded to other ports, where she took on cargo and a further supply of coal, proceeding thence to Alaska and returning to Seattle, where she was again taken in charge by the charterer, it was held that the voyage began at Seattle, and not at the last port of loading. The Buckingham, 129 Fed. 975, 976.

The word "voyage" may have different meanings under different circumstances, depending on the subject to which it relates or the context of the particular contract in which the word is employed. In common parlance, each of the trips made by a vessel from Havre to New York and from New York to Havre, without any immediate stops, was a separate "voyage." Deslions v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 28 Sup. Ct. 644, 678, 210 U. S. 95, 52 L. Ed. 973.

VULGAR

The word "vulgar," as used in the act of May 6, 1893 (Gen. Laws, p. 177, c. 121), as amended by the act of April 27, 1901 (Gen. Laws, p. 314, c. 136), requiring a bond by liquor dealers to keep an orderly house, and providing that it must not contain any vulgar or obscene pictures, conveys such meaning as, with its companion word "obscene," will accomplish the purpose of the statute, which was to prevent the exhibitions in saloons of immoral and indecent pictures. The words "vulgar" and "obscene," in the act, are not limited to pictures suggestive of lewdness or lasciviousness. In an action on a liquor dealer's bond, required by the act, an instruction that "vulgar," as used in the statute, means mean, rustic, rude, low, unrefined, the opposite of refined, enlightened, scientific," was erroneous. Raley v. State, 105 S. W. 342, 343, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 426.

VULGAR LANGUAGE

A remark to a married woman, "Look me in the eye; are you satisfied with the man you married?" will not sustain a conviction for using "obscene and vulgar language" in the presence of a female, where there is nothing in the evidence to indicate that the remark was intended to convey an obscene and vulgar meaning. Roberts v. State, 47 S. E. 511, 512, 120 Ga. 177.

W

WM.

In a proceeding to sell land for taxes, an order of publication directed against W. N. W. is invalid as against the owner whose name is William N. W.; this being true, even though such owner had executed a mortgage, signing his name Wm. N. W., that being an abbreviation for William. Woodruff v. Bunker Culler Lumber Co., 146 S. W. 1162, 1164, 242 Mo. 381.

WABBLY

"Wabbly," in connection with the term "out of plumb," in describing a wheel driving belting, could be understood as describing the manner in which the wheel worked in reference to the belting. There is no variance between an allegation that a wheel driving a belt was "out of plumb and wabbly," causing the belt to alternately tighten and loosen, and proof that the surface of the wheel over which the belting worked was not true to the axle, that the axle had gotten out of the true center by the wheel having worn on one side, and that its operation was thereby rendered irregular and unsteady. Receivers of Kirby Lumber Co. v. Poindexter, (Tex.) 103 S. W. 439, 440.

WAGE-EARNER

See Independent Contractor.

See, also, Wages.

Where an alleged bankrupt had engaged in a mercantile business in which he had contracted debts, and thereafter acquired property by inheritance, worth $40,000, which he immediately assigned to his brother for $180, and during the year the assignment was made received wages for his services exceeding $1,500 per annum, he was not a "wage-earner," exempt from bankruptcy adjudication, under the provision of the bankruptcy act authorizing an adjudication against any natural person, except a "wage-earner," defined to be an individual working for wages at a rate not exceeding $1,500 per year. In re Wakefield, 182 Fed. 247, 250.

So, where an alleged bankrupt nominally drew a salary of $900 a year as salary, but owned two-thirds of the stock of the corporation, and drew more than $2,000 a year preceding the institution of bankruptcy proceedings against him, and was also in the business of buying and selling real estate, his holdings outside the corporation being worth nearly $90,000, he was not a "wage-earner" within the exemption. Carpenter v. Cudd, 174 Fed. 603, 605, 98 C. C. A. 449, 20 Ann. Cas. 977.

And one engaged in manufacturing and trading does not become a "wage-earner," within the exemption, because, while working as a manufacturer and trader, he also earns wages by working for another in a different occupation; and if debts are contracted while he is engaged as a manufacturer or trader, he is not exempt from involuntary bankruptcy because he subsequently becomes a wage-earner. In re Naroma Chocolate Co., 178 Fed. 383, 384.

Music teacher

A music teacher, giving lessons at so much an hour, is not comprehended by the bankruptcy act provision that "wage-earners" whose compensation does not exceed $1,500 a year shall not be subject to involuntary bankruptcy. First Nat. Bank of Wilkes-Barre v. Barnum, 160 Fed. 245, 247.

WAGER-WAGERING CONTRACT

The essence of a "wager" is that each party stands to win or lose on the result, and that the gains depend on the event. Thompson v. Williamson, 58 Atl. 602, 604, 67 N. J. Eq. 212.

The deposit of a sum of money by two persons in the hands of a third to abide the event of an unlawful game between the two is a "wager." Monahan v. Monahan, 59 Atl. 169, 173, 77 Vt. 133, 70 L. R. A. 935.

A "wager" is "a contract by which two or more parties agree that a certain sum of money or other thing shall be paid or delivered to one of them on the happening of an uncertain event." "A 'wager' is an agreement between parties differing as to an uncertain fact or forecast of a future event." In an action to recover money from defendants, obtained from the plaintiff by means of inducing him to believe that a foot race was "fixed," so that one party was sure to win, and persuading the plaintiff to participate to the extent of betting the money of one side to the simulated race as if it were his own, on the assurance that he should receive 20 per cent. of the sum won, he being ignorant at the time that the money all belonged to the parties on both sides of the pretended wager, held that, although he was in delicto, by consenting to act in such deceitful attitude, he was not in pari delicto with the conspirators, and is therefore entitled to recover back the sum of $5,000 which the conspirators persuaded him to intrust to the possession of one of them as a stakeholder, not to be bet on the race, but to be used to make a showing by the stakeholder in the event of a count of the stake money being called for by one of the feigned bettors. Wright v. Stewart, 130 Fed. 905, 920 (quoting Black, Law Dict.; Bish. Cont. par. 530).

As a bet

A "bet" is defined as that which is laid, staked, or pledged as between two persons upon the event of a contract or any contingent issue, the act of giving such a pledge, and to be synonymous with "wager" applied both to the contract of betting and wagering and to the thing or sum bet or wagered. Ex parte Walsh, 129 S. W. 118, 121, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 409 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 764).

A "wager" is "a 'bet'; a contract by which two parties or more agree that a certain sum of money, or other things, shall be paid or delivered to one of them on the happening or not happening of an uncertain event. A contract upon a contingency, by which one may lose, but cannot gain, or the other must gain, but cannot lose, is a 'wager.' * * * A wager is something hazarded on the issue of some uncertain event; a 'bet' is a 'wager,' although a wager is not necessarily a 'bet.'" Stevens v. Cincinnati Times-Star Co., 73 N. E. 1058, 1061, 72 Ohio St. 112, 106 Am. St. Rep. 586 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Bouv. Dict. 793).

"A bet or 'wager' is ordinarily an agreement between two or more that a sum of money or some valuable thing, in contributing which all agree to take part, shall become the property of one or more of them on the happening in the future of an event at the present uncertain, or upon the ascertainment of a fact in dispute. The term is applied both to the contract of betting or wagering, and to the thing or sum bet or wagered." One who, as agent for another, took money from the other, and sent it to a third person as a bet on a horse race, was not guilty under Acts Leg. 1903, p. 68, c. 50, § 1, making it an offense to "take or accept any bet on a horse race." Windsor v. State, 79 S. W. 312, 313, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 140 (citing Rich v. State, 42 S. W. 291, 38 Tex. Cr. R. 199, 38 L. R. A. 719).

Pub. St. 1901, c. 270, § 6, provides that, "if any person keeps any house, shop, or place resorted to for the purpose of gambling or lets any such place for that purpose, or suffers any person to gamble in any way in any such place, which is under his care or control, he shall be fined * * * or imprisoned." Section 18 defines a bet or "wager" as "any contract or agreement for the purchase, sale, loan, payment, or use of money or property, * * * the terms of which are made to depend upon or are to be varied or affected by any uncertain event in which the parties have no interest except that created by such contract or agreement." Section 7 provides that, "if any person shall gamble or bet on the sides or hands of such as are gambling or playing at any game he shall be fined * * * or imprisoned." By section 8 a gambler is defined as every person who plays at a game of chance or skill in a place which is resorted to for the purpose of gambling, unless it be shown that the game is for amusement only without a stake or possibility of gain or loss. Held, that gaming includes horse racing, and therefore betting on such races is illegal gaming. In re Opinion of the Justices, 63 Atl. 505 506, 73 N. H. 625, 6 Ann. Cas. 689.

Where money is deposited with stock-brokers as a margin, with the understanding that there is to be no actual delivery of stock, though in case of a purchase there could be delivery if desired, and that the contract was to be adjusted by the payment of the difference between the price named therein and the market price at the time of settlement, the contract is a "wager." Wheeler v. Metropolitan Stock Exchange, 56 Atl. 754, 756, 72 N. H. 315.

A contract for the sale of goods to be delivered at a future day is valid, even though the seller has not the goods nor any other means of getting them than to go into the market and buy them; but such contract is only valid when the parties really intend a delivery by the seller and payment of the price by the buyer. And if the real intent be merely to speculate in the rise and fall of prices, and the goods are not to be delivered, but the difference is to be paid between the contract and market price at the date for executing the contract, then the transaction is nothing more than a "wager." Richter v. Poe, 71 Atl. 420, 422, 109 Md. 20, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174; Beidler & Robinson Lumber Co. v. Coe Commission Co., 102 N. W. 880, 881, 13 N. D. 689 (quoting and adopting definition in Irwin v. Williar, 4 Sup. Ct. 160, 110 U. S. 499, 28 L. Ed. 225, and citing Dows v. Glaspel, 60 N. W. 60, 4 N. D. 251).

Under Code 1907, § 3338 (Code 1896, § 2163), providing that all contracts founded on a gambling consideration are void, etc., contracts for the sale and purchase of "future cotton," in which actual delivery of the goods is not contemplated by the parties, and where it is understood that the contract may be satisfied by the payment of the difference between the agreed price and the market price at the time of delivery, are "wager contracts," and void. Birmingham Trust & Savings Co. v. Curry, 49 South. 319, 320, 160 Ala. 370, 135 Am. St. Rep. 102.

An express agreement in advance between grain brokers and a customer that no grain was to be delivered or received on his contracts, but that the transactions were entirely on margin and settlements to be made between them on differences in the market, rendered such contracts void as "wagering contracts," and unenforceable in an action by the brokers against the customer, although the customer's orders may in fact have been executed on the exchange by actual purchases from or sales to third persons, who dealt with the brokers as principals without any knowledge of the customer. Ware v. Pearsons, 173 Fed. 878, 880, 98 C. C. A. 364.

WAGER POLICY

A life policy, taken on the life of one by one having no insurable interest, is termed a "wager policy," or a mere speculative contract, and is void. An assignment of a life policy to a third person, not a relative or creditor, and having no insurable interest in the life of insured, is invalid. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Lane, 151 Fed. 276, 284 (quoting and adopting definition in Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 26 L. Ed. 924).

An insurance against fire, without an interest in the subject-matter insured, is a "wagering contract." Bennett v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 60 Atl. 99, 101, 100 Md. 337 (quoting and adopting definitions in Washington Fire Ins. Co. of Baltimore v. Kelly, 32 Md. 421, 3 Am. Rep. 149, and Angell, Life and Fire Ins. § 193, p. 230).

A policy of life insurance, assigned to one having no insurable interest, with an agreement that the assignee should pay the premiums, and, when the policy was paid, retain the amount so paid and a certain part of the surplus, is void as a "wagering contract." Smith v. Agneu, 122 S. W. 231, 232, 137 Ky. 83.

"An insurable interest is such an interest, arising from the relation of the party obtaining the insurance, either as creditor or surety for the assured, or from the ties of blood or marriage to him, as will justify a reasonable expectation of advantage or benefit from the continuance of his life. But in all cases there must be a reasonable ground, founded upon the relations of the parties to each other, either pecuniary or of blood or affinity, to expect some benefit or advantage from the continuance of the life of the assured; otherwise the contract is a 'mere wager,' by which the party taking the policy is directly interested in the early death of the assured. Such policies have a tendency to create a desire for the event. They are therefore, independently of any statute on the subject, condemned as being against public policy." It is a question of fact for the court to determine whether an agreement, sought to be enforced in equity, by which the interest in a benefit certificate is to belong to a person not having an insurable interest in the life of the assured, falls under the ban of the law as a "wagering contract," and therefore entitles him to recover only his outlay made in pursuance thereof, or whether it is entered into in good morals, and in consequence entitles him to recover the entire proceeds. Brett v. Warnick, 75 Pac. 1061, 1062, 1064, 44 Or. 511, 102 Am. St. Rep. 639 (quoting and adopting definition in Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 779, 26 L. Ed. 924).

WAGES

See, also, Wage-Earner.

"Wages" is the reward paid for labor. It is none the less wages because it is paid for the piece; but compensation for labor is not wages, where payment is by the job, nor where it consists of the profits derived from the labor of others, and this though the claimant himself takes part in the work. In re Thomas Deutschle & Co., 182 Fed. 430, 431, 433.

Under a statute giving preference in the distribution of the assets of an insolvent corporation to claims for "wages of mechanics, workmen and laborers," the wages preferred and the class of persons within the statute depend upon the nature and kind of work done, rather than on the social position or professional character and standing of the person rendering the service, and, if the service is such as to bring the person rendering it within the statute, his compensation, whether large or small, or whether payable by the day, week, month, or year, is "wages," within the meaning of the statute, and preferred. But under a statute providing that the wages of employes of corporations shall be preferred, and defining the word "employé" as meaning "a mechanic, workman or laborer who works for another for hire," an attorney at law employed by a company to procure options on property, at an understood compensation of $10 per day and expenses for the time employed in the service, is not a "workingman" or "laborer," and hence is not an "employé" entitled to preference under the statute. Gay v. Hudson River Electric Power Co., 178 Fed. 499, 502.

A per diem employé, as a driver of a team for an engineer in the department of highways of the city of New York, may only recover the wages on proof of actual work, and while he is awaiting orders for work he cannot recover the per diem; "wages" being that which is paid for a service rendered. Doyle v. City of New York, 132 N. Y. Supp. 774, 775.

The compensation received by a man who owned a team, wagons, and a plow, with which he worked by the day for different employers, as he could obtain work, earning usually from $9 to $15 per week, and working alone when he could not find work for his team, must fall within the meaning of either "wages," or "hire," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1893, c. 541, § 1, cl. 27, 30 Stat. 545, defining a wage-earner to be one who works for wages, salary, or hire, at a rate of compensation not exceeding $1,500 per year. In re Yoder, 127 Fed. 894, 895.

The priority of payment of "wages" due "to workmen, clerks, or servants," given by the Bankruptcy Act, extends to claims assigned before the bankruptcy proceedings. Shropshire v. Bush, 27 Sup. Ct. 178, 179, 204 U. S. 186, 51 L. Ed. 438.

Commissions

Commissions paid a traveling salesman for his services are "wages," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b (4), 30 Stat. 563, and a claim for such commissions earned within three months prior to the bankruptcy of the employer is entitled to priority thereunder. In re Fink, 163 Fed. 135; In re Dexter, 158 Fed. 788, 789, 791, 89 C. C. A. 285. And so where a bankrupt corporation employed claimant to make sales of its product in a certain territory for 5 per cent. commission on all sales made within the territory to the dry goods, notion, and tailor trimming trade, out of which claimant was required to pay his expenses, such compensation constituted "wages," within the Bankruptcy Act. In re New England Thread Co., 154 Fed. 742.

A contract employing a salesman, which stipulates for a commission on sales and a payment of $1,000 a month in advance, and which provides that, at the end of the fiscal year, if it is found that his sales entitle him to commissions in excess of the amount paid, he shall receive the additional commissions, and where he has been overpaid, the overpayment shall be charged against future commissions, is a contract for the payment of wages in advance, and money advanced to him is "wages," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1391, as amended by Laws 1908, p. 433, c. 148, authorizing execution to reach wages. Laird v. Carton, 89 N. E. 822, 823, 196 N. Y. 169, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 189.

Compensation of condemnation commissioner

Compensation of a condemnation commissioner of New York appointed by a justice of the Supreme Court, not paid at stated times or in stated amounts, but allowed in bulk by a justice of the Supreme Court, is not "wages," "salary," or "earnings," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1391, providing that, where wages, earnings or salary are due to the amount of $12 or more per week, an order directing execution may issue, which shall become a lien on such wages, the amount specified not exceeding 10 per cent. thereof, and shall be a continuing levy until the execution is paid. Jones v. Nicoll, 131 N. Y. Supp. 341, 342, 72 Misc. Rep. 483.

Compensation of employer of others

Complainant contracted to solicit orders for the bankrupt for weather strips, and, when obtained, to superintend the placing thereof by workmen acting under his direction. The bankrupt paid the wages of the workmen and furnished the material, and out of the price retained the cost of the labor and material and 15 per cent. of the price additional, paying claimant whatever was left from the amount collected for his compensation. Held, that plaintiff was a "salesman," notwithstanding his duty of supervising the installation of the strips, and his compensation was "wages," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b, 30 Stat. 563, entitling wages of workmen, salesmen, etc., to priority. In re Roebuck Weather Strip & Wire Screen Co., 180 Fed. 497, 498.

Bankrupts operated a sash, door, and blind factory; claimants having charge of the blind and sash departments under contract, by which claimants employed and discharged their own men and were responsible for the work that they turned out, but for convenience the men drew their wages from the bankrupts, the pay rolls being made out by claimants and turned in for that purpose. Claimants were compensated by an agreed schedule of prices for each character of work turned out; the bankrupts in general furnishing materials, as well as the tools and machinery. All the employes were subject to certain factory rules prescribed by the bankrupts, and the hours of the men were regulated by the shop whistle; the amounts received by claimants depending on their success in managing their departments and getting out the work for less than the scheduled prices. Held, that claimants were not "workmen," nor their compensation "wages," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64, subd. 4, 30 Stat. 563, giving priority to wages due to workmen earned within three months before bankruptcy proceedings, not exceeding $300 to each claimant. In re Thomas Deutsche & Co., 182 Fed. 430, 431.

Where the landlord furnishes to the cropper everything to make the crop, except labor, which is furnished by the cropper and his family, the amount due the cropper after full settlement with the landlord is in the nature of "wages" paid to day laborers, and is not subject to garnishment while in the hands of the landlord, under Civ. Code 1910, § 5298. Thompson v. Passmore, 72 S. E. 185, 186, 9 Ga. App. 771.

Earnings distinguished

Earnings synonymous, see Earnings.

The term "wages," as distinguished from salary, is commonly understood to apply to compensation for manual labor, skilled or unskilled, paid at stated times, and measured by the day, week, month, season, or piece, but not by the job. The term does not include profits on the services of others, and it is not so broad as "earnings," which comprehends returns from skill and labor in whatever way acquired. First Nat. Bank v. Barnum, 160 Fed. 245, 247.

Fees or salary

"Salary" refers to a superior grade of service, and implies a position or office, and suggests something higher, larger, and more permanent than "wages." First Nat. Bank v. Barnum, 160 Fed. 245, 247.

The word "salary" imports a specific contract for a specific sum for a specified period of time, while "fees" are compensation for particular acts, and "wages" are compensation for services by the day or week. Blick v. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co. of Baltimore, 77 Atl. 844, 846, 113 Md. 487 (quoting 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6287-6291).

Lexicographers and some authorities class "salary" and "wages" as synonymous. Board of Com'rs v. Trowbridge, 95 Pac. 554, 556, 42 Colo. 449.

"Wages," in its ordinary acceptance, has a less extensive meaning than "salary," and is usually restricted to sums paid as hire to domestic or menial servants and to artisans, mechanics, laborers, and others employed in various manual occupations, while "salary" has reference to the compensation of clerks, bookkeepers, other employés of like class, officers of corporations, and public officers. Massie v. Cessna, 88 N. E. 152, 154, 239 Ill. 352, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1108, 130 Am. St. Rep. 234; Spellberger Bros. v. Brandes, 58 South. 75, 78, 3 Ala. App. 590.

Broadly, the word "salary" means a recompense or consideration made to a person for his pains or industry in another man's business. Whether it be derived from "salarium," or more fancifully from "sal," the pay of the Roman soldiers, it carries with it the fundamental idea of compensation for services rendered. Indeed, there is eminent authority for holding that the words "wages" and "salary" are in essence synonymous. Hopkins v. Cromwell, 85 N. Y. Supp. 839, 841, 89 App. Div. 481.

Worcester says, in referring to "wages," that "in ordinary language the term 'wages' is usually employed to distinguish the sums paid to persons hired to perform menial labor." Winfield defines the term as meaning: "The compensation paid to a hired person for services. This compensation to the laborer may be a specified sum for a given term of service, or a fixed sum for a specified work; that is, payment may be made by the job." It has also been held: "If there is any difference in the popular sense between 'salary' and 'wages,' it is only in the application of them to the more or less honorable service. A farmer pays his farm hand, in common speech, 'wages,' whether by the day, the week, the harvest, or the year. If for any reason he has occasion to employ an overseer, his compensation, no matter how measured, is called a 'salary.' An iron master pays his workmen wages; his manager receives a salary. A merchant pays wages to his servant who sweeps the floor, makes the fire, and runs his errands; but he compensates his salesman or clerk by a salary." State v. Duncan, 1 Tenn. Ch. App. 334, 339, 341, 342 (quoting Commonwealth ex rel. Wolfe v. Butler, 99 Pa. 542).

Money lent to pay laborers

Where a surety company, acting as surety on the bond of an insolvent, lends him money which is used to extinguish debt to his laborers, the claims of the surety company are not, at the time bankruptcy proceedings are instituted against the borrower, "wages due the workmen," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b (4), 30 Stat. 563. United Surety Co. v. Iowa Mfg. Co., 179 Fed. 55, 58, 102 C. C. A. 623.

As personal property

See Personal Property.

Seaman's allowances

A release, signed by seamen on their discharge at the end of a voyage, releasing the master and owners "from all claims for 'wages' in respect of the said past voyage or engagement," did not debar them from the right to maintain a suit, under Rev. St. § 4568 to recover for a reduction of allowance, or for the bad quality of the provisions furnished. Billings v. Bausback, 200 Fed. 523, 527, 119 C. C. A. 21.

WAGON

The words "wagon" and "cart" are generic terms, and mean almost any vehicle, whether used for the transportation of persons or property. Luce v. Hassam, 58 Atl. 725, 726, 76 Vt. 450. See, also, Fifth Avenue Coach Co. v. City of New York, 111 N. Y. Supp. 759, 776, 58 Misc. Rep. 401 (quoting and adopting the definition in Gordon v. Shields, 7 Kan. 320-325; Luce v. Hassam, 58 Atl. 725, 76 Vt. 450).

Buggy or carriage

The word "wagon" is synonymous with the word "carriage," and may be used to designate any wheeled vehicle intended to be drawn by horses. Luce v. Hassam, 58 Atl. 725, 726, 76 Vt. 450.

As merchandise

See Merchandise.

Motor vehicle

Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, p. 1, c. 466), provides that the word "vehicle" shall include wagons, cabs, carriages, omnibuses, motors, etc. An ordinance prohibits advertising wagons in the streets except business notices on ordinary business wagons. Held, that vehicles on four wheels, propelled by motors, designed primarily for the carriage of passengers, operated by a corporation maintaining a stage route, are "wagons" within the ordinance; a "wagon" being a wheeled carriage, a vehicle on four wheels. Fifth Ave. Coach Co. v. City of New York, 86 N. E. 824, 826, 194 N. Y. 19, 21 L. R. A.

(N. S.) 744, 16 Ann. Cas. 695; Id., 110 N. Y. Supp. 1037, 126 App. Div. 657; Id., 111 N. Y. Supp. 759, 58 Misc. Rep. 401.

WAGON PASS

A deed requiring the construction of a "cattle or wagon pass" means a pass sufficient for cattle and farm wagons, whether loaded or unloaded. It is common knowledge that some farm products which are taken by wagon through a farm, or from one field to another, will need a space of 12 feet in width and 10 feet in height to pass through. Owens v. Carthage & W. Ry. Co., 85 S. W. 987, 988, 110 Mo. App. 320.

WAI SAN

Dutiable as vegetable, see Vegetable.

WAINSCOTING

"Wainscoting" usually consists of narrow strips of wood placed upright and tongued together, extending from the floor upwards from three to four feet, except at windows, and about the entire rooms, except at door spaces, or it may extend only from the top, or near the top, of the baseboard upward. It may be next the studding, or it may be placed after the sides are lathed and plastered down to the floor, or only to the top of the baseboard. Decker v. Sanford, 135 Fed. 112, 114.

WAIT

WAITING ROOM

Under the statute requiring railroad companies to provide a waiting room and to keep their ticket offices open for at least 30 minutes immediately preceding the departure of all passenger trains, and to open the waiting room for passengers at the same time, and to post the length of time of delay of any passenger trains a room in a hotel near the railroad track, which passengers were allowed to use, was not a "waiting room," within the statute; for it was not connected with any ticket office, had no bulletins of late trains, and was not kept open in accordance with the schedule of trains. Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 139 S. W. 776, 777, 144 Ky. 541.

WAIVE

To "waive" means in law to relinquish intentionally a known right, or intentionally to do an act inconsistent with claiming it. Chamberlain v. City of Saginaw, 97 N. W. 156, 157, 135 Mich. 65; Ridgeway v. City of Escanaba, 117 N. W. 550, 551, 154 Mich. 68; City of New Decatur v. Chappell, 56 South. 764, 766, 2 Ala. App. 564. Thus the proper officers of a city who take final action on the merits of a claim for personal injuries to a traveler on a defective street, though not presented as prescribed by Code 1907, § 1275, "waive" compliance with the statute requiring notice as a prerequisite to the maintenance of an action for the injuries. City of New Decatur v. Chappell, 56 South. 764, 766, 2 Ala. App. 564.

The legal definition of the word "waive" is: To throw away; to relinquish voluntarily a right which one may enforce if he chooses; to desert; to abandon. Thus, where one sued in assumpsit for the value of timber cut and appropriated by another, he waived the right to recover for any injury resulting from the trespass. Roberts v. Moss, 106 S. W. 297, 300, 127 Ky. 657, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 280 (quoting and adopting Webster).

The word "waived," in Const. art. 3, § 28, providing that a homestead set off and recorded shall not be waived by deed of conveyance, mortgage, or otherwise, unless executed by both husband and wife, does not exclude a grant or mortgage, or any other disposition which may be included in the word "otherwise," a waiver is an intentional relinquishment of a known right. Davis v. Milledy, 75 S. E. 363, 364, 92 S. C. 135.

A patient, who, by failure to object to the testimony of physicians on the trial of a civil action, "waived" under Code Civ. Proc. § 836, his privilege under section 834 not to have information, acquired by a physician in his professional capacity, disclosed, cannot thereafter invoke the privilege on the trial of a criminal action against him. People v. Bloom, 109 N. Y. Supp. 344, 124 App. Div. 767; Id., 85 N. E. 824, 825, 193 N. Y. 1, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898, 127 Am. St. Rep. 931, 15 Ann. Cas. 932.

In view of a court rule, providing that agreements waiving any of the requirements of the rules shall be in writing, etc., an appellee will not be deemed to have waived the presence in the appellate court of the statement of facts in place of a copy thereof unless there is an agreement to that effect; the term "waive" meaning more than a mere failure to object. Royal Ins. Co. v. Texas & G. Ry. Co., 115 S. W. 123, 125, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 154.

WAIVER

See Express Waiver; Implied Waiver.

A "waiver" is the intentional abandonment or relinquishment of a known right. Reed v. Bankers' Union of the World, 99 S. W. 55, 56, 121 Mo. App. 419 (quoting and adopting definition in West v. Platt, 127 Mass. 372); Dunn v. City of Superior, 135 N. W. 145, 149, 148 Wis. 636; Aronson v. Frankfurt Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co., 99 Pac. 537, 541, 9 Cal. App. 473; Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 172 Fed. 364, 365, 97 C. C. A. 62; Hendrickson v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W., 138 N.

W. 946, 948, 120 Minn. 36; Weatherbee v. Dedham & Ist St. Ry. Co., 95 N. E. 81, 83, 209 Mass. 213; Flindelsen v. Metropole Fire Ins. Co., 57 Vt. 520, 524; Prichard v. Mulhall, 118 N. W. 43, 45, 140 Iowa, 1; Griffith v. Newell, 48 S. E. 259, 260, 69 S. C. 300 (citing Carolina Grocery Co. v. Moore, 41 S. E. 88, 63 S. C. 184, 188; In re Millers' & Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 106 N. W. 485, 487, 97 Minn. 98; Mettner v. Northwestern Nat. Life Ins. Co., 103 N. W. 112, 114, 127 Iowa, 205.

A "waiver" is the intentional relinquishment of a known right, or such conduct as warrants an inference of the relinquishment of such right. Enterprise Mfg. Co. v. Oppenheim, Oberndorf & Co., 79 Atl. 1007, 1012, 114 Md. 308, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 548; State ex rel. Drifill v. City of Anaconda, 111 Pac. 345, 347, 41 Mont. 577; Bank of Horton v. Knox, 109 N. W. 201, 202, 133 Iowa, 443.

"Waiver" is the intentional relinquishment of a known right, which may be done by such conduct as warrants an inference of relinquishment. Doane v. Simmons, 77 Atl. 775, 776, 31 R. I. 530.

A "waiver" is the intentional relinquishment of a known right, and any conduct relied on which warrants the belief that such relinquishment has been made constitutes in law a waiver. Currie v. Continental Casualty Co., 126 N. W. 164, 165, 147 Iowa, 281, 140 Am. St. Rep. 300.

A "waiver" is the intentional relinquishment of a known right, which may be shown by a course of conduct signifying a purpose not to stand on a right, and permitting the inference that the right in question will not be insisted on, and where the facts and circumstance relating to the subject are admitted, or clearly established, waiver becomes a question of law. Swedish-American Bank of Minneapolis v. Koebernick, 117 N. W. 1020, 1023, 136 Wis. 473, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1090.

A "waiver" is an intentional relinquishment of a known right, which may be manifested by word of mouth, or by such acts and conduct as would naturally give rise to an inference that a waiver is intended; and there is no waiver unless the intention to waive is understood by the party to be benefited, or where one party has misled the other, or unless the act relied on ought in equity to estop the party from denying it. Alexander v. North Carolina Savings Bank & Trust Co., 71 S. E. 69, 70, 155 N. C. 124.

A "waiver" is the voluntary relinquishment of a known right. It may be made by express words or by conduct which renders impossible a performance by the other party, or which seems to dispense with complete performance at a time when the obligor might fully perform. It must be voluntary, with knowledge of the facts and of the party's rights, or it must be implied from conduct which amounts to estoppel. List & Son

Co. v. Chase, 88 N. E. 120, 122, 80 Ohio St. 42, 17 Ann. Cas. 61.

A "waiver" is an intentional relinquishment of a known right; its essence being voluntary choice, and not mere negligence. The intention need not be expressed, but must be evidenced by conduct of an unequivocal character, and the party must have acted with knowledge of all material facts affecting his rights. Barber v. Vinton, 73 Atl. 881, 883, 82 Vt. 327.

"Waiver," in a general way, may be said to occur whenever one in possession of a right, conferred either by law or by contract, and knowing the attendant facts, does or forbears to do something inconsistent with the exercise of the right, or of his intention to rely upon it, in which case he is said to have waived it, and he is estopped from claiming anything by reason of it afterwards." Mettner v. Northwestern Nat. Life Ins. Co., 103 N. W. 112, 114, 127 Iowa, 205 (quoting and adopting definition in Bish. Cont. § 792); Charlotte Harbor & N. Ry. Co. v. Burwell, 48 South. 213, 217, 56 Fla. 217; Murmann v. Wissler, 92 S. W. 355, 357, 116 Mo. App. 397 (quoting and adopting Bish. Cont. [1887] § 792); Henderson v. Koenig, 91 S. W. 88, 93, 192 Mo. 600 (quoting and adopting the definition in Williams v. Chicago, S. F. & C. R. Co., 54 S. W. 689, 153 Mo. 487; and Bish. Cont. [1887] § 792); Ohio Valley Buggy Co. v. Anderson Forging Co., 81 N. E. 574, 575, 168 Ind. 593, 11 Ann. Cas. 1045 (quoting and adopting definition in Bish. Cont. § 792).

Based on acts or words

A "waiver" is the intentional relinquishment of a known right. It may be made by an agreement, or without one, depending altogether on the nature of the matter to which it pertains. Hence a depositor, who knew that the deposit had been transferred by the bank to another under the belief that it belonged to such other, could, by his conduct in acquiescing in the transfer, waive his right to the deposit without expressly assenting to the transfer. Whitsett v. People's Nat. Bank, 119 S. W. 999, 1002, 138 Mo. App. 81 (citing West v. Platt, 127 Mass. 372).

A "waiver" is the intentional relinquishment of a known right, or such conduct as warrants an inference of the relinquishment of the right, and it never occurs unless intended, or where the act relied on ought in equity to estop the person from denying it. If a railroad company, within 30 days after a servant was injured, began negotiations of settlement with him through its duly authorized agents, recognized his claim, and told him that the company would do what was right, and thereby induced him to believe that it had waived the provisions of a contract between the company and the servant requiring written notice of a claim for injuries within 30 days after the injury, its acts amounted to a waiver of the written notice. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Hendricks, 108 S. W. 745, 749, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 314.

"Waiver" is an intentional relinquishment of a known right. Acts or conduct on the part of an insurance company which would justify a conclusion that it was not intending to insist upon full compliance with a statute requiring proofs of loss or a failure to require proper proofs upon a submission of defective proofs will amount to a "waiver" of their submission. Nicholas v. Iowa Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co., 101 N. W. 115, 118, 125 Iowa, 262 (citing Pringle v. Des Moines Ins. Co., 77 N. W. 521, 107 Iowa, 742).

"Waiver" being an intentional relinquishment of a known right, or conduct warranting an inference of relinquishment thereof—an election by one to dispense with something of value or to forego some advantage he might have taken or insisted on—the provision of a policy, insuring against losses by insolvency of insured's customers, relating to time for proof of loss, was not waived by the fact that in case of prior policies of insurer, an authorized agent of insurer had each year, and within 30 days after expiration of each policy, come to insured, and prescribed the manner in which his claim against insurer should be made out; such acts not having been subsequent to and with respect to the last contract. Shedd v. American Credit Indemnity Co. of New York, 95 N. E. 316, 318, 48 Ind. App. 23.

Where the by-laws of a fraternal insurance order provided that failure to pay an assessment when due would cause an immediate forfeiture of membership, and that reinstatement could be effected only by the payment of arrearages within a fixed time, accompanied by a certificate of good health, the acceptance by the association of dues from a delinquent member, without any showing as to his physical condition, constitutes a "waiver" of the requirement of a certificate of health. Mosiman v. Occidental Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 109 Pac. 413, 415, 82 Kan. 670.

An employer's liability policy provided that it did not cover loss or expense arising on account of or resulting from injuries or death to any person employed in violation of law, and that, if any suit be brought against the insured to enforce a claim for damages on account of an accident covered by the policy, the insurer would, at its own cost, defend such suit in the name and on behalf of insured. An injured servant brought an action against the insured, claiming that he was under 16 years of age, and that the insured negligently hired him in violation of the labor law. The insurance company, while notifying the insured that it was not liable, if the accident was the result of a hiring in violation of the labor law, defended the action. A judgment was recovered against the insured for negligence in violating the labor law.

The insured was invited to participate in the trial, and was represented by his own counsel. Held that, in defending the suit, the insurer did not waive the right to rely upon the exception in the policy; "waiver" being the intentional abandonment or relinquishment of an existing right, and the insurer having insisted on its nonliability, if the hiring was in violation of law, and defended merely to protect itself and comply with its agreement. Mason-Henry Press v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 130 N. Y. Supp. 961, 965, 146 App. Div. 181.

A complaint on a fire insurance policy alleged generally that plaintiff had fulfilled all the conditions of the policy on his part, and that 60 days and more before the commencement of the action plaintiff served upon defendant, as the proofs of loss, the complete inventory of the property destroyed and injured, the quantity and cost of each article and the amount claimed thereon, that it was retained by defendant without objection, and that no further proof was required or furnished. The policy required the furnishing of formal verified proofs of loss within 60 days after the fire, stating the time and origin of the fire, and other matters. Held, that the complaint was sufficient to enable plaintiff to avail himself of the waiver if proven, notwithstanding the fact that the word "waiver" was not found in the pleadings. Glazer v. Home Ins. Co., 82 N. E. 727, 728, 190 N. Y. 6.

A "waiver" may be inferred from any circumstances which show that both parties understood that payment of the premium would not be required at a specified date. Continental Casualty Co. v. Bridges (Tex.) 114 S. W. 170, 171.

Though a forfeiture of an insurance contract has taken place, it will be treated as waived and the insurance reinstated, if insurer accepts a premium thereafter falling due and retains it for a sufficient length of time to indicate that it considered the insurance still in force. And so where a mutual benefit association, after a certificate was forfeitable for nonpayment of an assessment, received the assessment, writing insured that it would hold the money in abeyance until he furnished the health certificate required by the contract to reinstate him, and thereafter and without objection accepted payment of a subsequent assessment, it waived the forfeiture, and that insured later furnished a health certificate was not a waiver of his right to insist that the insurance was in force, though he stated in such certificate that the insurance had been forfeited and requested reinstatement. Francis v. Supreme Lodge A. O. U. W., 130 S. W. 500, 502, 150 Mo. App. 347.

After a fire, the insurer sent its adjuster, authorized to settle claims, to the insured. The adjuster requested the insured to make a list of the goods destroyed, with the value thereof, and stated that he would come back in a week or two and settle. Held, that if the insured relied on the statements of the adjuster, and for that reason did not furnish proofs of loss, there was a "waiver" on the part of the insurer of proofs of loss; but if the insured, knowing that proofs of loss were necessary, or being so informed by the insurer's agent refused to make them, there was no waiver. Reed v. Continental Ins. Co. (Del.) 65 Atl. 569, 571, 6 Pennewill, 204.

"To constitute a 'waiver' [of proofs of loss] there should be shown some official act or declaration by the company during the currency of the time dispensing with it, something from which the assured might reasonably infer that the underwriters did not mean to insist upon it. * * * This never occurs unless intended, or where the act relied on ought in equity to estop the party from denying it. Mere silence is not enough." Under an insurance policy which provides that proof of loss shall be made within 30 days after loss, where such proof is not made within that time, and not waived within that time, the company does not waive a compliance with such condition on the part of the assured by denying all liability under the policy after the expiration of such 30 days. State Ins. Co. v. School Dist. No. 19, 71 Pac. 272, 273, 66 Kan. 77 (citing Bentley v. Lycoming County Mut. Ins. Co., 66 Pa. 9, 17, 5 Am. Rep. 318; Diehl v. Adams County Mut. Ins. Co., 58 Pa. 452, 98 Am. Dec. 302).

One holding the position of engineer at the waterworks plant of a village at pleasure of the board of trustees possessed the qualifications of an exempt volunteer fireman within Civil Service Law, § 22. The village trustees had annually appointed him to the position, and had issued to him an exempt fireman's certificate. Previous to a meeting of the board of trustees, he, as usual, orally requested the village clerk to present his application for reappointment as had been done in the years before when he was not an exempt fireman. The trustees were not misled into the belief that he made no claim to the retention of his position as an exempt fireman. Held, that he did not waive his rights as an exempt fireman holding his position as such for an indefinite term; a "waiver" being an intentional abandonment of a known right. People ex rel. McBride v. Atchinson, 123 N. Y. Supp. 577, 580, 68 Misc. Rep. 115.

Breach of contract by an employé, ceasing to act under it without giving the stipulated 60 days' notice, is "waived" by the employer agreeing with him to treat the contract as canceled as of the date of leaving, so that he is entitled to his compensation to that time, without deduction for any damages for such breach. Bailey v. Bourn Rubber Co. (R. I.) 67 Atl. 427, 428.

A landlord, in a lease providing for the payment of rent in advance and for forfeiture for nonpayment, who accepts rent after default, waives the right to terminate the tenancy for such default, but on every subsequent failure to pay rent at maturity the right to terminate the tenancy is available, unless the landlord is estopped; a "waiver" being the intentional relinquishment of a known right, or such conduct as warrants a relinquishment. Templer v. Muncie Lodge, I. O. O. F., 97 N. E. 546, 550, 50 Ind. App. 324.

"A 'waiver' is the intentional relinquishment of a known right, or such conduct as warrants an inference of the relinquishment of such right. 29 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, 1091." A contract recited that a vendor had executed a deed to a purchaser for a specified consideration, and stipulated that the vendor should furnish an abstract showing a good title, and, in the event of his failure to do so, the purchase price should be repaid to the purchaser, who should redeed the premises to the vendor. Before the making of the contract the vendor had rented the land to a third person, who executed his note for the rent, and the note was turned over to the purchaser, who collected it after maturity, and after he had been advised of defects in the abstract of title. The purchaser thereafter offered the land for sale. Held, that the facts did not show a waiver of the purchaser's right to recover the purchase price. Moore v. Price, 103 S. W. 234, 236, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 304.

The mere acceptance of goods by a buyer after the time specified for the delivery thereof is not a "waiver" of a claim for damages for delay in delivery. Buick Motor Co. v. Reid Mfg. Co., 113 N. W. 591, 593, 150 Mich. 118.

A seller, in a contract of sale fixing the time for payment for each installment of goods delivered, does not, by accepting payment for installments after the expiration of the time fixed for the payment, and after his notification to the buyer of his election to rescind the contract for breaches due to the failure to pay within the time prescribed, "waive" his right to insist on a cancellation of the contract. Ohio Valley Buggy Co. v. Anderson Forging Co., 81 N. E. 574, 575, 578, 168 Ind. 593, 11 Ann.-Cas. 1045 (quoting and adopting definition in Bish. Cont. § 792).

Where a seller treats a contract as a vital obligation, after ascertaining the breach of a covenant thereof authorizing rescission, and accepts the buyer's orders, acting as though the contract was still in force, such act constitutes a "waiver" of the right to rescind the contract. Bernard v. Sloan, 84 Pac. 232-235, 2 Cal. App. 737.

A patient's own testimony, or that of others given with his knowledge and consent, as to his physical condition, and as to the details of his treatment, in an action for malpractice, is a "waiver," under Code Civ. Proc. § 836, of his privilege under section 834 not to have information acquired by a surgeon in his professional capacity disclosed. Capron v. Douglass, 85 N. E. 827, 828, 193 N. Y. 11, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1003.

Where a note was executed in consideration of an agreement by the payee to surrender to a corporation its corporate stock owned and held by him but the manner of the surrender was not prescribed a delivery of the stock to the president of the corporation with whom and others the agreement was made was proper and a failure to make objection to the mode of performance was a "waiver" within Civ. Code, § 1501, and Code Civ. Proc. § 2076, declaring that objections to the mode of an offer of performance which the creditor has an opportunity to state at the time to the person making the offer, and which can be obviated by him, are waived if not then stated, etc. Hammond v. Haskell, 112 Pac. 575, 576, 14 Cal. App. 522.

A mortgage of an unplanted crop was executed and recorded before January 1st of the year in which the crop was to be grown. The mortgagor subsequently and before January 1st mortgaged the same crop to another person, and subsequently the second mortgagee purchased the crop from the grower and applied the proceeds of a resale to the payment of his claim. The second mortgagee informed the first mortgagee that he had taken a mortgage on the crop, and that he had furnished the money to the mortgagor with which to make the crop, but the first mortgagee said nothing about his mortgage. Subsequent to the execution of the second mortgage, the first mortgagee attempted to induce the second mortgagee to take up the claim of the first mortgagee against the mortgagor, but said nothing about the mortgage. Held, that the first mortgagee did not waive his right to rely on his mortgage as against the second mortgagee; a "waiver" being a voluntary and intentional abandonment or relinquishment of a known legal right. Clemmons, Powers & Co. v. Metcalf, 54 South. 208, 209, 171 Ala. 101.

A statement by a railroad employé, two days after the sale of a ticket, that it would be good as soon as trains began to run, was not a "waiver" of the time limit on the ticket, where the employé making the statement was not the one who sold the ticket, and he was not shown to have any authority to make the waiver. Elliott v. Southern Pac. Co., 79 Pac. 420, 424, 145 Cal. 441, 68 L. R. A. 393.

Under the statutory provision that depositions shall remain in court 10 days, subject to exception, before the cause shall be taken up for hearing, unless, by agreement of the parties, such time shall be "waived," consent to the taking up of a cause before the expiration of the 10 days amounts to a "waiver." Clark v. Callahan, 66 Atl. 618, 619, 105 Md. 600, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 616, 12 Aqn. Cas. 162.

A "waiver" or abandonment by implication of an express statutory power is not to be favored and where the certificate of organization of a corporation and the stock certificates issued by it do not contain an express "waiver" of the power conferred on it by the statute authorizing corporations to consolidate an abandonment of the power by the corporation will not be implied. Colgate v. United States Leather Co., 67 Atl. 657, 663, 73 N. J. Eq. 72.

Based on estoppel

"Waiver" rests fundamentally on the doctrine of estoppel, and is ordinarily one of fact for the jury; but where the facts are undisputed it is a matter of legal inference. Pittsburg Const. Co. v. West Side Belt R. Co., 75 Atl. 1029, 1032, 227 Pa. 90.

The doctrine of "waiver," whereby a mutual benefit society waives its right to declare a forfeiture of a certificate, rests on the assumption that by reason of the action of the society the member has been misled to his prejudice. Kennedy v. Grand Fraternity, 92 Pac. 971, 976, 36 Mont. 325, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 78.

"A 'waiver' need not be based either on a new agreement or an estoppel." In re Millers' & Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 106 N. W. 485, 488, 97 Minn. 98.

"The principle of 'waiver' rests on estoppel; * * * that is, when the plaintiff has been misled into thinking that nothing further will be required of him, and has on that account failed to take further steps which he might have taken, defendant company cannot take advantage of such failure induced by it or its authorized agent acting for it in the matter for the purpose of defeating its liability under the policy." Hence, when the acts of a fire insurance company and its agent led insured into believing that no further proofs of loss would be required, the insurer has waived the right to demand such further proofs. Griffith v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co., 120 N. W. 90, 92, 143 Iowa, 88 (quoting and adopting the definition in Ervay v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 93 N. W. 290, 119 Iowa, 304).

Consideration

A "waiver," to operate as such, must arise either by contract or by estoppel; and, if by contract, it must be supported by such a valuable consideration as will support any other contract. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Bryan, 65 S. E. 30, 31, 109 Va. 523.

A "waiver" is a voluntary and intentional relinquishment of a known right, and must be supported by some consideration, or the act relied upon as a waiver must be such as to estop a party from insisting on the right claimed to have been relinquished. Schillinger Bros. Co. v. Bosch-Ryan Grain Co. (Iowa) 116 N. W. 132, 136.

An owner who has employed a contractor to erect a building within a specified time, the contract making time of the essence, does not waive nonperformance within the time specified by accepting what was done by the surety of the contractor in furnishing financial aid to the contractor to enable him to complete the building, though he may not be able to do so within the time specified, and in allowing the work to go on to completion after the expiration of the time, the owner not being in fault for the delay, a "waiver" operating by way of an estoppel, or being supported by valuable consideration. Huntsville Elks' Club v. Garrity-Hahn Bldg. Co. (Ala.) 57 South. 750, 751.

A "waiver" is nothing more than the relinquishment of some right, which, being personal, requires no consideration for its support, it does not necessarily rest on the doctrine of estoppel, but results from an agreement between the parties, express or implied. First Nat. Bank of City of Brooklyn v. Gridley, 98 N. Y. Supp. 445, 451, 112 App. Div. 398.

"Waiver" is a similar doctrine to that of election. If a party to a contract not in default has the right, by reason of the conduct of the other party who is in default, to elect between treating the breach as a discharge of the contract, or treating the contract as in full force and effect, he may, if he so chooses, take the latter alternative. If he elects so to do, his right to treat the contract as discharged is thereby waived. A waiver may have reference either to the question of discharge of the contract or to the question of claiming damages by reason of a breach. If there is a consideration for waiving damages, an express or implied agreement to that effect is valid. Acquiescence may sometimes amount to waiver. Waiver includes the idea of intent, express or implied; but legal intent will often be presumed from one's conduct, and sometimes a party will not be allowed to overcome this by setting up what was his private purpose or intent. If a vendor agreed to ship certain personal property within a stated time, and did not do so, but shipped it some days later, and thereafter wrote to the purchaser that he had made the shipment, to which the purchaser replied that he would remit to the vendor for the "first payment" upon the arrival of the cars, and there was no evidence of any consideration for this statement in the letter, or that the vendor had acted upon it, or had done anything in reliance upon it, this did not constitute, as matter of law, such a waiver of any right on the part of the purchaser to claim damages resulting from a delay in the shipment as to authorize the presiding judge, in a suit by the vendor against the vendee for the purchase price, to refuse to admit evidence on the subject of damages, and to direct the jury to find a verdict in favor of the vendor for the full amount of the purchase price. Alabama Const. Co. v. Continental Car & Equipment Co., 62 S. E. 160, 163, 131 Ga. 365 (citing 3 Page, Cont. § 1494 et seq., and section 1506 et seq.; Van Winkle v. Wilkins, 7 S. E. 644, 81 Ga. 94, 12 Am. St. Rep. 299; Poland Paper Co. v. Foote & Davies Co., 45 S. E. 374, 118 Ga. 458).

Election to forego advantage

A "waiver" is the voluntary and intentional relinquishment of a known right, and implies an election to dispense with something of value or forego some advantage which the party waiving it might, at his option, have demanded or insisted upon. Clark v. West, 86 N. E. 1, 5, 193 N. Y. 349.

A buyer paying for stock and then accepting a delivery thereof after the date fixed for delivery, notwithstanding the depreciation in its market value, does not thereby waive his right to recover the damages sustained for the refusal to deliver on the designated date; a "waiver" being the relinquishment of a known right and implying an election to dispense with something of value or some advantage which the party might insist on. Chapman v. Fowler, 116 N. Y. Supp. 962, 964, 132 App. Div. 250.

"Waiver" is intentional relinquishment of a known right, implying an election to forego some advantage which the party might at his option have insisted on. Vicksburg Waterworks Co. v. J. M. Guffy Petroleum Co., 38 South. 302, 309, 86 Miss. 60 (citing Davis v. Hoopes, 33 Miss. 173; Goodall v. Stewart, 3 South. 257, 65 Miss. 157; Moak v. Bryant, 51 Miss. 560; Sullivan v. Board of Supervisors of Lafayette County, 58 Miss. 790).

Equitable estoppel distinguished

Estoppel in Pais distinguished, see Estoppel in Pais.

"Waiver" and "estoppel" are not synonymous, for, while they have attributes in common there are still marked differences; waiver being voluntary and intentional, while estoppel in pais may arise from an involuntary or unintentional act, or may result from an act which operates to the injury of another, while there may be a waiver while the opposite party is beneficially affected. Estoppel may arise between consistent remedies, but it depends rather upon what a party caused his adversary to do; while waiver depends on what one himself intended to do. Kennedy v. Manry, 66 S. E. 29, 31, 6 Ga. App. 816.

A "waiver" is a voluntary and intentional relinquishment of a known right, and may be shown by the express contract or other affirmative act of the party charged therewith, or it may be inferred from such conduct as warrants the conclusion that a waiver was intended. The term "waiver" generally implies an intention on the part of the person possessing some right under the contract or the law to relinquish it for the benefit of another. It is ordinarily personal, and, in the absence of some special agreement or consideration, its existence is to be determined solely from the conduct of the parties making it, independent of the acts of the other party affected. It is distinguished from "estoppel," in that this personal element is not an essential of estoppel. Nor in estoppel is the intention to relinquish a right necessarily present; estoppel in pais arising in a case where, by the fault of one person, another has been induced, ignorantly or innocently, to change his position for the worse, and it being essential to an estoppel that the representation or concealment relied on must be made with the intention that the other party shall act or rely on it, that the opposite party must have been induced to act, and must have acted to his injury thereon. Johnson v. Spencer, 96 N. E. 1041, 1042, 49 Ind. App. 166.

"Waiver" is a different matter from estoppel, for, to constitute a waiver, action to the prejudice of the party in reliance on the conduct of the party seeking to enforce a forfeiture is not essential, while such reliance is essential where estoppel is sought to be shown. Wandell v. Mystic Tollers, 105 N. W. 448, 450, 130 Iowa, 639.

"Waiver" of a right or benefit may be established by the actions, declarations, acquiescence, or silence of a party, as well as by his expressed consent and approval. It may be said to occur wherever one in possession of a right conferred by law or contract, and knowing the attendant facts, does or forbears to do something inconsistent with the right, or of his intention to rely upon it, in which he is said to have waived it, and he is "estopped" from claiming anything by reason of it afterward. While it is not, in the proper sense of the term, a species of "estoppel," yet where a party to a transaction induces another to act upon the reasonable belief that he has waived or will waive certain rights, remedies, or objections which he is entitled to assert, he will be estopped to insist upon such rights, remedies, or objections to the prejudice of the one misled. In order to work an estoppel, it is not necessary that acts or declarations should be made to mislead, but it is sufficient if they were calculated to and did in fact mislead. Marine Iron Works v. Wiess, 148 Fed. 145, 153, 78 C. C. A. 279 (quoting and adopting statements in Bish. Cont. § 792; 16 Cyc. 805; Swain v. Seamens, 9 Wall. 274, 19 L. Ed. 554).

"Waiver" is sometimes the express abandonment of a right. More frequently it is implied from acts that are inconsistent with its continued assertion. * * * 'Estoppel' is the shield of justice, interposed for the protection of those who have not been wise or strong enough to protect themselves. It is the special grace of the court, authorized and permitted to preserve equities that would otherwise be sacrificed to cunning and fraud." Johnson v. Aetna Ins. Co., 51 S. E. 339, 341, 123 Ga. 404, 107 Am. St. Rep. 92 (quoting and adopting definition in Ostrander, Fire Ins. § 366).

As estoppel

Estoppel in pais distinguished, see Estoppel in Pais.

That, in an action on an employer's liability policy, plaintiff alleged that defendant "waived" the right of objection that a claim was not covered by the policy, did not restrict it to a recovery in accordance with the doctrine of waiver, if the facts showed an estoppel; the terms "waiver" and "estoppel" being sometimes loosely used interchangeably, especially with reference to situations arising under insurance policies. Humes Const. Co. v. Philadelphia Casualty Co., 79 Atl. 1, 3, 32 R. I. 246, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 906.

A "waiver" operates as an estoppel on the party who waives; but it is not essential to a waiver that a party in whose favor it is made must prove all the elements of an estoppel in pais before he is entitled to avail himself of the waiver. Loftis v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. of California, 114 Pac. 134, 139, 38 Utah, 532.

"Waiver" is not, in the proper sense, a species of estoppel, unless the conduct of one party has induced the other to take such a position that he will be injured if the first be permitted to repudiate his acts. The kind of waiver capable of being described as an estoppel should have the marks of an estoppel, by causing the innocent party to forego some right, or otherwise to change his position. Dary v. Providence Police Ass'n, 62 Atl. 513, 515, 27 R. I. 377 (quoting and adopting definition in 16 Cyc. 805; Bigelow, Estop. [5th Ed.] p. 660, note 1).

"Laches," "waiver," and "estoppel" are distinct defenses. Laches, with some supporting circumstances, may run into waiver, and likewise into estoppel; but each has its own individuality. Waiver may run into estoppel. Berwind-White Coal M. Co. v. Metropolitan S. S. Co., 173 Fed. 806, 809.

While the terms "waiver" and "estoppel," as applied to the law of insurance contracts, are usually considered as synonymous, yet there are some essential differences between them, as a waiver involves the act or conduct of one of the parties to the contract only, and is the intentional relinquishment of a known right, and does not necessarily imply that one has been misled to his prejudice, while an estoppel involves the act or conduct of both parties, and may arise where there is no intent to mislead, and also involves the misleading of one party to his prejudice. Webster v. State Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 69 Atl. 319, 320, 81 Vt. 75.

While "waivers" and "estoppels" are theoretically very different things, and the distinction between them is one easy to preserve when express waivers are under consideration, it is nevertheless true that the dividing line between waivers implied from conduct and estoppels oftentimes becomes so shadowy that, in the law of insurance, the two terms have come to be quite commonly used interchangeably. When the term "waiver" is so used, however, the elements of an estoppel almost invariably appear, and it is quite apparent that it is employed to designate, not a pure waiver, but one which has come into an existence of effectiveness through the application of the principles underlying estoppels. Thus an insurance company is estopped to deny waiver of proof of loss, notwithstanding the provision of the policy that no representative of the company shall have power to waive any provision or condition of the policy, except by writing "Indorsed" thereon, where, after the fire, it sends a general agent to insured, who, after being furnished by insured with certain information, tells him that there are no further papers for him to make out, and that he, the agent, will attend to the rest. Bernhard v. Rochester German Ins. Co., 65 Atl. 134, 136, 79 Conn. 388, 8 Ann. Cas. 298.

Existing right

There can be no "waiver" unless when it is exercised the right or privilege to be waived existed. State ex rel. Drifill v. City of Anaconda, 111 Pac. 345, 347, 41 Mont. 577.

The word "waiver" implies that something may be relinquished. Under Civ. Prac. Act, § 341 (Comp. Laws, § 3436), providing that, to render an appeal effectual, an undertaking shall be executed, an undertaking cannot be waived by stipulation. Hoffman v. Owens, 103 Pac. 414, 415, 31 Nev. 481, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 603.

"The term 'waiver,' or 'to waive,' implies the abandonment of a right which can be enforced or of a privilege which can be exercised; and there can be no waiver unless at the time of its exercise the right of privilege waived is in existence. There can be no waiver of a right that has been lost." National Paraffine Oil Co. v. Chappellet, 88 Pac. 506, 507, 4 Cal. App. 505 (quoting and adopting definitions in San Bernardino Inv. Co. v. Merrill, 41 Pac. 487, 108 Cal. 490).

"Waiver" has generally been defined by the courts as the voluntary relinquishment of a known right. Without the existence of a right, there can be no abandonment, for there would be nothing to abandon. Statements of local agents of a fire insurance company that one of them was authorized to adjust a loss, and the action of this agent in making out proofs of loss, and professing to adjust the claim, were not a waiver by the company of a provision of the policy that action thereon must be commenced within one year after loss. Barry & Finan Lumber Co. v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 98 N. W. 761, 762, 136 Mich. 42 (citing Ostrander, Ins. § 57).

"Waiver" generally involves the relinquishment of a known or existing right. It cannot be a basis for waiver of, or estoppel to assert, conditions in a fire policy against incumbering the property without consent written on the policy, that insured, when applying for the policy, told the agent he intended to put on a small mortgage on the property, as he did after obtaining the policy, and that the agent told him this would make no difference; these matters not relating to a known or existing fact, but to something intended to be done in the future. McCarty v. Piedmont Mut. Ins. Co., 62 S. E. 1, 2, 81 S. C. 152, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 729.

In an action for goods lost by a carrier, and the statutory penalty for failure to adjust the claim within the time allowed after a claim is filed with the agent at the destination of the goods, it appeared that plaintiff had had a conversation with the carrier's local agent at the destination of the goods, who told him to send his claim to the general freight agent, which he did. In the correspondence with such agent there was no mention of the statutory penalty; and at that time defendant was not liable for it. Defendant had no right to compel plaintiff to file his claim with the local agent. Held, that the direction by such agent to send the claim to the general agent was not a waiver of the statutory requirement that the claim must be "filed" with the agent at the destination of the goods before the penalty sued for can be recovered, because "waiver" is the voluntary relinquishment of some existing right. King v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 68 S. E. 769, 770, 86 S. C. 510.

Knowledge and intention

"Waiver" is an intentional act. Findley v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis, 141 S. W. 866, 869, 238 Mo. 6.

A "waiver" is the intentional abandonment or relinquishment of a known right; the matter of intention being the essential element. Francis v. Supreme Lodge A. O. U. W., 130 S. W. 500, 501, 150 Mo. App. 347.

"Waiver" is the intentional relinquishment of a known right after knowledge of the facts. Alden v. Mayfield, 127 Pac. 45, 48, 164 Cal. 6.

A "waiver" is the intentional abandonment of a known right, and exists only when the party making it is possessed of knowledge in respect to the matter about which the waiver is asserted, and acted advisedly. Oehler v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., 139 S. W. 1173, 1176, 159 Mo. App. 696; Connell v. Clifford, 88 Pac. 850, 851, 39 Colo. 121 (quoting and adopting definitions in Pence v. Langdon, 99 U. S. 578, 581, 25 L. Ed. 420; Scott v. Jackson, 23 Pac. 898, 899, 89 Cal.

262, and citing Brown v. Cockrell, 33 Ala. 38, 47).

A person is not bound by a "waiver" of his rights, unless it be made with knowledge of the rights he intends to waive, and the fact that he intends to waive them must be made to appear. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Bryan, 65 S. E. 30, 32, 109 Va. 523.

There can be no "waiver" without actual or implied intent to waive. The intent may be actual or conclusively presumed from conduct without any element of estoppel; and such intent is conclusively presumed when a party chooses one of two plainly inconsistent remedies. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Rice, 139 N. W. 445, 446, 152 Wis. 8.

A "waiver" is a voluntary relinquishment of a known right, and before it will be enforced it must clearly appear that the party against whom it is sought to be enforced was in possession of all material facts affecting it. Norton v. Catholic Order of Foresters, 114 N. W. 893, 895, 138 Iowa, 464, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1030.

A "waiver" means the intention of relinquishment of a known right. It signifies nothing more than an expression of an intention not to insist upon such right. Both intent and knowledge, active or constructive, of the facts, are therefore essential elements. The intent may be inferred from facts and circumstances, as well as found in declarations of the party, and the knowledge may also be either active or constructive. In re Millers' & Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 106 N. W. 485, 488, 97 Minn. 98. See, also, Hendrickson v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W., 138 N. W. 946, 948, 120 Minn. 36.

"Waiver" is the intentional relinquishment of a known right, and there must be both knowledge of the existence of the right and an intention to relinquish it, and intention is a question of fact. Gafford v. Globe Transfer & Storage Co., 128 Pac. 228, 230, 71 Wash. 204.

"Waiver" implies the abandonment of some right which can be exercised or the renunciation of some benefit or advantage which, but for such waiver, the party relinquishing would have enjoyed; but generally there can be no waiver unless the person against whom the waiver is claimed had full knowledge of his rights and of facts which would have enabled him to take effectual action for their enforcement, as no one can acquiesce in an injury while ignorant that it has been committed and that the effect of his action will be to confirm it. Barroll v. Brice, 80 Atl. 1035, 1038, 115 Md. 498.

"Waiver" involves the notion of an intention entertained by the holder of some right to abandon or relinquish, instead of insisting on the right. Murmann v. Wissler, 92 S. W. 355, 357, 116 Mo. App. 397 (quoting and adopting Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Bassett, 71 S. W. 1113, 98 Mo. App. 53).

The doctrine of "waiver" is not peculiar to insurance contracts. To constitute a technical waiver, there need only be an intention to waive, either expressed or plainly to be inferred from circumstances. Appel v. People's Surety Co., 132 N. Y. Supp. 200, 202, 148 App. Div. 70.

Though a "waiver" is essentially a matter of intention, such intention need not necessarily be proved by express declarations, but it may be inferred from the acts and conduct of the party. Stewart v. Leonard, 68 Atl. 638, 640, 103 Me. 128. See, also, Burnham v. Austin, 73 Atl. 1089, 1091, 105 Me. 196.

"Waiver," or acquiescence, which is a species of waiver by tacit assent, implies abandonment of some right which can be exercised, or the renunciation of some benefit or advantage which, but for such waiver, the party relinquishing would have enjoyed. As a general rule, there can be no waiver, unless the parties against whom it is claimed had full knowledge of his rights and of facts which would enable him to take effectual action to enforce his rights, and no one can acquiesce in a wrong while ignorant that it has been committed. Dague v. Grand Lodge Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, 73 Atl. 735, 738, 111 Md. 95.

To constitute a "waiver" of a condition in a contract of sale requiring payment of a portion of price in cash, there must be, not only an act of delivery, but an intent not to insist on immediate payment as a condition of the title not passing. Ewing v. Sylvester (Tex.) 94 S. W. 405, 406.

When a purchaser, in his written order for goods, stipulates that the title to them shall remain in the seller until payment of the price "in money," and it is therein also provided that a note may be given for the price, the acceptance by the seller of the purchaser's negotiable note for the price is not to be deemed a "waiver" of the condition of the sale, so as thereby to pass the title to the purchaser, unless it appears to have been so intended. Anderson Carriage Co. v. Bartley, 67 Atl. 567, 569, 102 Me. 492.

"Waiver" is the intentional relinquishment of a known right." Where, in an action against a nonresident in a state court, its attorney was directed to appear solely for the purpose of removing the cause to the federal court, and on the last day for filing an answer for the cause the attorney filed a petition for removal and removal bond, and applied to the judge for an order of removal, and when, over objection, the court postponed a hearing of the application for removal to the following week, the attorney, believing it necessary to sustain his right to remove, and for that purpose only, orally asked for and obtained an extension of time to plead, such application for time should be construed as an application for an extension of time to appear for the purpose of pleading to the jurisdiction, or otherwise, and did not constitute an appearance sufficient to confer jurisdiction, for there was no relinquishment of the intention to deny the right of the state court to proceed in the cause. Waters v. Central Trust Co. of New York, 126 Fed. 469, 472, 62 C. C. A. 45 (citing Shaw v. Spencer, 100 Mass. 382, 97 Am. Dec. 107, 1 Am. Rep. 115; Hoxie v. Home Ins. Co., 32 Conn. 21, 85 Am. Dec. 240).

An agent of an insurance company when taking an application and when delivering the policy knew that insured was in a hospital, but was informed that he was there for a slight operation. When collecting weekly premiums, he was informed that insured was getting along nicely. Insured represented that he had never had heart disease, while as a fact he had suffered from the disease for more than a year, and was in the hospital on account thereof, and he died therefrom within six weeks after the issuance of the policy. Held, that the misrepresentation was not waived; a "waiver" existing where one in possession of any right does or forbears the doing of something inconsistent with its existence and with full knowledge of the material facts. Benson v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 144 S. W. 122, 161 Mo. App. 480.

An absolute refusal to pay life insurance, grounded on the merits of the case, a denial of all liability, or a negotiation with insured without objection to the proof of death, has each been held to constitute a "waiver" of the requirement to produce proofs of death. Where the beneficiary in a policy filed proofs of death, and insured declined to pay the claim on the ground that the proofs which plaintiff supplied showed that insured was afflicted with consumption before the policy was issued, and that there was therefore a breach of warranty, and there was no evidence that insurer knew or had reason to believe that the proofs furnished did not relate to insured, there was no waiver of the production of the necessary proofs required by the policy, so as to entitle plaintiff to recover on evidence that the proofs furnished related to another. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 61 Atl. 293, 294, 101 Md. 501 (citing McElroy v. John Hancock Mut. Ins. Co., 41 Atl. 112, 88 Md. 149, 71 Am. St. Rep. 400).

A "waiver" is the voluntary relinquishment of some known right, benefit, or advantage which the party otherwise would have enjoyed, it being essentially a matter of intent, and, when the only proof of that intent rests in what a party does or forbears to do, his acts or omissions should be so manifestly indicative of an intent to voluntarily relinquish a then known particular right or benefit that no other reasonable explanation is possible, full knowledge of all the material facts that establish such right being necessary, and so that, where a health policy provided that insured should pay in advance without notice his specified assessments, the insurer, which had no information of facts establishing a forfeiture of the policy except what it had acquired from its investigations after his proof of claim for benefits was presented, and which turned the claim over to its attorney for investigation, did not waive the forfeiture by receiving in the ordinary course of business, and receipting for, two monthly assessments during the period of the investigation, and before all the material facts had been acquired, showing that insured's answers in his application were untrue, insured knowing when he voluntarily made the payments that his claim had been turned over to the company's attorney. Berman v. Fraternities Health & Accident Ass'n, 78 Atl. 462, 464, 107 Me. 368.

The "waiver" of a right presupposes a knowledge of the right waived, and therefore, before defendant can be held to be estopped, or to have waived any of its rights, by reason of the conduct of a subordinate lodge or its officers, it must be shown that it or they had knowledge of the facts. Whigham v. Supreme Court I. O. F., 75 Pac. 1067, 1069, 44 Or. 543.

"A 'waiver' is an intentional relinquishment of a known right, implying an election to forego some advantage which one might, at his option, have insisted upon, and, to be effective as an estoppel, there must be, first, a knowledge of an existence of the right, and, second, an intention to relinquish it." An act of the general agent of defendant benefit society in accepting a premium without knowledge of the insured's death did not constitute a waiver by the forfeiture incurred by the insured's default. Miller v. Head Camp, 77 Pac. 83, 84, 45 Or. 192.

A "waiver" is an "intentional relinquishment of a known right, and there can be no waiver, unless the person against whom the waiver is claimed had full knowledge of his rights. * * * Neither will waiver be implied from slight circumstances, but must be evidenced by an unequivocal and decisive act clearly proven." To be valid, a waiver must be made intentionally and voluntarily. The existence of an intent to waive is a question of fact, and must be made to clearly appear. Hopkins v. Northwestern Nat. Life Ins. Co., 83 Pac. 1019, 1020, 1021, 41 Wash. 592.

A policy provided for forfeiture if the insured should become a railroad fireman without the insured's consent. Insured was killed while acting as such. In response to a request for blanks for proofs of death, the insurer sent blanks to plaintiff's attorney, containing a provision that the insurer, in furnishing the blanks, did so on the express stipulation that it did not waive the right to determine any question as to its liability on the policy. These blanks were not used, but plaintiff submitted an affidavit concerning insured's death, showing that it was caused by the explosion of a boiler on an engine on which insured was fireman. This was refused, the insurer requiring proofs to be made on its blank forms, and sent plaintiff a new set, containing an indorsement similar to the originals, which plaintiff filled out and submitted. Held, that the sending of the second set of blanks, with knowledge of insured's occupation and manner of death, was not a "waiver" of the forfeiture, which ordinarily must consist of an intentional release of a right. Elhart v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 92 Pac. 419, 420, 47 Wash. 659.

Where, in an action on an accident policy, the first defense was an exposure to danger which limited recovery to one-fifth of the policy, and the second defense was the untruth of the warranties as to health and habits, which, under the policy, made it void, and on the trial plaintiff admitted on record the untruth of the warranties, and before trial defendant tendered one-fifth of the policy in accordance with the first defense, which plaintiff refused, the tender was no waiver of a right to insist on the second defense, as there was no evidence that when the offer was made the defendant knew the false warranties; a "waiver" being the voluntary relinquishment of a known right. Kelly v. United States Health & Accident Ins. Co., 65 S. E. 949, 950, 84 S. C. 95.

As quasi estoppel

See Quasi Estoppel.

Ratification distinguished

"Ratification" and "waiver" are not synonymous. To approve is the gist of ratification, while to abandon or relinquish is the gist of waiver. Holloway v. Darden, 53 South. 187, 188, 168 Ala. 256 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 5928 et seq.).

Voluntary act

"Waiver" is the voluntary relinquishment of a known right." Montgomery v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 53 S. E. 987, 988, 73 S. C. 503.

A "waiver in pais" is the voluntary relinquishment of a known right. Bard v. Fireman's Ins. Co., 81 Atl. 870, 871, 108 Me. 506.

A "waiver in pais" is more than a passive, negative state of mind. It is a positive, affirmative act; not mere negligence to claim a right, but a voluntary choice not to claim it. Hurley v. Farnsworth, 78 Atl. 291, 292, 107 Me. 306.

A "waiver" is the voluntary relinquishment of some known right, benefit, or advantage, and which, except for such waiver, the party otherwise would have enjoyed. Gifford v. Workmen's Ben. Ass'n, 72 Atl. 680, 681, 105 Me. 17, 17 Ann. Cas. 1173; Stewart v. Leonard, 68 Atl. 638, 640, 103 Me. 128; Burnham v. Austin, 73 Atl. 1089, 1091, 105 Me. 196; Gray Lumber Co. v. Harris, 68 S. E. 749, 752, 8 Ga. App. 70; Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Durden, 72 S. E. 295, 296, 9 Ga. App. 797.

A "waiver" is a voluntary relinquishment of some known right, benefit, or change, which except for such waiver, the party would have enjoyed. A party cannot be deemed to waive by word or act a right which he does not know that he possesses. Rosen v. German Alliance Ins. Co., 76 Atl. 688, 689, 106 Me. 229.

"Waiver" is a voluntary relinquishment of a known right, benefit, or advantage which would have otherwise been enjoyed. It is essentially a matter of intention, which may be proved by a course of acts or conduct or by such neglect or failure to act as to induce the belief that it was the intention and purpose to waive. Holt v. New England Telephone & Telegraph Co., 85 Atl. 159, 110 Me. 10.

A "waiver" is the voluntary relinquishment of a known right, benefit or advantage. Voluntary choice is the essence of waiver, and the doctrine of waiver is not necessarily predicated on estoppel. Voss v. Northwestern Nat. Life Ins. Co., 118 N. W. 212, 215, 137 Wis. 492.

"Waiver" is a voluntary act, and is not an act forced upon a party by the court, so that where defendant objected to proof of conversations to show a contract, as being forbidden by the statute of frauds, and the objection was overruled and the evidence admitted, defendant did not waive such objection by giving his own understanding of the same conversations. McKee v. Rudd, 121 S. W. 312, 320, 222 Mo. 344, 133 Am. St. Rep. 529.

A "waiver" is the voluntary abandonment or relinquishment by a party of some right or advantage. Draper v. Oswego County Fire Relief Ass'n, 82 N. E. 755, 756, 190 N. Y. 12.

A "waiver" is a voluntary relinquishment of the right that one party has in his relations to another. Astrich v. German-American Ins. Co., 131 Fed. 13, 20, 65 C. C. A. 251.

In order to constitute a "waiver" by the insurer of a provision of the policy, there must be some affirmative act on its part, such as to induce insured to rest on a well-founded belief that strict performance of the condition claimed to be waived will not be insisted upon, and mere neglect to insist upon a forfeiture is of itself insufficient. Rundell & Hough v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co., 105 N. W. 112, 128 Iowa, 675, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 20.

The silence of a defendant on trial for crime, or his failure to object or protest against an illegal discharge of the jury before verdict, does not constitute a "consent" to such discharge, or a "waiver" of the constitutional inhibition against a second jeopardy for the same offense. Allen v. State, 41 South. 593, 52 Fla. 1, 120 Am. St. Rep. 188, 10 Ann. Cas. 1085 (citing State v. Richardson, 25 S. E. 220, 47 S. C. 166, 35 L. R. A. 238).

WAIVER OF JURY TRIAL

A motion by each party after impaneling of the jury to direct a verdict, made before evidence is offered, is a "waiver" of the jury trial and a submission to the court. Strangward v. American Brass Bedstead Co., 91 N. E. 988, 990, 82 Ohio St. 121.

WAIVER OF NOTICE OF PRESENTMENT, DISHONOR, AND PROTEST

Where an indorser of a note executed by a corporation of which he was president "waived all notice of presentment, dishonor, and protest," he did not thereby waive presentment and demand of payment. Hayward v. Empire State Sugar Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 449, 450, 105 App. Div. 21.

WALK

See Crosswalk.

In railroad parlance, "walk" is used to indicate the involuntary movement of an engine, caused by steam leaking into the cylinders, causing the same to move without any action on the part of the operatives. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Fisher, 97 S. W. 279, 80 Ark. 376.

There is no variance between a notice of a claim against city for injury, stating that the injury was caused by a fall on the "walk" near a certain street corner, and a petition, referring to the walk as a "crosswalk." "Walk", and "crosswalk" mean the same thing. Both are sidewalks, which the city is bound to keep in repair. Ottawa v. Green, 83 Pac. 616, 618, 72 Kan. 214.

WALKING

See Street-Walking.

WALL

See Division Wall; Exterior Walls; Green Wall; Partition Wall; Party Wall; Retreat to the Wall; Self-Supporting Iron Wall.

As building, see Building (In Insurance). Said wall, see Said.

See, also, Fence.

WALL-BEARING JOB

Labor Law (Laws 1897, p. 468, c. 415) § 20, relating to the protection of persons employed on buildings in cities, which provides that, if the floor beams are of iron or steel, the contractors for the iron or steel work of buildings in course of construction or the owners of such buildings shall thoroughly plank over the entire tier of iron or steel beams on which the structural or steel work is being erected, except certain specified spaces, is not limited to any particular class of buildings, and a contractor or the owners were not excused from complying with the statute because the job was a "wall-bearing job," in which the iron floor beams projecting into brick walls rested on the walls themselves, instead of on other structural iron or steel work. Schramme v. Lewinson, 110 N. Y. Supp. 599, 600, 126 App. Div. 279.

WALL IN COMMON

The words "wall in common," as used in Code, tit. 14, c. 10, relating to party walls, means a wall for the common benefit and convenience of both the tenements which it separates. Iederer & Strauss v. Colonial Inv. Co., 106 N. W. 357, 358, 130 Iowa, 157, 8 Ann. Cas. 317.

WALNUT

Not dutiable as vegetable, see Vegetable.

WANEY

"Waney" means having a beveled edge, as the wane of a log, which is the beveled edge of a board sawed from a log; but timber, though not absolutely square-edged throughout its entire length, is not waney, within the meaning of a contract, where it would show no wane when cut down to the prescribed proportions. Burton v. Jennings, 185 Fed. 382, 385, 107 C. C. A. 438.

WANT

See Natural Want.

A statement by a surety to the holder of a note, "I want it settled," comes far short of being a notice or request to forthwith proceed and collect the note, and may be said to be simply the expression of a wish or desire which every honest man would entertain with reference to a pecuniary obligation resting on him. Bowling v. Chambers, 77 Pac. 16, 19, 20 Colo. App. 113.

As need or require

Where a clause in a will directed the trustees to pay the testator's wife out of the income of his estate during her natural life, and at suitable periods, such sums of money that she should "want or require" for her comfortable maintenance, and, during the minority of his children, for the support, maintenance, and education of such children also, the power and duty of deciding upon the amount wanted or required for the support and maintenance of the widow and minor children was intended to be upon the executors as trustees rather than upon the widow so that the words "want or require" are an expression of necessity, equivalent to "need," and not to "wish or desire." Coffin v. Wat-son, 79 Atl. 275, 277, 78 N. J. Eq. 307.

Failure synonyms

An instruction in an action for personal injuries that, if plaintiff was injured on a certain day, "it then became her duty to use all reasonable care and precaution to minimize the damages that might result, and, if * * * she failed to do this, then you cannot return a verdict for such damages that resulted by her want to exercise such care and precaution." was not so inaptly phrased as to be unintelligible to the jury notwithstanding that the word "want" was ill chosen, it being synonymous with "failure," so that it was error to refuse the charge, if otherwise correct and applicable, on the ground that it was meaningless and misleading. Tiggerman v. City of Butte, 119 Pac. 477, 478, 44 Mont. 138.

WANT HER TO HAVE

See 1 Want Her to Have.

WANT OF JURISDICTION

See Jurisdiction (Of Courts).

WANT OF ORDINARY CARE

There is a "want of ordinary care" on the part of the plaintiff only when, under all of the circumstances and surroundings of the case, he has done, or omitted to do, something which "an ordinarily careful and prudent person," in a like situation as the plaintiff, would not have done, or omitted to do, and which was the efficient and proximate cause of plaintiff's injury. The want of ordinary care, however, must be determined from the facts disclosed in each particular case, and is generally a question of fact for the jury, and not one of law. Hone v. Mammoth Min. Co., 75 Pac. 381, 383, 27 Utah, 168.

WANT OF PROBABLE CAUSE

See, also, Probable Cause.

The "want of probable cause" does not mean the want of any cause, but the want of any reasonable cause, such as would persuade a man of ordinary care and prudence to believe in the truth of the charge. Burt v. Smith, 73 N. E. 495, 496, 181 N. Y. 1, 2 Ann. Cas. 576.

WANTAGE

The normal "outrage" or "wantage" is defined by the Board of General Appraisers as "the difference between the capacity of a cask or bottle and the quantity of wine or liquor which is usually placed in it, according to the custom of trade; a certain vacancy being allowed for the expansion of such wines and liquors." Alexander D. Shaw & Co. v. United States, 141 Fed. 469, 470.

WANTON

See Willful and Wanton.

"Wanton," when used to qualify negligence, means recklessness. Mayes v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 97 S. W. 612, 613, 121 Mo. App. 614.

A "wanton action" is not mere negligence, but means an action recklessly disregardful of right or consequences. Marra v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 124 N. Y. Supp. 443, 445, 139 App. Div. 707.

In order that one may be held guilty of "willful or wanton conduct," it must be shown that he was conscious of his conduct, and conscious, from his knowledge of existing conditions, that injury would likely or probably result from his conduct, and that with reckless indifference to consequences he consciously and intentionally did some wrongful act or omitted some known duty which produced the injurious result. Montgomery St. Ry. v. Rice, 38 South. 857, 142 Ala. 674.

"To constitute 'willful or wanton misconduct' there must be actual knowledge, or that which is esteemed in law as the equivalent of actual knowledge, of the peril of the person injured, coupled with a conscious failure to act to the end of averting the injury." Mere violation of a statutory duty is but simple negligence, and does not constitute "willful or wanton misconduct." Smith v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 51 South. 792, 793, 165 Ala. 407.

The word "wanton," as used in an information for the unlawful, willful, and wanton killing of a dog, means that the act must have been committed, regardless of the rights of another, in reckless sport, or under such circumstances as evinces a wicked or mischievous intent without excuse. Henderson v. State, 111 S. W. 736, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 533.

In an action against a railroad for injuries to one ejected from a moving freight train, the definition of the word "wanton," in an instruction that "by wanton or willful injury is meant an injury deliberately and intentionally inflicted, or that the person or persons inflicting the injury acted with such utter disregard of plaintiff's safety that such an intention to injure him may be inferred therefrom," was too narrow in its scope. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Svensden, 108 Pac. 262, 264, 13 Ariz. 111.

Though the word "wanton" is not an apt adjective in describing "negligence," still, when so used, the expression imports both wantonness and negligence. Campbell v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 54 S. E. 571, 572, 74 S. C. 300.

The word "wanton" implies turpitude, and that the act to which it is applied was committed, or omitted, of willful, wicked purpose. Bailey v. North Carolina R. Co., 62 S. E. 912, 914, 149 N. C. 169.

A count is demurrable which in its charging part alleges that the act was recklessly "and" wantonly done while the specification shows that it was recklessly "or" wantonly done; "reckless" not being equivalent to "wanton" or "intentional." Merrill v. Sheffield Co., 53 South. 219, 222, 169 Ala. 242.

The phrase "wanton and willful or reckless," in an instruction, in an action for injuries in a collision between vehicles driven by plaintiff and defendant, that though plaintiff was negligent, yet if defendant's conduct was wanton and willful or reckless, plaintiff might recover, might be considered as defining the doctrine of comparative negligence, which does not obtain in the state. Buxton v. Ainsworth, 101 N. W. 817, 818, 138 Mich. 532, 5 Ann. Cas. 146.

Act of lunatic

A "wanton" act is an unrestrained act, and the act of a lunatic is of that character. Thus, under a statute giving the widow and minor children of one killed by the careless, "wanton," or malicious use of firearms, not in self-defense, an action against the one doing the killing, a lunatic is liable in damages to the widow of a deputy sheriff, whom he killed without cause while the deputy was trying to take him in custody as a lunatic; the killing being "wanton" within the statute. Young v. Young, 132 S. W. 155, 156, 141 Ky. 76.

Malicious intent

"The term 'wanton' has no peculiar legal signification. It has various meanings depending on the connection in which it is used. It may mean sportively, playfully. When used to characterize wrongful conduct, it may mean foolhardiness, heartlessness, maliciousness, recklessness, reckless disregard of the right of others, gross carelessness, or negligence." As used in an instruction that if defendant beat plaintiff, causing him pain and injury, the jury should find for plaintiff, and that if they found that the assault was made "wantonly" they might also assess smart money, it meant maliciously, or done on purpose, without just cause or excuse, and could not have been understood by the jury to mean anything worse or more damaging to defendant. Cody v. Gremmler, 99 S. W. 46, 47, 121 Mo. App. 359.

The words "wanton," "willful," and "unlawful," do not necessarily mean, in statutes on malicious mischief, the same as "malicious." The word "malicious," as used in the statute on malicious wounding of domestic animals, means actual malice toward the owner, and any evidence which fairly shows that the act was necessary to prevent injury to the accused or to his property is admissible on the issue of malice. People v. Jones, 89 N. E. 752, 756, 241 Ill. 482, 16 Ann.

Cas. 332 (citing 25 Cyc. 1677; 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4307; Glover v. People, 68 N. E. 464, 204 Ill. 170).

Willful distinguished

While "wanton" is often used as synonymous with "willful," an injury may be wanton without being willful; "wanton" lacking the element of intent to injure contained in "willful." Thus a partial employment of available means, evidencing some degree of care, shows an injury not to be willful, although it may not establish that it was not wanton. Adler v. Martin (Ala.) 59 South. 597, 600.

"'Willful' imports a much more positive affirmative mental condition prompting the act than 'wanton.'" Western Union Tel. Co. v. Catlett, 177 Fed. 71, 75, 100 C. C. A. 489.

An act is "willful" where the resulting injury is intentional or the natural and probable consequence of the act. The word "wanton" is, however, more comprehensive, and to constitute "wantonness" it is not essential that the injury should have been intentional or the probable consequence of the wrongful act; it sufficing that the act indicates a reckless disregard of the rights of others, a reckless indifference to results, or that the injury is the likely and not improbable result of the wrongful act. Conchin v. El Paso & S. W. R. Co., 108 Pac. 260, 262, 13 Ariz. 259, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 88.

WANTON INJURY

"Mere proof of an injury caused by breach of duty to exercise ordinary care is not sufficient to establish a cause of action for a 'wanton injury,' and a person cannot be permitted, in an action charging the latter, to recover for the former, if seasonable objections are made." Turtenwald v. Wisconsin Lakes Ice & Cartage Co., 93 N. W. 948, 949, 121 Wis. 65 (citing Wilson v. Chippewa Valley Electric R. Co., 98 N. W. 536, 120 Wis. 636, 66 L. R. A. 912).

Where an act is done or omitted under circumstances and conditions, known to the person, that his conduct is likely to or probably will result in injury, and through reckless indifference to consequences, or consciously and intentionally, he does a wrongful act, or omits an act which he ought to have done, the injury inflicted is "wanton." Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Drennen, 57 South. 876, 878, 175 Ala. 338.

WANTON NEGLECT

A husband, whose income had been insufficient to support his wife and child, but who was not extravagant or unkind, and who, on reduction of his salary, went West, contributing practically nothing to the wife's support for five years, during which time she supported herself by keeping boarders, and who at the end of that time was earning a salary and hoping to have his wife and child with him, was not guilty of "wantonly and cruelly" neglecting to support his family, within the meaning of the statute. Carson v. Carson, 138 N. W. 1076, 173 Mich. 452, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 255.

WANTON NEGLIGENCE

See, also, Gross Negligence; Willful Negligence.

"Wanton negligence" always implies something more than mere negligence. Bailley v. North Carolina R. Co., 62 S. E. 912, 914, 149 N. C. 169.

"Wanton negligence" consists in a heedless and reckless disregard for another's rights, with the consciousness that the act or omission to act may result in injury to that other. Hazle v. Southern Pac. Co., 173 Fed. 431, 432.

"Wanton negligence" exists where the person guilty thereof, with knowledge of facts and circumstances likely to result in injury, exhibits a reckless indifference to the probable consequences thereof. Kramm v. Stockton Electric R. Co., 86 Pac. 903, 904, 3 Cal. App. 606.

An instruction that, to constitute "wanton negligence," an act done or omitted must have been done or omitted with a present knowledge that injury would probably result, is correct. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Gust, 39 South. 654, 658, 144 Ala. 373 (citing Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Brown, 25 South. 609, 121 Ala. 221; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Banks, 31 South. 573, 132 Ala. 471).

"Willful or wanton negligence," whereby liability is incurred irrespective of the contributory negligence of the party injured, is a reckless disregard of the safety of the person or property of another, by failing, after discovering the peril, to exercise ordinary care to prevent the impending injury. Gibbons v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 108 N. W. 471, 472, 99 Minn. 142 (citing Alger, Smith & Co. v. Duluth-Superior Traction Co., 101 N. W. 298, 93 Minn. 314).

"Wanton and reckless negligence" on the part of a servant of a railroad company in dealing with a trespasser on its train "includes something more than ordinary inadvertence. In its essence it is like a willful, intentional wrong. It is illustrated by an act which otherwise might be unobjectionable, but which is liable or likely to do great harm, and which is done in a wanton and reckless disregard of the probable injurious consequences." Plaintiff, a boy from eight to nine years of age, who lived near a railroad and was familiar with trains, was injured in jumping off a slowly moving freight car on which he was stealing a ride. The immediate cause of his jumping was an order of the brakeman to get off "or I'll break your neck." There was no such apparent probability of the injury caused as to indicate in the language of the brakeman wanton and reckless negligence. Bjornquist v. Boston & A. R. Co., 70 N. E. 53, 55, 185 Mass. 130, 102 Am. St. Rep. 332.

A boy 8½ years old, with other boys, stepped from a retaining wall onto one of the cars of a standing train, and sat down on the car till it started up, when, proceeding to walk towards the rear of the train, he lost his balance and fell between the cars. He had played about the cars before, knew he was not wanted there, and was familiar with the signals for stopping and starting trains. Held, that a "wanton" disregard for his safety, making the company liable, was not shown by the starting of the train in the usual way, without first removing the trespassers or taking measures for their safety, though a few minutes before it was started a brakeman walked past them on the car, and he or another brakeman, while standing near them, signaled for the train to start. Anternoltz v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 79 N. E. 789, 790, 193 Mass. 542 (distinguishing Bjornquist v. Boston & A. R. Co., 70 N. E. 53, 185 Mass. 130, 102 Am. St. Rep. 332; Albert v. Boston Elevated Ry., 70 N. E. 52, 185 Mass. 210; Mugford v. Boston & M. R. R., 52 N. E. 1078, 173 Mass. 10).

WANTONLY

See Rashly, Recklessly, or Wantonly.

"Wantonly" means without reasonable excuse, and implies turpitude, and an act to be done wantonly must be done intentionally and with design, without excuse and under circumstances evincing a lawless, destructive spirit. It is a reckless disregard for the lawful rights of others, such a degree of rashness as denotes a total want of care or a willingness to destroy, although destruction itself may have been unintentional. Palmer v. Smith, 132 N. W. 614, 617, 147 Wis. 70.

As used in a statute, describing an offense as consisting in willfully, maliciously, and "wantonly" tearing down, mutilating, defacing, or injuring any building standing or being upon the land of another, or held in trust, the word "wantonly" may be defined as showing reckless disregard of the lawful rights of the owner of the building, and heedlessness of the necessary results of the act complained of. Werner v. State, 67 N. W. 417, 419, 93 Wis. 266 (citing Cobb v. Bennett, 75 Pa. 326, 15 Am. Rep. 752; Stucke v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co., 9 Wis. 202; Lockwood v. Belle City St. R. Co., 65 N. W. 870, 92 Wis. 97).

By the expression "wantonly," as used in an indictment for slander by imputing to a woman a want of chastity, is meant that the words charged to have been uttered by defendant must have been uttered regardless of the consequences, in a reckless manner, or under such circumstances as evinced a mischievous intent and without excuse. Rainwater v. State, 81 S. W. 38, 39, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 496.

"Wantonly," as used to characterize the act of shooting at a dog, so as to render the person shooting guilty of malicious mischief, means that the act must have been committed, regardless of the right of another, in reckless sport, or under such circumstances as evinced a wicked and mischievous intent, and without excuse. Ross v. State (Tex.) 108 S. W. 697.

The complaint in an action for the death of a person struck by a train, which alleges that defendant "unlawfully and grossly, negligently and wantonly, omitted to give any signal," and ran the train at a "speed grossly, negligently, and wantonly high," and "unlawfully, wantonly and grossly, carelessly and negligently," ran the train over decedent, and which charges a violation of a municipal ordinance regulating the speed of trains, and which states the facts showing the relative situation of the parties at the time and before the accident, charges negligence, for the word "unlawfully" refers to the alleged violation of the ordinance, and the words "willfully" and "wantonly" merely meaning "recklessly" or "heedlessly." Neary v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 110 Pac. 226, 231, 41 Mont. 480.

A manifestly injurious act, done willfully, in reckless disregard of the rights of others, is done "wantonly," within a statute providing punishment for willfully and maliciously cutting trees; and a tree warden wantonly cut a tree on private land, where he did not try to ascertain what his rights and duties were. Commonwealth v. Byard, 86 N. E. 285, 286, 200 Mass. 175, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 814.

The term "wantonly" is of greater significance than "willfully," and includes it. State v. Pellerin, 43 South. 159, 160, 118 La. 547.

Recklessly synonymous

See Reckless—Recklessly—Recklessness.

WANTONNESS

"Wantonness" is the conscious failure by one charged with a duty to exercise due care and diligence to prevent an injury after the discovery of the peril, or under circumstances where he is charged with a knowledge of such peril, and being conscious of the inevitable or probable results of such failure. Brown v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 55 South. 107, 109, 171 Ala. 310; Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Williams, 48 South. 93, 96, 158 Ala. 381.

"Wantonness" implies a willingness to inflict injury, or a willfulness in pursuing a course of conduct which will naturally or probably result in disaster, or an intent to perpetrate a wrong. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Orr, 26 South. 35, 41, 121 Ala. 459 (citing Georgia Pac. R. Co. v. Lee, 9 South. 230, 92 Ala. 262).

"Willfulness," or "wantonness," as applied in cases of injury to a person by a breach of duty, where the peril of the person injured is known, means a direct intent to inflict injury, or an act done, or omitted, with the consciousness that the act, or omission, will probably eventuate in injury. Anniston Electric & Gas Co. v. Rosen, 48 South. 798, 802, 159 Ala. 195, 133 Am. St. Rep. 321.

"Wantonness," as applied to negligence, consists in consciousness, from knowledge of the existing circumstances, that the conduct of the negligent person will probably result in injury, coupled with a reckless, but unintentional, disregard of the nature or probable consequences of his acts. Southern Ry. Co. v. Bennefield, 55 South. 252, 353, 172 Ala. 588, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 420.

"Wantonness" is a conscious failure by one charged with a duty to exercise due care to prevent an injury, after the discovery of the peril, with knowledge of the probable results of such failure, and it is immaterial whether such failure is occasioned by an act of omission or commission; and one may be guilty of wanton misconduct without actual intention to injure any one. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Murphy, 56 South. 817, 819, 2 Ala. App. 588.

"Wantonness" is the legal equivalent of "willfulness." In an action for personal injuries, a complaint averring that the act complained of was "willfully or wantonly done" is not demurrable because the averment is in the alternative form. Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Smith, 40 South. 763, 764, 146 Ala. 312.

In order to constitute "willfulness," or "wantonness," or reckless indifference to probable consequences, the act done or omitted must be done or omitted with a knowledge or a present consciousness that injury will probably result; and this consciousness is not to be implied from mere knowledge of the elements of the dangerous situation a person may be in and negligent and inadvertent acts in respect of the peril. Duncan v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 44 South. 418, 423, 152 Ala. 118.

"Wantonness" is but descriptive of a condition so consciously leading to harmful results that the party charged may be deemed to have intended such results for his conscious dereliction or affirmative action. To a count in a complaint alleging willfulness and wantonness, by which decedent received fatal injuries, contributory negligence is no defense, and to such a count the only proper plea is a general traverse. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Perkins, 44 South. 602, 604, 152 Ala. 133.

"Wantonness" consists in consciousness on the part of the person charged with it, from his knowledge of existing circumstances and conditions, that his conduct will probably result in injury, and yet, with reckless indifference or disregard of the natural or probable consequences, but without intention to inflict injury, he does or fails to do the particular act; thus, where a motorman ran into a station at a rapid rate of speed, with knowledge that persons might be struck and injured, the facts were sufficient to indicate wantonness. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Landrum, 45 South. 198, 202, 153 Ala. 192, 127 Am. St. Rep. 25.

A count of a complaint alleging that defendant's servant "wantonly, recklessly, and intentionally" injured plaintiff amounts to a charge of wantonness and intentional injury. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Lee, 45 South. 292, 293, 153 Ala. 79 (citing Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Williams, 37 South. 255, 140 Ala. 237).

While carelessness does not necessarily imply "wantonness," wantonness may include negligence, since wantonness may exist without an intent to injure. Kramm v. Stockton Electric R. Co., 86 Pac. 903, 904, 3 Cal. App. 606.

"Recklessness" and "wantonness" are stronger terms than ordinary negligence, and mean a disregard of security equivalent to bad faith and a willful or malicious disposition to injure. To constitute wantonness, there must be a design, purpose, or intent to do wrong or cause the injury, though recklessness amounting to an utter disregard of consequences will supply the place of a specific intent. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Lacy, 97 Pac. 1025, 1027, 78 Kan. 622.

As applied to acts causing injury by employees in charge of dangerous instrumentalities, "wantonness" implies conduct constituting a failure to take measures for the protection of a person in danger only when the employee actually knows of his presence, or when the situation is substantially the same as though the employee had such knowledge, to wit, when such knowledge may fairly be imputed to him. It is not enough for that purpose that exercise of ordinary diligence would have advised him of the fact, for his omission of duty in that regard amounts only to negligence, nor is it enough that he knows some one might be in the place of danger. The probability must be so great and its obviousness so insistent that the employee must be deemed to realize the likelihood that a catastrophe is imminent, and he would omit reasonable effort to prevent it because indifferent to the consequences. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Baker, 98 Pac. 804, 806, 79 Kan. 163, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 427.

"Wantonness" or willfulness is such gross want of care and regard for the rights of others as show a disregard of consequences or a willingness to inflict an injury. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Ricker, 116 Ill. App. 428, 432.

"Willfulness," "wanton negligence," and "wantonness," are terms used in many states without any clearly defined distinction, but are, generally speaking, regarded as equivalent and interchangeable. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Ferrell, 78 N. E. 988, 998, 39 Ind. App. 515.

"Wantonness" is an advertent or conscious failure to observe due care. Tinsley v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 51 S. E. 913, 914, 72 S. C. 350.

"Wantonness" is properly defined as a conscious failure to observe due care: a conscious invasion of the rights of another; an intentional doing of an unlawful act, knowing such act to have been unlawful. Bussey v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 55 S. E. 163, 167, 75 S. C. 116.

Each of the words, "wantonness," "willfulness," and "recklessness," embodies the element of malice, either express or implied, and are in law substantially the equivalent of each other, in so far as they give rise to an action based upon punitive damages. Hull v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 57 S. E. 28, 76 S. C. 278, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1213 (citing Pickett v. Southern Ry. Co., Carolina Division, 48 S. E. 466, 69 S. C. 445).

WAR

See Civil War; Contraband of War; In Time of War; Prisoners of War.

"War" is that state in which a nation prosecutes its rights by force. The "Boxer Uprising" in China, in June, 1900, during which the United States assembled an army of 15,000 men, over 5,000 of which were ordered to and did proceed to China to assist the forces of allied nations in quelling the uprising and to release the accredited representatives of the United States then imprisoned within the city of Peking, during which the pay of the officers and men in the United States military service was increased to a war basis, constituted "a time of war," within the fifty-eighth article of war, providing for the trial of certain offenses committed by soldiers in time of war by military court-martial. Hamilton v. McLaughry, 136 Fed. 445, 449 (quoting and adopting definition in Prize Cases, 67 U. S. [2 Black] 666, 17 L. Ed. 459).

As used in testimony that the witness knew the testator in 1862 and understood that he died during the war, the word "war" must be understood as the war between the states. McDoel v. Jordan (Tex.) 151 S. W. 1178, 1179.

WARD

Pueblo Indians

See Pueblo Indians.

Public division

Under Const. 1898, art. 270, the police jury is without power to order an election for special taxes in aid of a railroad in a justice of the peace ward forming a part of a regular parish ward; the "ward" mentioned in such article being a public division of the parish commonly called a "police ward." Daigle v. Opelousas, G. & N. E. Ry. Co., 50 South. 846, 847, 124 La. 1047.

A parish precinct is not one of the subdivisions mentioned in Const. art. 232, authorizing special election to be held in any parish, municipal corporation, ward, or school district. Regard v. Police Jury of Avoyelles, 42 South. 438, 117 La. 952.

WARD SCHOOL

As district school, see District School.

WARDEN

As officer, see Officer.

WARE

See Stock of Goods, Wares, and Merchandise.

Goods, wares, and merchandise, see Goods.

WAREHOUSE

See Public Warehouse.

A "warehouse" is "a house in which wares or goods are kept; a storehouse." Adams County v. Kansas City & O. Ry. Co., 99 N. W. 245, 247, 71 Neb. 549 (quoting Cent. Dict.).

Barn

A barn signifies a place greatly different from a wharf or "warehouse," and does not, within any ordinarily accepted meaning of the word, indicate a place where the business of "storing the goods of others for hire" is conducted. McReynolds v. People, 82 N. E. 945, 950, 230 Ill. 623.

Elevator

An elevator is not necessarily a warehouse, within the scope of the word "warehouse" as used in a policy of insurance on wheat while contained in a warehouse of a certain mill; and where it appeared that the mill owned a warehouse proper and an elevator, sometimes called an "elevator warehouse," but the wheat in question was contained in the elevator, there was a latent ambiguity, authorizing the admission of parol evidence; and as the hazard and rate were greater in the case of the elevator, there was no liability on a policy covering the wheat only while contained in the warehouse. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Aachen & Munich Fire Ins. Co., 84 Pac. 253-255, 2 Cal. App. 690.

Truck

Where dutiable goods are removed from a warehouse without payment of duty and subsequently concealed, the truck on which the goods are removed cannot be considered to be a "warehouse," within Rev. St. § 2987, making it an offense to remove dutiable goods from a warehouse without payment of duty, etc. United States v. Ehr Gott, 182 Fed. 267, 273.

WAREHOUSE PLATFORM

WAREHOUSE RECEIPT

As scrip, see Scrip.

An instrument on its face showing that the signer has in his possession designated goods of another for storage and obligating him to deliver the same to a specified person, or to his order, or bearer, on return of the instrument, is a "warehouse receipt" within Act Sept. 24, 1866 (P. L. [1867] 1363), and negotiable. National Union Bank of Reading v. Shearer, 74 Atl. 351, 225 Pa. 470, 17 Ann. Cas. 664.

Where the owner of a majority of the stock of a mining company and of a furnace company caused the furnace company to issue without consideration, but with no fraudulent intent, storage warrants in the usual form of warehouse receipts on the iron in its yards in favor of the mining company, but there was no actual delivery of, nor agreement to purchase, the iron, such warrants were not "warehouse receipts," not being issued by a warehouseman storing goods for compensation. Gellfuss v. Corrigan, 70 N. W. 306, 311, 95 Wis. 651, 37 L. R. A. 186, 60 Am. St. Rep. 143.

WAREHOUSEMAN

A "warehouseman" is one who receives into his warehouse goods and merchandise for storage for hire. In re Rohrer, 186 Fed. 997, 1000; State v. Minneapolis & St. L. Ry. Co., 131 N. W. 1075, 1077, 115 Minn. 116; American Can Co. v. Erie Preserving Co., 171 Fed. 540, 547.

A "warehouseman" is one who receives and stores goods as a business for a compensation or profit. Act Sept. 24, 1866 (P. L. [1867] 1363), making a warehouse receipt negotiable, does not define a "warehouseman," and there is nothing in it requiring him to hold himself out to the general public as such. National Union Bank of Reading v. Shearer, 74 Atl. 351, 352, 225 Pa. 470, 17 Ann. Cas. 664.

Under Laws 1907, c. 732, § 27, now General Business Law (Consol. Laws, c. 20) § 112, limiting the right to a lien for charges for storing property to a "warehouseman," who is defined as one engaged in the business of storing goods for profit, a casual bailee of property is not entitled to a lien for storage charges. Alton v. New York Taxicab Co., 121 N. Y. Supp. 271, 272, 66 Misc. Rep. 191.

Laws 1903, c. 391, entitled "An act to facilitate the sale of perishable or unclaimed property in the possession of common carriers," section 3 of which, relating to property not perishable, provides that when any such property—i. e., property delivered to any common carrier, forwarding merchant, wharfinger, or warehouseman for carriage or storage—"shall not be claimed or taken away within one year after it shall have been so received, the same may be sold," etc., applies only to such warehousemen as are also common carriers, or perform a service incident to that of common carriers, and not to warehousemen engaged in the business of the mere storage of goods for hire, the method of enforcing the lien of which is provided by St. 1898, § 3347. Devlin v. Wisconsin Storage Co., 133 N. W. 578, 147 Wis. 518.

Carrier

Where a carrier voluntarily receives trunks containing samples an unreasonable time before the owner intended to take passage, it is liable for their loss as a "warehouseman." Fleischman, Morris & Co. v. Southern Ry., 56 S. E. 974, 976, 76 S. C. 237, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 519 (citing 6 Cyc. 670; Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Peterson, 97 Am. St. Rep. 102, note; Murray v. International Steamship Co., 64 Am. St. Rep. 290, note; Rossier v. Wabash R. Co., 91 S. W. 1018, 115 Mo. App. 515).

A commercial railroad, which maintains a warehouse merely for the purpose of receiving goods for shipment and storing goods shipped to such point, and does not seek or solicit goods for storage, but merely stores in such warehouse the goods of consignees, for the reason that such consignees fail or refuse to call for and receive the same, and charges only for such storage the amount authorized by the Railroad Commission of the state, and for the time so authorized, is not subject to the provision of a municipal ordinance levying an occupation tax upon "warehousemen." When a municipality is prohibited by law from taxing the general business of a commercial railroad as a common carrier, it cannot segregate from such business a necessary incident, and classify it as an occupation, and tax it as such. Town of Arlington v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 56 S. E. 1015, 1017, 127 Ga. 721 (citing Hewin v. City of Atlanta, 49 S. E. 765, 121 Ga. 723, 67 L. R. A. 795, 2 Ann. Cas. 296).

As depositary for hire

Factor distinguished

Rev. St. 1895, art. 4314, making it unlawful for any factor, commission merchant, or other person to employ any other than a public weigher to weigh produce sold or offered for sale, does not apply to maintaining a public warehouse and purchasing and selling produce without authority to sell for his principal and without selling in behalf of the owner, for he is a mere "warehouseman," and not a "factor." Hedgepeth v. Hamilton Warehouse Co. (Tex.) 128 S. W. 709, 710, (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 2640, and 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7392).

Safe deposit vault

A person in the business of running safe deposit vaults and warehousing valuable goods for hire is a warehouseman within P. L. 1907, p. 337, § 58, defining "warehouseman" to mean a person lawfully engaged in the business of storing goods for profit. New Jersey Title Guarantee & Trust Co. v. Rector, 75 Atl. 931, 932, 76 N. J. Eq. 587.

As trustee

See Trustee.

WAREHOUSING

See Field Storage Warehousing.

WARNING—WARNED

See Proper Warning.

"Warning" is defined to mean previous notice, caution against danger. Antonlan v. Southern Pac. Co., 100 Pac. 877, 883, 9 Cal. App. 718.

A charge permitting plaintiff to recover for injuries inflicted by a street car if defendant's agents operating the car failed to use due care in giving "proper" warning of the approach of the car, was not erroneous because of the use of the word "proper"; it being without meaning in that connection, since "warning" as understood could only mean notice of approaching danger, and, if warning was given, it was sufficient. Engelman v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 113 S. W. 700, 703, 133 Mo. App. 514.

The duty of the master to warn a servant ordinarily relates only to those nonobvious dangers which are not known to the servant, and which are or ought to be known to the master, though in common parlance the words "warn" and "warning" have a broader application, and are often used as designating the cries and signals which are used by experienced workmen for mutual convenience and as a part of the method of co-operation. Galloway v. J. W. Turner Improvement Co., 126 N. W. 1033, 1035, 148 Iowa, 93.

As used in a special finding that the wire broke as plaintiff was passing under it, "without warning," the term "warned" would apply rather to plaintiff than to the defendant street car company, which might rather be said to be "advised" of the danger; and hence the interrogatory would not be construed as negating notice to the company, and therefore would not overthrow the general verdict for the plaintiff. Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Batley, 65 N. E. 2, 3, 4, 159 Ind. 368.

Advise synonymous

A confession stating that accused was advised by the county attorney is not insufficient for its use of the word "advised" for "warned" as any words which would show that the offender was informed of his rights and then voluntarily made the confession to the person who gave him such information would amount to a compliance with the statute. Overstreet v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 899, 900.

Railroad crossing

"A railway crossing is itself a place of danger, and is an effectual warning of danger, a warning which must always be heeded, and the exercise of ordinary care in traveling over such a place is not excused by the negligent omission of the railway company itself to exercise reasonable care. Nor is it the law that, when a railroad company adopts safety gates or any other appliance for the protection of the public, the public is thereby absolved from all duty of taking care of itself. A person is still required to exercise due and ordinary care, and while the quantum of care which will be reasonable may be less where the gates are provided and are relied upon by the traveler, still the gates themselves are not an assurance and a warranty such as to justify a traveler in going blindly ahead in total disregard of all ordinary precautions." Koch v. Southern California R. Co., 84 Pac. 176-178, 148 Cal. 677, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 521, 113 Am. St. Rep. 332, 7 Ann. Cas. 795.

WARPING

"Warping" is a process of taking raw silk from the spool and arranging longitudinally a sufficient number of yarns of sufficient length and quality to constitute a warp of the precise size and quality of the fabric to be produced. But as to woven fabrics the operation of warping is not part of the process of weaving, within the purview of Tariff Act July 24, 1907, c. 11, providing that the component material of chief value in imported merchandise shall be determined by the ascertained value of such material in its condition as found in the article. United States v. Hoeninghaus & Curtiss, 137 Fed. 478, 479, 69 C. C. A. 626; Hoeninghaus & Curtis v. United States, 131 Fed. 570, 571.

WARRANT

See Convey and Warranty; County Warranty; Township Warranty.

Covenant of warranty as contract, see Contract.

Draw warrant, see Draw.

Issuance, as commencement of action, see Commencement of Action.

In a stipulation in an insurance contract that it is "warranted by the assured that due diligence be used that the automatic sprinkler system shall at all times be maintained in good working order," the word "warranted" added nothing to the force of the stipulation, as the expression of the word "warranty" does not necessarily constitute a warranty, and it must be used in its ordinary signification. Port Blakely Mill Co. v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 110 Pac. 36, 39, 59 Wash. 501, 140 Am. St. Rep. 863.

A mere "warrant," locatable on any public land, cannot be considered as the equivalent of a "certificate of entry," or receiver's receipt, showing that the applicant has paid for a particular tract of land and is entitled to a patent therefor. J. W. Frelsén & Co. v. Crandell, 45 South. 558, 559, 120 La. 712.

The usual rule is that when an officer of a public corporation, be it state, county, or town, draws upon another officer of the same public corporation for the purpose of discharging a public liability, whether the draft is by authorization of statute or by settled usage, it is ordinarily known as a "warrant," and is not commercial paper in the sense of the law merchant, and no peculiar estoppel arises with reference to it. Pension checks, or warrants, issued by a pension agent of the United States on an assistant treasurer, are commercial paper, and the right of the United States to recover from one to whom such a check was paid on a forged indorsement of the name of the payee is governed by the ordinary rules applicable to such paper. Nat. Exchange Bank of Providence v. United States, 151 Fed. 402, 407, 80 C. C. A. 632.

As certificate

See Certificate.

In conveyance or sales

By the express terms of Conveyance Act, § 11 (1 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, p. 924, c. 30), a conveyance using the word "warrant" is to be construed as if full covenants of seisin, good right to convey, against incumbrances, of quiet enjoyment, and general warranty were contained therein. King v. King, 74 N. E. 89, 94, 215 Ill. 100.

Under Code 1892, § 2479, providing that a conveyance of land in the following form, "I convey and warrant," etc., shall be effectual to transfer right, title, claim, and possession, and section 2480, declaring that the word "warrant" shall constitute a covenant that the grantor will forever warrant and defend the title, the word "warrant" constitutes a warranty of the possession as well as of the title. Allen v. Caffee, 38 South. 186, 85 Miss. 766.

Where a mortgage states that the mortgagor mortgages and "warrants" the property to the mortgagee, by the use of the words "and warrants" the mortgage executed is to be construed as if full covenants of seisin, good right to convey against incumbrances, quiet enjoyment, and general warranty were fully written therein. Roderick v. McMee-kin, 68 N. E. 473, 477, 204 Ill. 625 (citing 1 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896 [2d Ed.] p. 924).

The word "warranted," as used in Code, art. 81, § 146 (Acts 1898, p. 819, c. 275), obliging a person loaning money on a mortgage on property in the state to make affidavit that he has not required, and will not require, the mortgagor to pay the taxes on the interest warranted to be paid in advance, etc., was intended to mean "covenanted," and the section, as amended by Acts 1902, p. 33, c. 26, uses the word "covenanted." The section does not apply to a mortgage to secure the purchase money of the mortgaged article, interest not being covenanted for, or, so far as appears, secretly or indirectly provided for. Salabes v. J. Castelberg & Sons, 57 Atl. 20, 22, 98 Md. 645, 64 L. R. A. 800.

In practice

The word "warrant," as used in section 16 of the charter of the city of Talapoosa (Acts 1888, p. 240), providing that all processes, writs, warrants, subpoenas, or other papers shall be issued by the clerk of council, in the name of the mayor of the city, and signed by the clerk, and it shall be the duty of the marshal of the city to serve all such processes, refers to warrants for the arrest of offenders against municipal ordinances. Cason v. State, 68 S. E. 554, 555, 134 Ga. 786.

An "information" is the allegation made to a magistrate that a person has been guilty of some designated crime, under the express provisions of Code Cr. Proc. § 145, and is the foundation for the jurisdiction of the magistrate, the office of a "warrant" being merely to bring the person charged before the magistrate; and where an information before a police justice alleged that plaintiff had for nine days without legal excuse not caused her child to attend upon instruction as required by law, and that she had not presented to the school authorities proof by affidavit that she was unable to compel the child to so attend, as required by Compulsory Education Law (Laws 1909, c. 409) § 537, subsec. 4 (Consol. Laws, 1910, c. 16, § 635, subsec. 4), the offense so stated was the only one the justice had power to try under the information, and the fact that the warrant stated that plaintiff had failed for nine days "to send the said child to school as provided in the compulsory education law" would not render the officer laying the information and procuring the warrant liable for malicious prosecution for having the arrest made for failure to send the child to school without probable cause, on the theory that he knew that the mother had sent the child to school each day, but that it had been excluded because of the mother's refusal to permit its vaccination, the uncontroverted testimony clearly establishing a violation of section 537, subsec. 4, of the compulsory education law, the offense charged in the information. Shappee v. Curtis, 127 N. Y. Supp. 33, 35, 142 App. Div. 155.

As negotiable instrument

See Negotiable Instruments.

Order for payment of money

As order, see Order.

"Warrants" and "orders" for payment of money are synonymous. A warrant is an order for the payment of money. State v. Woods, 36 South. 626, 627, 112 La. 617.

As promissory note

See Promissory Note.

WARRANT OF ARREST

As expressly defined by Snyder's Comp. Laws 1909, § 6578, a "warrant of arrest" is an order in writing in the name of the state, signed by a magistrate, commanding the arrest of accused. The clerk of a county court has no authority to issue a warrant for the arrest of one against whom an information has been filed in such court. Bowen v. State, 115 Pac. 376, 5 Okl. Cr. 605.

WARRANT OF ATTACHMENT

"A 'warrant of attachment' is mesne process, and is nothing more than a provisional remedy. It is ancillary to the relief sought in the principal action, and is intended to preserve the property or its proceeds if it has been sold as perishable in the hands of the sheriff or in the custody of the law to abide the event of the suit." Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Sloan, 48 S. E. 577, 136 N. C. 122.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2269, provides that the court authorized to punish for contempt may (1) order accused to show cause, or (2) issue an attachment. Section 2273, declares that an order to show cause may be made either before or after final judgment or the final order in special proceeding, that it is equivalent to a notice of motion, and subsequent proceedings thereon are as on a motion made therein. It also defines a "warrant of attachment" as a mandate whereby a special proceeding is instituted in behalf of the people on relation of complainant. Held that, where a debtor failed to appear, the creditor was either entitled to an attachment or an order to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, and that the court in either event could afford him an opportunity to purge himself of contempt, and was not compelled to issue a commitment. Sonn v. Kenny, 116 N. Y. Supp. 613, 614, 63 Misc. Rep. 251.

WARRANT OF ATTORNEY TO SUE OR DEFEND

A "warrant of attorney to sue or defend" was a "special warrant from the crown authorizing a party to appoint an attorney to sue or defend for him." First Nat. Bank of Kansas City v. White, 120 S. W. 36, 39, 220 Mo. 717, 132 Am. St. Rep. 612, 16 Ann. Cas. 889 (quoting and adopting the definition in Cyc. p. 693).

WARRANTY

See Affirmative Warranty; Covenant of General Warranty; Covenant of Warranty; Express Warranty; Implied Warranty; Personal Warranty; Promissory Warranty.

Covenant of warrant as engagement, see Engagement.

Of title imported by deed, see Deed.

A "warranty" is a promise, usually collateral to the principal contract, but not necessarily so. Modern Woodmen of America v. Vincent, 80 N. E. 427, 82 N. E. 475, 476, 40 Ind. App. 711, 14 Ann. Cas. 89 (citing Benj. Sales, § 610; Mechem Sales, § 1334n [1], § 1393).

"Warranty" is an engagement or undertaking, express or implied, that a certain fact regarding the subject of a contract is or shall be as it is expressly or impliedly declared or promised to be. Christian v. City of Eugene, 89 Pac. 419, 420, 49 Or. 170 (citing Webst. Int. Dict.).

A "warranty" is at common law defined as a stipulation or covenant in a contract intended as a part of the agreement between the parties, but which is collateral to its main purpose. Jaminet v. American Storage & Moving Co., 84 S. W. 128, 130, 109 Mo. App. 257 (citing Flint-Walling Mfg. Co. v. Ball, 43 Mo. App. 504; Bouvier's Law Dict.).

A "warranty" of title and of quiet possession and peaceable enjoyment is against one lawfully claiming or seizing the property, and not against one who unlawfully claims or seizes it. Pierce v. Coryn, 126 Ill. App. 244, 251.

The word "warranty," in application to contracts, is used as equivalent to a condition precedent, as a descriptive statement vital to the contract, or as a promise vital to it, and is used as meaning a condition, the breach of which, if acquiesced in, forms a cause of action, but does not create a discharge of the contract. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Elchel & Welkel (Tex.) 130 S. W. 922, 935.

"A 'warranty' is always a matter of contract. For its breach, damages may be recovered by any party to the contract injured thereby, including any person for whose benefit the contract was made. But strangers to the contract have no right of action upon it. There is lacking privity, mutuality, consideration, and every other element essential to constitute the contractual relation between the claimant and the person sued." Berger v. Standard Oil Co., 103 S. W. 245, 126 Ky. 155, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 238 (citing 2 Benj. Sales, § 1004; King v. Creekmore, 77 S. W. 689, 117 Ky. 172; Simons v. Gregory, 85 S. W. 751, 120 Ky. 116; National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, 25 L. Ed. 621).

A "warranty" is an express or implied statement of something which a party undertakes shall be a part of a contract, and, though part of the contract, collateral to the express object of it. In many of the cases the circumstances of a party selling a particular thing by its proper description has been called a "warranty," and the breach of such a warranty a breach of warranty; but it would be better to distinguish such cases as a noncompliance with a contract which a party has engaged to fulfill. Springfield Shingle Co. v. Edgecomb Mill Co., 101 Pac. 233, 235, 52 Wash. 620, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 258.

A recital in a deed that the land conveyed contains a certain number of acres is not a "covenant" or "warranty," but a mere representation. Cotton v. Huston, 84 S. W. 96, 97, 110 Mo. App. 53 (citing Hobein v. Frick, 69 Mo. App. 263, and Wood v. Murphy, 47 Mo. App. 539, and distinguishing McGhee v. Bell, 70 S. W. 493, 170 Mo. 121, 59 L. R. A. 761).

"'Warranty of the seaworthiness' of a ship is a warranty that the ship is in such a fit condition for all the ordinary hazards of the contemplated voyage as to be approved as seaworthy in the judgment of impartial, competent, and experienced men versed in that business." J. J. Moore & Co. v. Cornwall, 144 Fed. 22, 28, 75 C. C. A. 180 (citing Svendensen v. Stursberg, 31 Fed. 86).

False statement of existing fact distinguished

See False Statement.

Guaranty distinguished

While the words "guaranty" and "warranty" are often used interchangeably and with the same effect, there is, in strict legal contemplation, a difference between them; a "guaranty" being the assurance of the payment of a debt or the performance of a duty or contract by another person, while a "warranty" is an assurance of the title or quality of property. Gay Oil Co. v. Roach, 125 S. W. 122, 123, 93 Ark. 454, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914, 137 Am. St. Rep. 95.

In popular parlance, the words "guaranty" and "warranty" are used interchangeably without reference to any difference in meaning. While the term "warranty" is applied to a contract as to title, quality, or quantity of something sold, and the word "guaranty" is held to be a contract by which one person is bound to another for the fulfillment of a promise or engagement of a third party, the two words are derivatives from the same root, and are identical in significance and effect. In the stipulation, in a note given for the purchase money of a mule, that the seller "does in no wise guarantee except in title," the word "guarantee" is used in the sense of a warranty. Branch v. James, 60 S. E. 1027, 4 Ga. App. 90 (citing and adopting McNeel v. Smith, 32 S. E. 119, 106 Ga. 215; Jackson v. Langston, 61 Ga. 392).

The words with "guarantee against leakage," in an accepted order for a certain number of barrels of oil, in effect state that the barrels are warranted against leakage; "guarantee" being used synonymously with warranty. Gay Oil Co. v. Roach, 125 S. W. 122, 123, 93 Ark. 454, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914, 137 Am. St. Rep. 95.

A petition which alleges that defendant sold to plaintiff oil to be used as a cooling agent for the cylinder and engine of an automobile owned and operated by plaintiff; that defendant "guaranteed" that the oil was not inflammable and was safe as a cooling medium; that, believing in the truth of defendant's representations, plaintiff purchased the oil, and it was placed in his automobile; that the oil was inflammable and was not safe for use as a cooling medium; that it ignited, and plaintiff's machine was burned and destroyed; and that defendant's representations were knowingly false—stated a cause of action in contract, and not in tort; the averment that the oil was "guaranteed" to be noninflammable and safe being the equivalent of an averment that there was a warranty of the character and quality thereof. Conkling v. Standard Oil Co., 116 N. W. 822, 824, 138 Iowa, 596.

In insurance

"Warranties" in insurance law are of two kinds—affirmative and promissory. Affirmative warranties consist of a representation in the policy of a fact. Promissory warranties are those that require that something shall be done or not done after the policy takes effect." Rosenthal Clothing & Dry Goods Co. v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., 46 S. E. 1021, 55 W. Va. 238.

"A 'warranty in an insurance contract' is a statement made therein by the assured, which is susceptible of no construction other than that the parties mutually intended that the policy should not be binding unless such statement be literally true." Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. v. Waggener, 97 S. W. 541, 543, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 144 (quoting Phoenix Assurance Co. of London v. Munger Improved Cotton Mach. Mfg. Co., 49 S. W. 222, 92 Tex. 297).

"A 'warranty' in an insurance contract is a statement made therein by the assured which is susceptible of no construction other than that the parties mutually intended that the policy should not be binding unless such statement be literally true." Daniel v. Modern Woodmen of America, 118 S. W. 211, 215, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 570 (quoting and adopting definition in Reppond v. Nat. Life Ins. Co., 101 S. W. 786, 100 Tex. 519, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 981, 15 Ann. Cas. 618 and Phoenix Assurance Co. of London v. Munger Improved Cotton Mach. Mfg. Co., 49 S. W. 222, 92 Tex. 297).

In determining whether a stipulation in an application for life insurance that the statements made or to be made to the medical examiner are "warranted" to be full, complete, and true, and without suppression of any fact tending to influence the company in issuing a policy, is a warranty, the court must look to the policy, the application, and the report of the medical examiner; the use of the word "warranty" not necessarily creating a warranty in law. Reppond v. National Life Ins. Co. of America, 101 S. W. 786, 788, 100 Tex. 519, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 981, 15 Ann. Cas. 618.

A "warranty" in insurance is "a stipulation or agreement on the part of the insured party, in the nature of a condition." A stipulation in a fire policy that the insurance company should not be liable for loss caused, directly or indirectly, by order of any civil authority, is not a "warranty," within Civ. Code Cal. §§ 2607, 2608, providing that a statement in a policy of a matter relating to the thing insured or to the risk as a fact, and a statement which imports that it is intended to do or not to do a thing which materially affects the risk, is a warranty; the statute not creating any new definition of warranty in insurance. Conner v. Manchester Assur. Co., 130 Fed. 743, 744, 65 C. C. A. 127, 70 L. R. A. 106 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

A "warranty" by insured enters into and is a part of the contract of insurance, and must be literally true to permit a recovery on the policy. The "warranty" must necessarily appear in the contract itself, and courts will not construe a statement as a warranty, unless the language of the policy is so clear as to preclude any other construction. Where a policy by express terms makes the application a part of the contract, or where it declares that the application is the basis on which the contract is made, or where the policy is declared to be issued on the faith of the application, representations in the application are a part of the policy, and are "warranties"; but a mere reference to the application in the policy, without indicating a purpose to make it part of the policy, is insufficient to change statements in the application from representations into warranties. Spence v. Central Accident Ins. Co., 86 N. E. 104, 105, 236 Ill. 444, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 88.

"A 'warranty' in a contract of insurance must if affirmative be strictly and exactly true, and if promissory must be literally fulfilled. The validity of the contract depends thereon; otherwise, it becomes void. No departure can be allowed in the slightest particular in any matter warranted. The very purpose and meaning of a warranty is to preclude all questions for what purpose it was made, or whether it was made for any purpose at all by the insured. Once it is inserted in the policy, or made a part thereof by proper reference, it binds the assured as made, it matters not whether the breach proceeds from fraud, negligence, misinformation, or to what cause noncompliance is attributable. If it be an affirmative warranty, and is false, there is a breach; if it be promissory, and is not strictly performed, the contract is vitiated." Insured warranted that the policy should be void if he concealed or misrepresented any material fact concerning the insurance, or subject thereof, or in case of any fraud or false swearing touching the insurance, or the subject thereof, before or after loss. Among the questions asked in the application was the cost of the house insured, which insured answered as $2,000. The house was destroyed, and in an action on the policy he testified that the house cost $1,700. Held, that such evidence constituted a breach of warranty, avoiding the policy. Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. King, 102 S. W. 194, 195, 82 Ark. 400 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Joyce, Ins., § 1970; citing 3 Cooley, Briefs on Ins., pp. 1130, 1131, 1154; 1 May, Ins. § 156).

Where a by-law of a beneficial association required a beneficiary to be a member of a member's family, related by blood, or dependent upon the member, a statement of a member that the beneficiary named by him was dependent upon him amounted to a "warranty." Caldwell v. Grand Lodge of United Workmen of California, 82 Pac. 781, 782, 148 Cal. 195, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 653, 113 Am. St. Rep. 219, 7 Ann. Cas. 356.

A "warranty" of the truth of a statement in an application for life insurance concerning the family record of the applicant, and containing a statement that the health of an older brother is good, means merely that the individual inquired about has indicated in his action and appearance no symptoms or traces of disease, and to the observation of an ordinary friend or relative is in truth well. Schmitt v. Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 448, 450, 101 App. Div. 12.

Where a policy of life insurance recited that "in consideration of the stipulations and agreements in the application hereof, and also upon the next page of this policy, all of which are hereby made parts of this contract," but nowhere containing the word "warranty," the fact that the application made the applicant's answers warranties would not enable the company to defend an action on the policy on the ground of breach of warranty; the policy being on the paper which came into the possession of the applicant under the contract. Logan v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Society of New York, 50 S. E. 529, 530, 57 W. Va. 384.

Laws 1892, p. 1991, c. 690, § 137, as amended by Laws 1894, p. 1378, c. 611, § 1, provides for the appointment of agents to procure policies of fire insurance in corporations not authorized to do business in the state, and requires the filing of affidavits with the insurance department showing that insured was unable to procure the full amount of insurance required from corporations authorized to transact business in the state. Held, that the fact that an applicant for insurance in such a company, on request for the names of three admitted companies on the risk, gave the names of certain companies which were not on the risk, was no defense to an action on the policy, where three other admitted companies were in fact upon it. The erroneous statement made by the applicant did not amount to a "warranty"; the policy being on the standard form, which contains no such "warranty." Hirsch v. Fidelitas Société Anonyme D'Assurances et de Reassurances, 99 N. Y. Supp. 517, 519, 50 Misc. Rep. 582 (citing Brooks v. Erie Fire Ins. Co., 78 N. Y. Supp. 748, 76 App. Div. 275).

Same—As a condition precedent

A "warranty," in insurance, is in the nature of a condition precedent and must be performed by the insured before he can demand performance of the contract on the part of the insurer; and it is quite immaterial for what purpose such warranty was made, and whether or not it was material to the risk, and whether the hazard was enhanced by reason of its falsity. Donley v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 302, 307, 100 App. Div. 69 (citing Rohrbach v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 62 N. Y. 47, 20 Am. Rep. 451; Chaffee v. Cattaraugus County Mut. Ins. Co., 18 N. Y. 376; Bryce v. Lorillard Fire Ins. Co., 55 N. Y. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 249; Alexander v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 66 N. Y. 464, 23 Am. Rep. 76; Graham v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 87 N. Y. 69, 41 Am. Rep. 349).

A "warranty" in a contract of insurance, whether material or not, being part of the contract, has the force of a condition precedent, and, unless it is true, the insurer is not bound by his promise. Donley v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 76 N. E. 914, 916, 184 N. Y. 107, 6 Ann. Cas. 81.

In general, a "warranty" must be a part of the contract, made so by express agreement of the parties on the face of the policy, being in the nature of a condition precedent which must be strictly complied with or literally fulfilled to entitle the assured to recover on the policy; its falsity barring a recovery, regardless of the actual materiality to the risk, because of the express stipulation that the statement was warranted to be true and thus made material. Pelican v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 119 Pac. 778, 781, 44 Mont. 277.

A "warranty" by insured, as applied to an application for insurance, is a stipulation for the absolute truth of the statements made in the application, and for strict compliance with some promised line of conduct, on penalty of forfeiture of his right to recover in case of loss, should the statement prove untrue or the course of conduct promised be unfulfilled. A "warranty" is an agreement in the nature of a condition precedent, and, like that, must be strictly complied with. Union Nat. Bank of New Orleans v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 26 South. 800, 806, 52 La. Ann. 36.

Same—Condition precedent distinguished

A "condition precedent" in an insurance contract is a condition without performance of which the contract, though in form executed by the parties and delivered, does not spring into life; whereas a "warranty" does not suspend or defeat the operation of the contract, but a breach affords either the remedy provided in the contract or those furnished by the law. A statement respecting the income of the insured appeared in a rider pasted on an accident policy, the heading of which was "Schedule of Warranties Made by the Insured on the Acceptance of This Policy," and, though not signed by him, the series of statements of which it was a part was in the first person, and gave information material to the acceptance of the risk, and at what amount and rate. Held, that the statement was a warranty, and not a condition precedent. Everson v. General Fire & Life Assur. Corp., Limited, of Perth, Scotland, 88 N. E. 658, 660, 202 Mass. 169.

Same—Materiality

Where an insurance policy recited that it was issued in consideration of the application which was made a part thereof, statements in the application, declared and warranted by insured to be complete and true, were "warranties," which formed a part of the contract of insurance, and any falsity therein, whether upon a material matter or not, vitiated the contract. Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Hummer, 84 Pac. 61-65, 36 Colo. 208.

When an application for accident insurance is made a part of the policy, and the statements therein contained are warranted to be true, they are "warranties," and it is of no consequence whether they are or are not material to the risk. An application for an accident policy contained the following provision: "I hereby apply for an accident policy to be based on the following statement of facts, all of which I hereby warrant to be true." One of the statements following was as to the age of the applicant. Held, that the statement of the age of the applicant was a warranty, and that the beneficiary could not assert that the misstatement of such age was immaterial to the risk. Central Acc. Ins. Co. v. Spence, 126 Ill. App. 32, 41-45.

Same—Representations distinguished

A "warranty" in insurance enters into and is a part of the contract, and must be literally true to permit a recovery on the policy, while a representation is not a part of the contract, but an inducement thereto. A representation must relate to a material matter, and is only required to be substantially true. Spence v. Central Accident Ins. Co., 86 N. E. 104, 105, 236 Ill. 444, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 88.

The difference in legal effect between a "warranty" and a "representation," in an insurance policy, is that falsity in a warranty in any particular bars recovery on the policy, while a "representation" to do so must refer to some fact material to the insurance, and be false or fraudulent. Holland v. Western Union Life Ins. Co. of Spokane, 107 Pac. 866, 867, 58 Wash. 100; Monahan v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of Baltimore, 63 Atl. 211, 212, 103 Md. 145, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 759.

There is a material and substantial difference between the legal effect of a "warranty" and a representation. A representation must relate to a material matter, and it is only required to be substantially true, while a "warranty" must be literally true, and its materiality cannot be called in question. It is said that "warranties" enter into and are made a part of the contract, while representations are merely inducements to it. Minnesota Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Link, 230 Ill. 273, 82 N. E. 637, 638 (citing Continental Life Ins. Co. v. Rogers, 10 N. E. 242, 119 Ill. 474, 50 Am. Rep. 810; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Moravec, 73 N. E. 415, 214 Ill. 186).

A "representation" is not strictly a part of the contract of insurance, or of the essence thereof, but is something collateral or preliminary, in the nature of an inducement, so that its falsity, unlike a false "warranty," will not vitiate the contract or avoid the policy, unless it relates to a fact actually material, or clearly intended to be made material by agreement of the parties; it being sufficient if the representations are substantially true, though not strictly or literally so. A misrepresentation renders the policy void on the ground of fraud, while noncompliance with a warranty operates as an express breach of the contract. Pelican v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 119 Pac. 778, 781, 44 Mont. 277.

The difference between a "warranty" and a "representation" lies in the fact that in the former the question of materiality is closed, while in the latter it is left open, and if untrue in the former case the policy is voidable at the option of the other party, while if untrue in the latter case and also material the same result follows. American Bonding & Trust Co. of Baltimore v. Burke, 85 Pac. 692, 693, 26 Colo. 49 (quoting and adopting definition in Ostrander, Fire Ins. [2d Ed.] § 135).

"A 'warranty' in the law of insurance is not matter collateral to the contract, stated as an inducement to the other party to enter into the agreement, as a representation is. It is parcel of the contract, and, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, invalidates the obligation if not strictly true; and this though the thing warranted does not affect the risk." Salts v. Prudential Ins. Co., 120 S. W. 714, 716, 140 Mo. App. 142.

All statements regarding the risk contained in or appearing on the face of a policy, are "warranties," and such is the rule irrespective of the use of the word "warranty" or "warranted." A stipulation in an insurance policy reducing the price of insurance 50 per cent. on "sprinkler risks," without requiring insured to use due diligence in maintaining an automatic sprinkler system in good working order, is a "warranty," and not a representation. Port Blakely Mill Co. v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 106 Pac. 194, 195, 196, 56 Wash. 681, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 593.

Whether the answers made by the applicant for a policy of indemnity or insurance are "warranties" or mere representations must depend upon the character of the question and its answer, the opportunity of the insurer to guard against the representation in the light of its consequences, or whether it is material to the risk. A "warranty" must be strictly true. A representation need only be substantially true. The crucial distinction between a representation and a "warranty" is that the one is not, and the other is, a part of the contract between the parties, and that the truth of the one is not, and the truth of the other is, a condition precedent to a recovery upon the policy or bond to which they relate. Poultry Producers' Union v. Williams, 107 Pac. 1040, 1041, 58 Wash. 64, 137 Am. St. Rep. 1041.

Statements made in good faith by the president of a bank to an indemnity company, for the purpose of inducing the company to give a bond guaranteeing the faithful discharge of the duties of a bookkeeper of the bank, that the bookkeeper had kept his accounts correct, and had made proper settlements for cash and securities intrusted to his care, and that the books had been inspected and examined, are "representations," and not warranties, where they are made on blanks furnished by the company, notwithstanding a stipulation therein that the answers are to be taken as conditions precedent, and as the basis of the bond applied for, and the liability of the company does not depend on the absolute truth of the statements. Guthrie Nat. Bank v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 79 Pac. 102, 103, 14 Okl. 636.

In insurance a "representation" is a statement of the applicant to the insurer regarding a fact material to the proposed insurance, and it must be, not only false, but fraudulent, to defeat the policy. The crucial distinction between a "representation" and a "warranty" is that the one is not, and the other is, a part of the contract, and that the truth of the one is not, and the truth of the other is, a condition precedent to a recovery on the policy. Thus, where the president of a bank applies to a bonding company for a bond indemnifying the bank against defalcations by an employé, and answers questions in writing at the request of the bonding company as to the former conduct of such employé, such questions and answers are representations, and not warranties, but must be given in good faith, and any material false representations will relieve the company from liability. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Guthrie Nat. Bank, 87 Pac. 300, 17 Okl. 397 (citing Rice v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 103 Fed. 430, 432, 43 C. C. A. 270, 275; Moulton v. American Life Ins. Co., 4 Sup. Ct. 466, 111 U. S. 335, 28 L. Ed. 447).

The distinction between a "representation" and a "warranty," as applied to statements by insured in his application for a policy, is that in the case of representations it is sufficient if the representations are substantially true, while in the case of a "warranty" they must be literally true. In the case of a representation the policy is not avoided unless the statements are false to a degree or in a sense that materially affects the risk, or are such that if they had not been made the policy would not have been issued. In the case of a "warranty" it cannot be said that, though literally false, it is substantially true. In the case of a representation, the law clearly contemplates that it shall be viewed liberally, and though false as a matter of fact, to a degree sufficient to defeat the liability of the company if it were a warranty, it may nevertheless as a representation be held to be substantially true. An applicant for insurance might, in answer to a question, "How old are you?" say that he was 30; and should the proof show that he was 29, 31, or 36, it would be for the jury to say whether the answer was false in a particular material to the risk. So, likewise, in the case of a negative answer to the question, "Have you ever had hemorrhages or spitting of blood?" where the proof might tend to show that the blood-spitting resulted several times from the extraction of a tooth or an affection of the throat, or had occurred at a remote point of time and in inconsiderable quantities, in such case the jury would be called upon to say whether the representation, though false, if viewed literally, was false in a particular material to the risk. Royal Neighbors of America v. Wallace, 92 N. W. 897, 898, 66 Neb. 543.

"A 'warranty' is a stipulation expressly set out or by inference incorporated in the policy, whereby the assured agrees that certain facts relating to the risk are or shall be true, or certain acts relating to the same subject have been or shall be true, or certain acts relating to the same subject have been or shall be done.' Its purpose is to define the limits of the obligation assumed by the insurer and it is a condition which must be strictly complied with, or literally fulfilled, before the right to recover on the policy can accrue. It is not necessary that the fact or act warranted should be material to the risk, for the parties by their agreement have made it so. Lord Eldon says: 'It is a first principle in the law of insurance that, if there is a warranty, it is a part of the contract that the matter is such as it is represented to be.' Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. Thompson, 21 S. W. 468, 469, 57 Ark. 279; Western Assurance Co. v. Althelmer, 25 S. W. 1067, 1069, 58 Ark. 565. On the other hand, representations are no part of the contract of insurance, but are collateral or preliminary to it. When made to the insurer, at or before the contract is entered into, they form a basis upon which the risks proposed to be assumed can be estimated. They operate as the inducement to the contract. Unlike a false warranty, they will not invalidate the contracts because they are untrue, unless they are material to the risks, and need only be substantially true. They render the policy void on the ground of fraud, 'while a noncompliance with a warranty operates as an express breach of the contract.' Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. King, 102 S. W. 194, 195, 82 Ark. 400 (quoting and approving definition in Providence Life Assurance Society v. Reutlinger, 25 S. W. 835, 58 Ark. 528).

In sales of personalty

Representations made at the time of a sale to induce a purchase are "warranties." Chestnut v. Ohler (Ky.) 112 S. W. 1101.

Whatever a seller represents at the time of the sale is a "warranty"; no particular words being required. Heath Dry Gas Co. v. Hurd, 108 N. Y. Supp. 410, 412, 124 App. Div. 68 (citing Hawkins v. Pemberton, 51 N. Y. 198, 10 Am. Rep. 595).

A clear representation of the quality of a thing sold, made by a seller, and relied upon by the buyer, is a "warranty." Meshbeshier v. Channellene Oil & Mfg. Co., 119 N. W. 428, 429, 107 Minn. 104, 131 Am. St. Rep. 441.

A positive representation of the quality of a thing sold, when made by a seller as a part of a contract of sale and relied upon by the buyer, is a "warranty." Siegel v. Barker, 125 N. W. 582, 583, 110 Minn. 344.

Any distinct assertion or affirmation of quality made by the owners to effect the sale of a chattel, and which does effect it, is a "warranty," whether the word "warranty" is used or not. Iler v. Jennings, 68 S. E. 1041, 1042, 87 S. C. 87.

A "warranty" in the sale of goods is an express promise that the articles sold shall answer a particular standard of quality, and is a condition until the sale is executed and a warranty thereafter. A representation by a manufacturer of machinery as to the character and capacity thereof, made to a buyer with knowledge of the facts, is a warranty. Any positive affirmation of facts, as distinguished from an expression of opinion, intended as a warranty of goods sold or received, and acted on by the buyer as such, is a "warranty." El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Eichel & Weikel (Tex.) 130 S. W. 922, 936.

A "warranty" is so clearly a part of the sale that, where the sale is evidenced by a written instrument, it is incompetent to ingraft on it a "warranty" by parol. Lower v. Hickman, 97 S. W. 681, 80 Ark. 505.

Whether a representation or affirmation accompanying a sale is a "warranty," or merely a simple commendation, is to be determined from the intention of the parties. Phillips v. Crosby, 59 Atl. 142, 70 N. J. Law, 785.

Any affirmation made at the time of a sale as to quality or condition is a "warranty," if so intended, and the buyer bought on the faith thereof, and such intent and reliance are questions of fact. Hodgkins v. Dunham, 103 Pac. 351, 358, 10 Cal. App. 690.

Where it was necessary that boxes sold under an express warranty of quality should be dry to be fit for the use intended, the express warranty was a warranty of quality and of fitness, within Civ. Code, § 3314, defining the measure of damages for breach of "warranty of fitness." North Alaska Salmon Co. v. Hobbs, Wall & Co., 120 Pac. 27, 159 Cal. 380, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 501.

A "warranty of title," which is implied on a sale of property in the vendor's possession, is a warranty as to the whole title; and it therefore protects against partial defects, liens, charges, and incumbrances, by which the title transferred is rendered anything less than full, perfect, and unincumbered. Clevenger v. Lewis, 95 Pac. 230, 233, 20 Okl. 837, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 410, 16 Ann. Cas. 56 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Mechem, Sales, § 1302).

"No particular words are necessary to create a 'warranty.' Every affirmation made by the seller as a fact, at the time of a sale, and as an inducement to the sale, if relied upon by the buyer, amounts to a warranty." Thus an affirmation by the seller of a horse that she was sound and all right, intended as an inducement to the sale and relied on by the buyer, constitutes a warranty. Ellison v. Simmons (Del.) 65 Atl. 591, 592, 6 Pennewill, 200.

Where a seller of strawberries affirmed that they were a certain variety, and the buyer bought relying on the affirmation, there was an express "warranty" that they were such variety, though the word "warranty" was not used. Alvin Fruit & Truck Ass'n v. Hartman, 123 S. W. 957, 961, 146 Mo. App. 155.

In an action for breach of "warranty" of mules, an instruction that if the only representation made with reference to the mules was that they were sound so far as defendant knew, and if at that time he had no knowledge or information of the unsoundness, you will find for the defendant, even though they were unsound, was erroneous. Mosby v. Larue, 136 S. W. 887, 888, 143 Ky. 433.

A good-faith "representation and warranty" made by one joint purchaser of timber to his copurchasers as an inducement to the purchase, as to the quantity of lumber which could be cut from such timber, is not within the rules as to "warranties" in sales of property or insurance contracts to the extent of implying a promise to reimburse his copurchasers for loss on account of the failure of the tract to cut as much as represented, so as to create a liability therefor on an implied contract provable against his estate in bankruptcy under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63a (4). Switzer v. Henking, 158 Fed. 784, 785, 86 C. C. A. 140, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1151.

Any distinct assertion or affirmation by the seller as to the quality or character of the thing sold during negotiations which may reasonably be supposed is intended to induce the purchase and was relied on by the purchaser is a "warranty," unless accompanied by an express statement that it is not intended as such. Luitweller Pumping Engine Co. v. Ukiah Water & Improvement Co., 116 Pac. 707, 710, 16 Cal. App. 198.

By an executory contract for the sale and delivery of "select and common" poplar lumber, the seller becomes bound to deliver goods of the character described; but there is no "warranty," which survives the acceptance by the purchaser of the lumber, delivered by the seller in good faith as in performance of the contract, if the acceptance is with full knowledge of all the conditions affecting the character and quality of the article. Bowman Lumber Co. v. Anderson, 70 N. E. 503, 504, 70 Ohio St. 16.

It is not essential that the word "warranty" or any precise form of expression be used to create an express "warranty"; but if the vendor, at the time of the sale, affirms a fact as to the essential qualities of his goods as an inducement to the sale, in clear and distinct terms, and the vendee purchases on the faith of such affirmation, that will constitute an express "warranty." Randall v. Thornton, 43 Me. 226, 231, 69 Am. Dec. 56.

To constitute a warranty by a seller of quality and condition, the warranty need not be in writing, nor need the word "warranty" be used; but it is sufficient if there is a representation of the state of the thing sold, or a direct, positive, unequivocal, and express affirmation of its quality and condition, forming a part of the consideration of the sale, and disclosing an intention to make good the quality of the thing sold, and so relied on by the buyer. Detjen v. Moerschel Brewing Co., 138 S. W. 696, 157 Mo. App. 614.

"No particular form of words is necessary to constitute a 'warranty' as to the quality or soundness of chattels. Any form of words, whereby a vendor, pending negotiations, for the purpose of inducing a purchase, makes affirmation that the subject-matter of the proposed sale is of a particular quality or fitness, will constitute a warranty when relied upon by the purchaser." Shuman v. Heater, 106 N. W. 1042, 1043, 76 Neb. 119 (citing Little v. Woodworth, 8 Neb. 281; Ersline v. Swanson, 64 N. W. 216, 45 Neb. 767; Unland v. Garton, 66 N. W. 1130, 48 Neb. 202).

A mere praising of one's own property, a "simplex commendatio," is allowable in making a trade, and does not amount, under the common law, to a "warranty." Brackett v. Martens, 87 Pac. 410, 413, 4 Cal. App. 249 (quoting Byrne v. Jansen, 50 Cal. 627).

No particular words are necessary to create a "warranty" in a sale, and every affirmation made at the time of the sale as a fact, and as an inducement thereto, will, if the buyer relies thereon, amount to a "warranty." Whether statements made at the time of the transaction amount to an affirmation of a fact, or are simply expressions of opinion, depends on the nature and circumstances of the sale. The mere expression of an opinion, not amounting to an affirmation, and not showing an intention to warrant, will not constitute a "warranty." Collins v. Tigner (Del.) 60 Atl. 978, 979, 5 Pennewill, 345 (citing Burton v. Young [Del.] 5 Har. 233).

In order to constitute an express warranty, no particular language is necessary. It is not required that it shall be in writing, or be made in specific terms; and it is not at all necessary that the word "warrant" or "warranty" shall be used. Any direct and positive affirmation of a matter of fact, as distinguished from a mere matter of opinion or judgment, made by the seller during the sale negotiations and as a part of the contract, designed by him to induce the action of the purchaser, and actually relied upon by the latter in making the purchase, will be deemed to be a warranty. Woolsey v. Ziegler, 123 Pac. 164, 165, 32 Okl. 715.

"No special form of words is necessary to create a 'warranty.' It is now more than 200 years since Lord Holt first settled the rule in Cross v. Gardner and Medina v. Stoughton, which Butler, J., in 1789 laid down, in an opinion given by him in the famous leading case of Pasley v. Freeman, as follows: 'It was rightly held by Holt, C. J., and has been uniformly adopted ever since, that an affirmation at the time of a sale is a warranty, provided it appears in evidence to have been so intended.' It is a matter of contract between the parties, and the decisive question is the real intention as to whether the affirmation of fact was made for the purpose of inducing the purchase in the one instance, and whether it was relied upon by the purchaser in the other." Wertheimer-Swartz Shoe Co. v. McDonald, 122 S. W. 5, 9, 138 Mo. App. 328 (citing and adopting Childs v. Emerson, 93 S. W. 286, 117 Mo. App. 671; Haines v. Neece, 92 S. W. 919, 116 Mo. App. 499; Young v. Van Natta, 88 S. W. 123, 113 Mo. App. 550; Danforth v. Crookshanks, 68 Mo. App. 311; Carter v. Black, 46 Mo. loc. cit. 385).

A "warranty" is an engagement by which a seller assures to the buyer the existence of some facts affecting the transaction, whether past, present or future. Civ. Code, § 2370. To create an express warranty, the word "warranty" need not be used, nor are any particular words necessary. Any affirmation, other than mere dealers' talk, made at the time of the sale as to the quality or condition of the thing sold, will be treated as a warranty, if it was so intended, and the purchaser bought on the good faith of such affirmation. Whether it was so intended, and the purchaser acted upon it, are questions of fact. Lander v. Sheehan, 79 Pac. 406, 408, 32 Mont. 25 (citing McLennan v. Ohmen, 17 Pac. 687, 75 Cal. 558).

"A 'warranty' in the sale of personal property is a statement or representation of fact made by the vendor as to the character or quality of the article sold or the title thereto, whereby the vendor promises that the thing is or shall be as represented. It is otherwise defined as a statement of fact as to the article sold, coupled with an agreement to make the statement good." There is a warranty where, on a sale of hogs, the seller represents that they are of a certain kind and quality and agrees to make such representation good. Afflick v. Streeter, 103 S. W. 112, 113, 125 Mo. App. 703 (quoting and adopting the definition in 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7402; Ingraham v. Union R. Co., 33 Atl. 875, 19 R. I. 350).

"When time of performance is made an essential element of the contract of sale, such stipulation is regarded as being in the nature of a 'warranty' that the goods will be delivered in the time agreed, and in case of failure of the vendor to so deliver the vendee has the option either to rescind the contract and refuse to accept the goods, or to receive them and recover from the vendor his damages." Wall v. St. Joseph Artesian Ice & Cold Storage Co., 87 S. W. 574, 575, 112 Mo. App. 659.

A "warranty" in a contract of sale is an agreement by the vendor that the thing he sells is of a certain kind, character, or quality, affecting its value to the vendee, no particular form of words being necessary; and any covenant, promise, or assertion of the vendor concerning the quality of the article sold, if relied on by the vendee and understood by both parties as an absolute promise, and not a mere expression of opinion, or any representation as to quality made by the vendor to induce the purchaser, amounts to a warranty. A statement in a letter by one attempting to sell shingles that "they are mighty good shingles, they are as good as you can get anywhere," constitutes a warranty as to their quality. Harroll v. McDuttie (Tex.) 128 S. W. 1149, 1151.

Any affirmation of a material fact as a fact, intended by the vendor as and for a "warranty," and relied upon as such, is sufficient; but mere representations by way of commendation, or which merely express the vendor's opinion, belief, judgment, or estimate, do not constitute a warranty. "Simplex commendatio non obligat." Whether a particular representation is an affirmation of a positive fact, or, on the other hand, only praise and commendation, is a question for the jury, where the meaning is ambiguous, and the intention of the parties may be gathered from surrounding circumstances. Sauerman & Ball v. Simmons, 86 S. W. 429, 431, 74 Ark. 563 (quoting and adopting the definition in 2 Benj. Sales, American Notes, p. 664, and citing James v. Bocage, 45 Ark. 284).

To constitute a warranty on a sale, it is not necessary that the word "warranty" be used, nor is any particular phraseology necessary. It is sufficient if there be a representation of the state of the thing sold, or a direct, positive, unequivocal and express affirmation of its quality or condition, being part of the consideration of the sale, and showing an intention to warrant or make good the quality of the thing sold, and so understood and relied upon, instead of a mere recommendation or expression of opinion, leaving the buyer to understand that he must still examine and judge for himself. Where a letter proposing to sell an animal described his height, etc., and the purchaser in ordering described the animal in the language used by the seller, there was an express warranty that the animal was as represented in the offer. Childs v. Emerson, 93 S. W. 286, 287; 117 Mo. App. 671.

"No particular form or language is necessary to create a warranty. The expression 'warranty' need not occur specifically, though that is the term most often used. It is the subject-matter of the statement or representation, and the circumstances under which it was made, rather than its form, which are to be considered. Any distinct assertion or affirmation as to the quality or character of the thing to be sold, made by the seller during the negotiations for the sale, which it may reasonably be supposed was intended to induce the purchase, and was relied on by the purchaser, will be regarded as a warranty, unless accompanied by an express statement that it is not intended as such. If the affirmation was made in good faith, it is still a warranty; if made with a knowledge of its falsity, it is none the less a warranty, though it is also a fraud." Cockerell v. Henderson, 105 Pac. 443, 444, 81 Kan. 335 (citing 20 Cyc. 86, 87).

Same—As collateral undertaking

A "warranty" in a contract of sale is an undertaking collateral to the object of the sale. Wills v. Wright (Del.) 81 Atl. 507, 508, 2 Boyce, 598.

A "warranty" is a collateral obligation accompanying a contract of sale, relating to the character or fitness of the article sold. Crane Co. v. Collins, 93 N. Y. Supp. 174, 178, 103 App. Div. 480 (citing Waerber v. Talbot, 60 N. E. 288, 167 N. Y. 48, 82 Am. St. Rep. 712).

A "warranty" in the sale of goods is an independent subsidiary promise, collateral to the main object of the contract, the breach of which gives rise to a claim for damages. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Eichel & Weikel (Tex.) 130 S. W. 922, 936.

A "warranty" in the sale of a chattel is a collateral undertaking by the seller as to quality or title, and may be express when made so by agreement, or implied when the law derives it by implication from the nature of the transaction or the situation of the parties. Millsap v. Wolfe, 56 South. 22, 24, 1 Ala. App. 599.

A "warranty" is an express or implied undertaking by one of the parties, collateral to the main subject of the contract, whereby he promises or insures that the thing to be done, etc., shall be of the kind or quality stipulated. Modern Machinery Co. v. Perkins (Del.) 80 Atl. 1060, 1062.

A "warranty" is a collateral agreement, and not a constituent element of a sale. A breach of it does not alone warrant rescission, unless the breach is agreed on as ground for rescission, or the facts show that such was the intention of the parties, or fraud is shown to exist. No right to rescind exists under executed sales for mere breach of warranty. Simonson v. Jenson, 104 N. W. 513, 14 N. D. 417.

A "warranty" is a statement or representation made by the seller contemporaneously with and as a part of the contract of sale, though collateral to the express object of it, having reference to the character, quality, or title of the goods, and by which he promises to insure that certain facts are or shall be as he then represents them. Whigham v. W. Hall & Co., 70 S. E. 23, 24, 8 Ga. App. 509.

A "warranty" is a collateral undertaking forming a part of a contract of sale, and made so by the agreement of the parties, express or implied, to make the assurance good or pay for the deficiency. Mere words of praise and commendation, or which merely express the vendor's opinion, judgment, or estimate do not constitute a "warranty." A statement by the seller of fruit trees, after having explained to the buyer that they had not been very well taken care of and were of the cheapest grade, that they were good trees if taken care of, amounted merely to an expression of opinion, and did not constitute a warranty of merchantableness. Brackett v. Martens, 87 Pac. 410, 413, 4 Cal. App. 249 (citing Benj. Sales, § 610, and American note to the same section, pp. 606-608; Byrne v. Jansen, 50 Cal. 627; Polhemus v. Helman, 45 Cal. 579; Henshaw v. Robins [Mass.] 9 Metc. 83, 43 Am. Dec. 367; McDonald Mfg. Co. v. Thomas, 5 N. W. 737, 53 Iowa, 558; Greenthal v. Schneider [N. Y.] 52 How. Prac. 133; Farrow v. Andrews, 69 Ala. 96; Worth v. McConnell, 4 N. W. 198, 42 Mich. 473).

Same—Noncompliance with contract distinguished

A "warranty" is an express or implied statement of something which a party undertakes shall be part of a contract, and, though part of the contract, collateral to the expressed object of it. Many cases confuse a mere breach of the contract of sale with a breach of warranty. Joseph Joseph Bros. Co. v. Schonthal Iron & Steel Co., 58 Atl. 205, 209, 99 Md. 382.

WAS—WERE

"Was," as used in a will reciting that testator excluded his son because he was amply provided for by his grandmother, indicated that testator knew that the son had lost by speculation and otherwise a portion of the money received from the grandmother. Heath v. Koch, 77 N. Y. Supp. 513, 514, 74 App. Div. 338.

The finding that a certain sum "was unpaid" relates back to the filing of the complaint, and from it, in the absence of anything to the contrary, it follows that it was unpaid at the time of the trial. Trels v. Berlin Dye Works & Laundry Co., 105 Pac. 275, 276, 11 Cal. App. 421.

The petition in an action for injuries to a servant by derailment of a train alleged that plaintiff's injuries were caused by defendant's negligence, in that the engine and train were old, worn, out of repair, and unsuited for the purposes for which they were being used, and also in the manner and way the engine and cars were being operated.

Held, that the words "manner and way" imported either the speed of the train, or something connected with the management and operation thereof, and that the words "were being operated" necessarily referred to that which was being done by the employes on the engine and cars at the time of the accident, so that such allegations were insufficient to justify the submission of an issue of negligence on defendant's part in directing the train to be run over the road as fast as 10 miles an hour. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Poole, 133 S. W. 239, 240, 104 Tex. 36.

WASH

WASH SALE

A "wash sale," is a fictitious sale, made to fasten a fixed liability on a party. F. W. Brockman Commission Co. v. Aaron, 130 S. W. 116, 119, 145 Mo. App. 307.

In a "wash sale" there is no actual transaction of purchase and sale. It is merely a form of transaction wherein the broker purchases and sells for the party certain commodities, nothing being paid, save that the broker receives his commissions on the transaction. People v. Kellogg, 94 N. Y. Supp. 617, 622, 105 App. Div. 505.

WASTE

See Equitable Waste; Permissive Waste; Voluntary Waste; Without Impeachment of Waste.

Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, p. 35, c. 466) § 59, provides that the board of aldermen and the officers and employes of the city are trustees of its property, funds, and effects, that every taxpayer is a cestui que trust in respect to such property, that any co-trustee or cestui que trust may prosecute any action to prevent "waste" or "injury" to any property or funds held in trust, and that all the duties imposed by law on such trustees may be enforced by the city or by any co-trustee or cestuis que trust aforesaid. Held, that a taxpayer's action under such section to restrain the alleged improvident expenditure of municipal funds was similar to that prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1925, and was not maintainable without proof of fraud, collusion, corruption, bad faith, or illegality, since the terms "waste" and "injury," as used in the two statutes are identical in meaning, and include only illegal, wrongful, or dishonest acts. Hearst v. McClellan, 92 N. Y. Supp. 484, 486, 102 App. Div. 336.

In real property law

"Waste" consists of some definite physical injury to the premises leased. Lehmeyer v. Moses, 127 N. Y. Supp. 253, 259, 69 Misc. Rep. 476.

"Waste" is a permanent or lasting injury done or permitted to be done by the holder of a part of it to the inheritance, or to the prejudice of one who has an interest in the inheritance. Mudge v. West End Brewing Co., 125 N. Y. Supp. 15, 20, 68 Misc. Rep. 362.

"Waste" is a spoil or destruction done or permitted to lands, houses, trees, or other corporeal hereditaments by the tenant thereof, to the prejudice of him in reversion or remainder. Norris v. Laws, 64 S. E. 499, 501, 150 N. C. 599. "Waste" is the omission of duty touching real estate by one rightfully in possession, which results in its substantial injury, so that the premises cannot revert to those having an underlying interest, undeteriorated by any willful or negligent act. Delano v. Smith, 92 N. E. 500, 501, 206 Mass. 365, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 474.

"Waste" is a destruction or material alteration or deterioration of the freehold, or of the improvements forming a material part thereof, by any person rightfully in possession, but who has not the fee title or the full estate. Hayman v. Rownd, 118 N. W. 328, 329, 82 Neb. 598, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 623.

"Waste" is that which does a lasting damage to the freehold or inheritance, and tends to the permanent loss of the owner in the fee, or to destroy or lessen the value of the inheritance; but the removal and appropriation by the lessee of a matured crop, whether rightful or wrongful, is not waste, as it does no injury to the inheritance. Deltenre v. Deltenre, 133 S. W. 632, 633, 152 Mo. App. 487 (citing Davis v. Clark, 40 Mo. App. 515).

"'Waste' is the destruction or improper deterioration or material alteration of things forming an essential part of the inheritance, done or suffered by the person rightfully in possession by virtue of a temporary or partial estate, as, for example, a tenant for life or for years." "'Waste' is a spoil or destruction in houses, gardens, trees, or other corporeal hereditaments, to the disherison of him that hath the remainder or reversion in fee simple or fee tail." "Whatever the act or omission is, in order to its constituting 'waste,' it must either diminish the value of the estate, or increase the burdens upon it, or impair the evidence of title of him who has the inheritance. 'Waste,' in short, may be defined to be whatever does a lasting damage to the freehold or inheritance, and tends to the permanent loss of the owner of the fee, or to destroy or lessen the value of the inheritance." The term "waste," as used in the statute and in the bond given in conformity therewith to supersede an order of confirmation of sale in a foreclosure proceeding, should be construed according to its accepted legal significance, and an action to recover "waste," within the meaning of the accepted definitions, must be brought by the owner of the fee for some act of omission or commission done by one in possession under an inferior estate, or by a mortgagee or other lien holder to protect his security, or to recover for an injury thereto, where the security would be or is rendered inadequate by the commission of such "waste." United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Rieck, 107 N. W. 389, 390, 76 Neb. 300 (quoting and adopting definition in 4 Pom. Eq. par. 1346, Blackstone's [Chitty] definition, and that in 1 Washb. Real Prop. [4th Ed.] p. 140).

"Waste" is an injury to the remainder or reversion (the fee), something that lessens the value of the estate. The cutting of timber for commercial purposes by a tenant for years is "waste." What constitutes "waste" by a tenant for a term of years is determined by a consideration as to whether or not an act done results in injury to the inheritance, and whether or not an act is "waste" is determined by the conditions which exist at the time the act is committed. Moss Point Lumber Co. v. Board of Sup'rs of Harrison County, 42 South. 290, 294, 89 Miss. 448.

"Waste" is defined to be 'a spoil or destruction, not arising from an act of God, or of a public enemy, in houses, gardens, trees, lands, or other corporeal hereditaments, to the disherison of him who has the immediate remainder or reversion in fee simple, or in England in fee tail. The three general heads of waste, therefore, are in houses, in timber, and in lands, although whatever else tends to the destruction or depreciation of the value of the inheritance is likewise waste, so that, at common law, waste could be committed only by a person in possession and not having the inheritance; the absolute owner being incapable of committing waste." Brugh v. Denman, 78 N. E. 349, 350, 38 Ind. App. 486 (citing 2 Minor's Inst. [3d Ed.] 598; 2 Bl. Com. 281).

"Waste" may be defined as the "doing of those acts which cause lasting damage to the freehold or inheritance, or the neglect or omission to do those acts which are required to prevent lasting damage to the freehold or inheritance. The term is not an arbitrary one, to be applied inflexibly, without regard to the quality of the estate, or the relation to it of the person charged to have committed the wrong, but the question as to whether it has been committed in a given case is to be determined in view of the particular facts and circumstances appearing in that case." A mortgagor removed from the mortgaged premises, giving notice of such fact to the mortgagee, and he took possession and rented the premises. At that time the buildings, fences, etc., were out of repair, and while the mortgagee was in possession he made no repairs, but on an accounting between the parties it did not appear that the premises had been in any way permanently injured owing to failure to make repairs. Since the mortgagor was credited on the accounting with any sum that might have been spent for repairs, she was not damaged, and a finding that the mortgagee had not been guilty of permissive waste was correct. Chapman v. Cooney, 57 Atl. 928, 929, 25 R. I. 657.

"Waste" is commonly defined to be the permanent injury to land by a tenant, or one holding an intermediate estate. In Rev. St. Wis. § 3177, providing that the holder of a certificate of tax sale may have an action to restrain the commission of waste during the period of redemption, and after obtaining a deed may recover damages against any person for any waste committed by such person after the sale, the word "waste" is used to signify an act which amounted to waste at common law; and, under said section, an action for waste cannot be maintained by the tax title claimant against a mere trespasser, who is a stranger to the title and possession. Lander v. Hall, 34 N. W. 80, 81, 69 Wis. 326 (citing 1 Washb. Real Prop. [5th Ed.] § 4; 2 Burrill, Law Dict. [2d Ed.] "Waste"; Bac. Abr. [10th Ed.] "Of Waste").

The plowing up of blue grass sod on a farm is not "waste." Mize v. Burnett, 145 S. W. 150, 151, 162 Mo. App. 441.

The destruction of fruit trees is "waste." Welling v. Strickland, 126 N. W. 471, 474, 161 Mich. 235.

Where defendant, having a life estate in land, removed the wood and timber therefrom, his act constituted "waste" under Code Civ. Proc. § 1655, relating to actions for waste against the tenant of a particular estate. McCartney v. Titsworth, 104 N. Y. Supp. 45, 46, 119 App. Div. 547.

Dredging and carrying away sand and gravel by a life tenant from the shore of land bordering on a stream, and the removal of fast land and trees above high-water mark, was an injury to the inheritance and constituted "waste." Potomac Dredging Co. of Baltimore City v. Smoot, 69 Atl. 507, 509, 108 Md. 54.

Under the law of West Virginia as established by decision, the sinking of an oil or gas well on land by one tenant in common is a "waste," for which Code W. Va. 1899, c. 92, § 2 (Code 1906, § 3390), renders him liable in damages to his cotenants, and hence the sinking of such a well by a tenant in common or under his authority does not give him any right or equity to have the same set off to him as an improvement made by him on a partition of the land. Dangerfield v. Caldwell, 151 Fed. 554, 557, 81 C. C. A. 400.

The cutting of timber from wild lands in a careful and prudent manner, keeping in view the future value of the land, as well as the present income, is not "waste," within the meaning of R. S. 1871, c. 66, § 20, providing that, when an administrator commits waste or trespass on real estate of his intestate insolvent, he is liable to account for treble the amount of damage, and chapter

95, § 12, providing that when an heir, after the estate is represented insolvent, and before the real estate is sold for payment of debts, or before all the debts are paid, removes or injures any buildings or trees, except what is needed for fuel or repairs, or commits any strip or waste on such estate, he shall forfeit treble the amount of damages, to be recovered by the executor or administrator in an action of trespass. McNichol v. Eaton, 77 Me. 246, 247.

Same—Trespass distinguished

"Technically, there is a difference between 'waste' and 'trespass.' 'Waste' is some unauthorized act which goes to the injury or destruction of an estate, committed by one in the rightful possession thereof, while 'trespass' is the act of a mere intruder; but there is no substantial distinction, so far as the remedy is concerned." Where a complaint, in a suit to restrain the cutting of timber, is framed on the theory of restraining a trespass on land, and plaintiff's evidence showed, not an unlawful trespass, but a rightful entry and the commission of waste, a motion to dismiss the complaint was properly denied, since the relief sought was substantially the same. Roots v. Boring Junction Lumber Co., 92 Pac. 811, 818, 50 Or. 298.

In tariff acts

See Cotton Waste; Silk Waste; Wool Waste.

"Waste," as used in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, par. 463, 30 Stat. 194, fixing the duty on "waste not specially provided for in this act," generally refers to remnants and by-products of small value, that have not the quality or utility either of the finished product or of the raw material. Latimer v. United States, 32 Sup. Ct. 242, 223 U. S. 501, 56 L. Ed. 526.

"The testimony upon this subject falls far short of establishing a commercial designation applicable to these articles with the certainty, uniformity, and generality required by the decisions of this court. * * * In default of such evidence, the term 'waste' will be presumed to have been used in the tariff act in its ordinary sense of refuse." Patton v. United States, 16 Sup. Ct. 89, 159 U. S. 500, 40 L. Ed. 233.

Small disks produced in the manufacture of tin cans, being a by-product in the process of cutting an aperture for filling, and being of much less value than the tin from which they were cut, are not "waste," under Schedule N, par. 463, but are dutiable as articles of metal. Shallus v. United States, 162 Fed. 653, 654, 89 C. C. A. 445.

Flax nolls are dutiable as "waste," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 463, and not under Schedule J, par. 326, as "tow of flax," by similitude. G. B. Ritchie & Co. v. United States, 141 Fed. 604.

Floral waters are dutiable as unenumerated manufactured articles, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 6, rather than as "waste," under section 1, Schedule N, par. 463. Burr v. United States, 167 Fed. 801, 802, 93 C. C. A. 191.

Small pieces of cork, which have been produced by grinding the refuse of cork bark for convenience in handling, and which need further preparation before becoming fit for its ultimate use in the manufacture of linoleum, etc., is dutiable as "waste," and not as a "manufacture" of cork. Gudewill & Bucknail v. United States, 142 Fed. 214.

Tobacco sweepings or scrap used in the manufacture of stogies and cigarettes are dutiable at 55 cents a pound, under Tariff Act 1897, par. 215, as unmanufactured tobacco, and not at 10 per cent. ad valorem under paragraph 463, as "waste not specially provided for in this act." Latimer v. United States, 32 Sup. Ct. 242, 223 U. S. 501, 56 L. Ed. 526.

As to combings of loose or dead hair obtained in preparing rabbit or hare skins, which are commercially known as "hares' combings" or "fur waste," and which, after further treatment, are used as an adulterant in cheap hats, held, that they are dutiable as waste under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 463, and not as furs prepared for hatters' use under paragraph 426, nor free of duty as "furs, undressed," under section 2, Free List, par. 561. United States v. Hatters' Fur Exchange, 153 Fed. 595, 596.

The term "waste," as used in paragraphs 361, 362, Tariff Act of 1897, is generally applied to threads or yarn, either before they have been woven into a fabric, or to such threads or yarn reduced by the disintegration of the refuse fabric. Portions of woolen material clipped from the pieces in the course of making up garments, commercially designated by dealers in waste and hosiery manufactures as "clippings" or "clips," and included by them within the designation "waste" as a generic term, are not dutiable under paragraph 362 as "waste not specially provided for," but are dutiable under paragraph 363 as woolen rags. United States v. Pearson & Emmott, 131 Fed. 571, 572; Id., 137 Fed. 1021, 70 C. C. A. 306.

So-called granito or terrazo, produced by crushing the waste of marble quarries and sifting or sorting it into various sizes, is subject to classification as an unenumerated manufactured article, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 6, rather than as "waste," under section 1, Schedule N, par. 463, or as minerals "crude," under section 2, Free List, par. 614. United States v. Graser-Rothe, 164 Fed. 205.

Wood flour, produced by grinding small pieces of wood obtained by breaking or cutting waste wood, etc., is dutiable as a manufacture of wood under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule D, par. 208, and not as "waste" under Schedule N, par. 463. Nairn Linoleum Co. v. United States, 151 Fed. 955, 958.

Selected pieces of second-hand jute bagging, intended for patching the covering of cotton bales, are not "bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and similar fabrics, suitable for covering cotton," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule J, par. 344, 30 Stat. 181, nor "rags," under section 2, Free List, par. 648, 30 Stat. 201, but are dutiable as "waste" under section 1, Schedule N, par. 463, 30 Stat. 194. United States v. Davies, 160 Fed. 456, 457, 87 C. C. A. 672.

"Waste," as used in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 122, fixing the duty on " * * * wrought and scrap iron and scrap steel $4 per ton, but nothing shall be deemed scrap iron or scrap steel except waste or refuse iron or steel, fit only to be manufactured," is not limited to the pieces of material that fall off in the process of manufacturing, but includes old worn out goods, as old iron chains fit only for remanufacture. There can be no waste in the use of such articles as pig iron, which is simply thrown into a furnace and melted, or spiegeleisen, ferro-manganese, and ferro-silicon, which are treated in a like manner in the production of steel for the purpose of hardening it. G. W. Sheldon & Co. v. United States, 152 Fed. 318-320 (citing and adopting In re Salomon, 47 Fed. 711; Train v. U. S., 113 Fed. 1020, 51 C. C. A. 623; Dwight v. Merritt, 11 Sup. Ct. 768, 769, 140 U. S. 213, 218, 35 L. Ed. 450; Robertson v. Edelhoff, 10 Sup. Ct. 186, 132 U. S. 614, 33 L. Ed. 477; Ingersoll v. Magone, 53 Fed. 1008, 4 C. C. A. 150).

Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 122, which provides for "scrap iron," and defines it as "waste or refuse iron * * * fit only to be remanufactured," refers not only to pieces or scraps thrown off or discarded in the course of manufacture, but to completed articles worn out by use, such as old chains, in small pieces, fit only for remanufacture. G. W. Sheldon & Co. v. United States, 159 Fed. 105, 107, 86 C. C. A. 295 (citing Schlesinger v. Beard, 7 Sup. Ct. 546, 120 U. S. 264, 30 L. Ed. 656).

WASTE (Writ Of)

"The old 'writ of waste' called upon the tenant to appear and show why he had committed waste and destruction in the place named, to the deherison of the plaintiff." Abernethy v. Orton, 71 Pac. 327, 329, 42 Or. 437, 95 Am. St. Rep. 774 (quoting with approval from Wade v. Malloy [N. Y.] 16 Hun, 226, which cites 3 Bl. Comm. 228).

WASTE AND INJURY

The words "waste and injury" to property, authorizing relief in equity, include only illegal, wrongful, or dishonest illegal action. Trumbull v. Palmer, 93 N. Y. Supp. 349, 351, 104 App. Div. 51.

WASTE WATER

Sess. Laws 1889, p. 215, § 1, providing that all ditches constructed to utilize the waste, seepage, or spring waters of the state shall be governed by the same laws relating to priority of right to water in ditches constructed for the purpose of utilizing the water of running streams, if valid, is applicable only to appropriations of "waste, seepage, and spring waters" before they reach a natural stream, whether by natural surface flow or percolation, or by being artificially turned into the same; and the waters, after reaching a natural stream, become, in the absence of an intention by the owner to reclaim them, a part of the stream, and inure to the benefit of the appropriators of its waters. La Jara Creamery & Live Stock Ass'n v. Hansen, 83 Pac. 644, 645, 35 Colo. 105.

Defendant, while it was experimenting to determine whether to operate its zinc mine on land adjoining plaintiffs', and before it had erected a mill at the mine, contracted with plaintiffs for the privilege of "pumping and running waste water from their mine" across plaintiffs' land; it not being certain then whether defendant would acquire the right to operate the mine. Held that, even if ambiguous, the term "waste water from their mine" did not include water charged with refuse matter, called "sludge," discharged from a concentrating mill at the mine, as well as water pumped from the mine, not containing sludge. Pederty v. Wisconsin Zinc Co., 134 N. W. 356, 358, 148 Wis. 245.

WASTING BY ESCAPE

The term "wasting by escape," in Act 1891-93, pp. 60, 61, providing for the confinement of gas in wells until its utilization, to prevent the product wasting by escape, and providing for the plugging of abandoned wells, etc., is very broad and applies equally whether the escape is at the well or at the end of a pipe leading from the well, as the purpose of the act is to prevent the waste of gas, and where one maliciously and willfully wastes and intends to waste the gas from his well, it is immaterial whether he suffers the gas to escape at the well or pipes it off to another place, and there allows it to escape. An owner must confine the gas, irrespective of the point of its escape. Commonwealth v. Trent, 77 S. W. 390, 392, 117 Ky. 34, 4 Ann. Cas. 209.

WATCH MOVEMENTS

Incomplete watch movements, adjusted so as to run, the only part lacking being the dial, or the dial, the various hands, and the minute wheel, are dutiable as "watch movements," not as parts of watches. Hipp Didisheim & Bro. v. United States, 123 Fed. 998, 999.

So-called time detectors, used for registering the movements of watchmen, which have a clock mechanism or time indicator, are dutiable under Tariff Act 1897 as "watch movements, whether imported in cases or not." Hensel, Bruckmann & Lorbacher v. United States, 135 Fed. 255, 256.

WATCHER

Baker Ballot Law 1893, § 23, declares that each political party shall be allowed to appoint three electors to act as "watchers" in each voting place without expense to the county, one of whom shall be allowed to remain in the room outside the inclosed space. Held, that the watchers so provided for were not the same as overseers of election; the only additional right given to watchers not possessed by ordinary voters being the right to be in the voting room. The watchers also hold their position by virtue of appointment by the political party, while the overseers are appointed by the court. In re Parrish, 63 Atl. 460, 461, 214 Pa. 63.

WATCHMAN

As laborer, see Laborer.

The term "policeman," with respect to the power to arrest without warrant, is the legal equivalent of the term "watchman" at common law. Porter v. State, 52 S. E. 283, 285, 124 Ga. 297, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.), 730 (citing State v. Evans, 61 S. W. 590, 161 Mo. 95, 84 Am. St. Rep. 669).

"Water" is a movable, wandering thing, and must of necessity continue common by the law of nature, so that I can have only a temporary, transient, usufructuary property therein." 1 Bl. Com. 18. The state has not by statute changed the rule of the common law, so as to make the water of lakes and streams the subject-matter of commerce in the ordinary sense, nor has it authorized water diversion for other than riparian uses, saving for a limited class of purposes beneficial to the people of the state. McCarter, Atty. Gen., v. Hudson County Water Co., 65 Atl. 489, 496, 70 N. J. Eq. 695, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197, 118 Am. St. Rep. 754, 10 Ann. Cas. 116.

The words "feed" and "water," as used in a contract for shipping hogs, that the owner is to feed, water, and take care of his stock at his own expense and risk, has reference only to the ordinary sustenance such animals require in the course of transportation, and the word "water" does not relate to pouring water upon the animals in an exigency to prevent their overheating. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Adams, 42 Ill. 474, 488, 92 Am. Dec. 85.

While "water" is to be defined as a mineral, the rules of law as to its use must logically vary from those applicable to coal, ore, and the like. Water is a fluid, and mobile, "a fugitive." Erickson v. Crookston Waterworks, Power & Light Co., 111 N. W. 391, 393, 100 Minn. 481, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1250, 10 Ann. Cas. 843.

A place in a creek which flows into Sandusky Bay, the waters of which are on a level with the bay and Lake Erie and subject to rise and fall under the same influences as affect the surface of the lake, is a "water," within the meaning of Gen. Code, § 1453, authorizing the catching of carp in nets therein, when permission to do so has been obtained from the commissioners of fish and game. Jackson v. State, 32 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 181, 184.

WATER ABSORPTION TEST

As applied to bricks, the "water absorption test" is done by breaking a brick across, then immersing it in water for a stated time, such as 72 hours, and then comparing the weight of the immersed brick with the weight of the brick before immersion. City of Chicago v. Singer, 66 N. E. 874, 875, 202 Ill. 75.

WATER AND MUD

Where foreign bills of lading under which cotton was transported provided that the carrier should not be liable for injuries caused by "wet or country damage," and declarations charged that the cotton was damaged by "water and mud" prior to the termination of the inland transportation, the shipper was bound to allege, in order to state a cause of action, that such damage resulted from some concurrent negligence of the carrier or its servants, or that the damage could have been avoided by the exercise of care, etc., and that the carrier was not therefore relieved by the exception in the bill of lading. Inman & Co. v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 159 Fed. 960, 971.

WATER CONDITIONS

"Water conditions," as used in a contract whereby defendant was to furnish sufficient water for plaintiff's rice crop, but exempting him from liability should there be insufficient water, provided reasonable effort was made to procure the same, and providing that defendant should be the judge of the water conditions necessary for the crop, means nothing less than the amount of water necessary for the crop and the proper times for its application. Kelly v. Corrington (Tex.) 105 S. W. 1155, 1156.

WATER COURSE

See Natural Water Course.

See, also, Pass.

A "water course" is usually referred to as having well-defined bed and banks. Quinn v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 120 N. W. 884, 885, 23 S. D. 126, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 789.

A "water course" is a stream of water flowing in a definite channel, having a bed and sides or banks, and discharging itself into some other stream or body of water. Hutchinson v. Watson Slough Ditch Co., 101 Pac. 1059, 1063, 16 Idaho, 484, 133 Am. St. Rep. 125.

The elements of a "water course" are definite banks, and with an obvious bed or channel showing the presence of running water at times, anyway. Erwin v. Erie R. Co., 90 N. Y. Supp. 315, 317, 98 App. Div. 402.

The natural channel, with defined bed and banks, through which water is conveyed and discharged, of varying width and depth, is a "water course," though water does not flow therein continuously. Belzoni Drainage Commission v. Winn, 53 South. 778, 779, 98 Miss. 359.

A drain across plaintiff's lot did not constitute a "water course" in a legal sense, where all the water that passed through it was surface water, or was led to it through a sewer drain laid by the city. Walther v. City of Cape Girardeau, 149 S. W. 36, 38, 166 Mo. App. 467.

Civ. Code 1901, par. 859, subd. 5, requiring railroad companies to restore streams, "water courses," etc., crossed by them, requires restoration of any well-defined channel or arroyo, in which surface or flood waters flow. Kroeger v. Twin Buttes R. Co., 114 Pac. 553, 555, 13 Ariz. 348, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1229.

Where sufficient water flows from a spring to moisten the land below the mouth of the spring, it may constitute a "water course," on the theory that the law of gravitation compelled the water to take the direction it did, because of the conformation of the land; but, where there were no banks to such "water course" on the land moistened, the owner of the land could not be called a "riparian owner," within the meaning of that term. Morrison v. Officer, 87 Pac. 896, 897, 48 Or. 569.

A "water course" consists of bed, banks and water, yet the water need not flow continually; and there are many water courses which are sometimes dry. It need not be shown to flow continually, as stated above, and it may at times be dry; but they must have well-defined and substantial existence. It must flow in a definite channel, having a bed, sides, or banks, and usually discharge itself into some other stream or body of water. Sierra County v. Nevada County, 99 Pac. 371, 374, 155 Cal. 1 (quoting and adopting definition in Angell, Water Courses, §§ 3, 4).

A "water course" consists of bed, banks, and water. The right of an appropriator of the water of a stream, for the purpose of irrigation, to have the water flow in the river to the head of its ditch, is an "incorporeal hereditament," appurtenant to the ditch and coextensive with the owner's right to the ditch itself. Rickey Land & Cattle Co. v. Miller & Lux, 152 Fed. 11, 13, 14, 81 C. C. A. 207 (citing Lower Kings River Water Ditch Co. v. Kings River & F. Canal Co., 60 Cal. 408; Angell, Water Courses, § 4; Oregon Const. Co. v. Allen Ditch Co., 69 Pac. 455, 458, 41 Or. 209, 93 Am. St. Rep. 701; Wyatt v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 33 Pac. 144, 18 Colo. 298, 36 Am. St. Rep. 280; Wiley v. Decker, 73 Pac. 210, 225, 11 Wyo. 496, 100 Am. St. Rep. 939; Smith v. Denniff, 60 Pac. 398, 24 Mont. 20, 81 Am. St. Rep. 408; Conant v. Deep Creek & Curlew Val. Irr. Co., 66 Pac. 188, 23 Utah, 627, 90 Am. St. Rep. 721; Simmons v. Winters, 21 Or. 35, 27 Pac. 7, 28 Am. St. Rep. 571; Hindman v. Rizer, 21 Or. 112, 27 Pac. 13; Bear Lake & River Waterworks & Irrigation Co. v. Ogden City, 33 Pac. 135, 8 Utah, 494; Tucker v. Jones, 8 Mont. 225, 19 Pac. 571; Sweetland v. Olsen, 27 Pac. 339, 11 Mont. 27; Cave v. Crafts, 53 Cal. 135).

"A 'water course' is defined as consisting of bed, banks, and water. It must be made to appear that the water usually flows through a regular channel, with banks or sides. The bed and banks, or the channel, is in all cases a natural object, to be sought after, not simply by application of any abstract rule, but, like other natural objects, to be sought for and found by the distinctive appearance it represents. A channel is, however, necessary to the constitution of a water course, whether worn deep by action of the water, or following the exact depression, without any marked erosion of soil or rock, or whether distinguished by difference of vegetation, or otherwise rendered perceptible." State v. Muncie Pulp Co., 104 S. W. 437, 443, 119 Tenn. 47 (quoting and adopting definition in Lux v. Haggin, 10 Pac. 770, 69 Cal. 417).

"To constitute a 'water course,' according to the ordinary signification of that term, there must be a stream usually flowing in a particular direction and in a definite channel, and it must usually discharge itself into some other stream or body of water." In Act May 31, 1887, as amended, forbidding during a certain part of the year catching fish with a seine "in or upon any of the rivers, creeks, streams, ponds, lakes, sloughs, bayous, or other water courses" of the state, the phrase "other water courses" was used, not by way of restricting anything which had already been mentioned, but to include any other water course of the same general nature as those specified, which was not sufficiently described in the specifications already made. People v. Bridges, 31 N. E. 115, 116, 142 Ill. 30, 16 L. R. A. 684.

In a legal sense a "water course" is a channel cut through the turf by the erosion of running water, with well-defined banks and bottom, and through which water flows, and has flowed immemorially, not necessarily all the time, but ordinarily, and permanently for substantial periods of each year. Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 5153, authorizing railroads to construct roads across any stream of water, water course, etc., a drainage ditch fed by no spring or water course, and used and constructed solely for expediting surface drainage, is not a water course, which the railroad is obliged to preserve and restore to its former state. New Jersey, I. & I. R. Co. v. Tutt, 80 N. E. 420, 422, 168 Ind. 205.

Broadening of stream

Where a stream flows in a continuous current, it is a "water course," though the water spreads over a large area, without apparent banks. Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal & Irrigation Co., 99 Pac. 502, 509, 155 Cal. 59, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391.

A slough having well-defined banks, leading from a river to a creek, through which water flows, is a "water course," though at some points the channel spreads out and the water is quite shallow. Cederburg v. Dutra, 86 Pac. 838, 840, 3 Cal. App. 572.

"A stream does not cease to be a 'water course,' and become mere surface water, because at a certain point it spreads over a level meadow several rods in width, and flows for a distance without defined banks before flowing again in a definite channel." Harrington v. Demaris, 77 Pac. 603, 606, 46 Or. 111, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 756 (citing Gould, Waters [3d Ed.] § 264).

A "water course," in the legal sense of the term, does not necessarily consist merely of the stream as it flows within the banks which form the channel in ordinary states of water. When, in time of ordinary high water, the stream, extending beyond its banks is accustomed to flow down over the adjacent lowlands in a broader, but still definable, stream, it has still the character of a water course, and the law relating to water courses is applicable, rather than that relating to mere surface water. Town of Jefferson v. Hicks (Okla.) 102 Pac. 79, 82, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 214 (quoting and adopting definition in Byrne v. Minneapolis & St. L. Ry. Co., 36 N. W. 339, 38 Minn. 212, 8 Am. St. Rep. 668).

Ditch

The term "water course," used in connection with "river" in State Boards and Commissions Law (Consol. Laws, c. 54) §§ 10, 11, authorizing proceedings for the improvement of rivers and water courses, means a living stream with defined banks and channel, fed from other and more permanent sources than mere surface water, though not necessarily running all the time, and does not include artificial drainage ditches. People ex rel. Bingham v. State Water Supply Commission, 126 N. Y. Supp. 637, 641, 70 Misc. Rep. 265.

Drain synonymous

Under Rev. St. 1906, c. 1, tit. 6, providing that the words "water course," as used in the county ditch law, are synonymous with the word "drain," county commissioners are without authority to convert a living stream of water into a ditch by proceedings for the locating and constructing of a ditch. Greene County Com'rs v. Harbline, 78 N. E. 521, 522, 74 Ohio St. 318.

Ravine or hollow

A gulch through which water flows from about March 1st until August, being derived from melting snows and springs, constitutes a "water course," waters of which are subject to appropriation. Borman v. Blackmon, 118 Pac. 848, 849, 60 Or. 304.

A swale or depression, through or over which surface water runs according to the laws of nature, is a "water course," even though it has no well-defined banks. Parizek v. Hinek, 123 N. W. 180, 181, 144 Iowa, 563 (citing Hull v. Harker, 106 N. W. 629, 130 Iowa, 190).

In its more restrictive sense, a "water course" is such a waterway as gives rise to riparian rights in the flow of the water, and excludes a depression or natural drain which merely carries water in rainy seasons. St. Louis Merchants' Bridge Terminal Ry. Ass'n v. Schultz, 80 N. E. 879, 882, 226 Ill. 409.

To constitute a "water course," there must be a channel, a bed to the stream, and not merely low land, or a depression in the prairie, over which water flows. It matters not what the width or depth may be. A water course implies a distinct channel, a way cut and kept open by running water, a passage whose appearance, different from that of the adjacent land, discloses to every eye on a mere casual glance the bed of a constant or frequent stream." Rait v. Furrow, 85 Pac. 934, 935, 74 Kan. 101, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 157, 10 Ann. Cas. 1044 (quoting and adopting the definition in Gibbs v. Williams, 25 Kan. 214, 37 Am. Rep. 241).

An instruction that a "water course" is a stream usually flowing in a particular direction, in a definite channel, and discharged into some other stream or body of water, and that the term does not include surface water conveyed from a higher to a lower level for limited periods during the melting of snow, or during or soon after the fall of rain, through hollows or ravines which at other times were dry, is correct. McHenry v. City of Parkersburg, 66 S. E. 750, 753, 68 W. Va. 533, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860 (citing 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 468, 1219; Neal v. Ohio River R. Co., 34 S. E. 914, 47 W. Va. 316).

To constitute a "water course," there must be a stream usually flowing in a particular direction, though it need not flow continually. It must flow in a definite channel, having a bed, sides, or banks, and usually discharges itself into some other stream or body of water. It must be something more than a mere surface drainage over the entire face of a tract of land, occasioned by unusual freshets or other extraordinary causes. It does not include the water flowing into the hollows or ravines in land, which is mere surface water. In an action for damages caused by the obstruction of a slough, a petition that did not allege that the slough was a natural water course, or describe it as such, but described it as a swale or slough which received overflow water from a creek, was insufficient to raise an issue as to whether or not the slough was an actual water course, or to support recovery on the theory that it was. Webb v. Carter, 98 S. W. 776, 777, 121 Mo. App. 147 (quoting and adopting the definition in Hoyt v. City of Hudson, 27 Wis. 661, 9 Am. Rep. 473).

Surface waters

Whenever surface water flows in one continuous, well-marked channel, it becomes a "water course," if this regularly recurs each season. Borman v. Blackmon, 118 Pac. 848, 850, 60 Or. 304.

Under the law of Iowa as established by decision, which will be followed by the federal courts in that state in matters relating to public drains, if surface water in fact uniformly flows off over a given course, having reasonable limits as to width, the line of its flow constitutes a "water course." Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Board of Sup'rs of Appanoose County, Iowa, 182 Fed. 291, 294, 104 C. C. A. 573, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1117.

A "water course," within the rule as to obstruction is a living stream of water with well-defined banks, and a channel and bed, though the stream need not run continuously, but it must be fed from other and more permanent sources than mere surface water resulting from rain or snow discharged from a higher to a lower level and find exit through its channel. Scott v. Missouri Southern R. Co., 139 S. W. 259, 261, 158 Mo. App. 625.

A "water course" is a stream of water flowing in a definite channel, having a bed and sides or banks, and discharging itself into some other stream or body of water. The flow of water need not be constant, but must be more than mere surface drainage occasioned by extraordinary causes; there must be substantial indications of the existence of a stream, which is ordinarily a moving body of water. Hutchinson v. Watson Slough Ditch Co., 101 Pac. 1059, 1061, 16 Idaho, 484, 133 Am. St. Rep. 125.

Where the natural conformation of the surrounding country necessarily collects therein so large a body of water, after heavy rain or the melting of large bodies of snow, as to require an outlet to some common reservoir, and where such water is regularly discharged through a well-defined channel which the force of the water has made for itself, and which is the accustomed channel through which it flows or has ever flowed, it constitutes a "water course" or "waterway." Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Groves, 93 Pac. 755, 761, 20 Okl. 101, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 802.

WATER COURSE DIVIDING COUNTIES

The Little river above the junction with the Withlacoochee river, though the entire stream lies in Brooks county, is a "water course dividing two counties," within Pol. Code 1895, §§ 367, 371, providing for county line bridges. Brooks County v. Carrington, 66 S. E. 625, 626, 7 Ga. App. 225.

WATER CRAFT

A houseboat, drawn upon the beach, may properly be called a "water craft," and need not be called a dwelling house or other building, in describing it in an indictment. Nagel v. People, 82 N. E. 315, 318, 229 Ill. 598.

WATER DEED

Contracts entered into by several parties for the sale of water rights, uniform in their provisions, printed blanks being used, are spoken of as "water deeds." Creer v. Ban- croft Land & Irrigation Co., 90 Pac. 228, 229, 13 Idaho, 407.

WATER FURNISHED FOR MANUFACTURING PURPOSES

In an action by a brewery to recover an excess paid for water from the rate required by ordinance for "water furnished for purely manufacturing purposes," it was not necessary, in order that the water be deemed to be used "purely for manufacturing purposes," that all of it went into the composition of beer if it was used in the business of making beer, and a finding of the trial court, if based on such assumption, was reversible error. American Brewing Co. v. City of St. Louis, 108 S. W. 1, 2, 209 Mo. 600.

WATER MARK

See High-Water Mark.

WATER MILL

Under the Flowage Act (Pub. St. 1901, c. 142) § 12, authorizing a corporation to erect and maintain a "water mill" and dam on non-navigable streams, the erection and maintenance of a dam to develop water power to operate intricate machinery for producing electricity to be distributed to the public is operating a "water mill" within the terms of the statute. McMillan v. Noyes, 72 Atl. 759, 761, 75 N. H. 258.

WATER PERMIT

Under the provisions of Act March 11, 1903 (Laws 1903, § 223), the "water permit," when granted as therein provided for, gives the applicant an inchoate right, which will ripen into a legal and complete appropriation only upon the completion of the works and the application of the water to a beneficial use. The right given by such permit may ripen into a complete appropriation, or may be defeated by the failure of the holder to comply with the requirements of the statute. The permit, therefore, is not an appropriation of the public waters of the state, but is the consent of the state given in the manner provided by law to construct and acquire real property. Speer v. Stephenson, 102 Pac. 365, 366, 16 Idaho, 707.

WATER PERMITTING

A stipulation as to "water permitting," in a contract requiring a party to saw logs as far as water would permit, refers to natural conditions, such as drought and the like, bearing upon the supply of water in the ditch and wasteways, and does not cover the fortuitous breaking of his dam. Fletcher v. Prestwood, 38 South. 847, 848, 143 Ala. 174 (citing Jones v. Anderson, 2 South. 911, 82 Ala. 302).

WATER RIGHT

As personal property, see Personal Property.

As real estate, see Real Property.

As right and franchise, see Right and Franchise.

A "water right" is a "freehold," within the statute creating the Court of Appeals and requiring it to retransfer to the Supreme Court cases involving a freehold. Monte Vista Canal Co. v. Centennial Irrigating Ditch Co., 123 Pac. 831, 833, 22 Colo. App. 364.

A "water right" is the legal right to the use of any unappropriated water of any natural stream, water course, or source of supply, and exists only in contemplation of law, and is for purposes of taxation "personal property," within Const. art. 12, § 17, and Pol. Code 1895, §§ 16, 3680, defining "property" as including money, franchises, and other things capable of private ownership, and defining "real estate" as including the possession or ownership of land, mines, minerals, and quarries, and "improvements" as including all buildings, structures, etc., and "personal property" as including everything which is the subject of ownership, not included within real estate or improvements, so that under section 3716, providing that the personal property and franchises of water companies must be assessed in the district where the principal works are located, a water company owning a water right without the limits of a school district and conveying water by pipe lines into the district, where it is distributed to the inhabitants thereof, is properly assessed in the district; that being the place of business and principal works of the company. Helena Waterworks Co. v. Settles, 95 Pac. 838, 839, 37 Mont. 237.

Complainant's ancestors claimed title to the water power of a certain pond, but they and defendant (an adjoining owner of land) disputed as to their relative rights. Defendant afterwards filed a bill to enjoin complainant's ancestors from interfering with his rights in the pond, which resulted in the purchase of defendant's land and his rights in the pond, under an agreement enabling complainant's ancestors to use the water rights agreed to be granted, and they gave back their mortgage on the land and rights so granted. The deeds remained unquestioned for 20 years, when complainant sued to exclude the water rights from the mortgage on the ground of mutual mistake, alleging that defendant mortgagee never had title thereto. Held, that the term "water rights" was undoubtedly meant to convey more than riparian rights, and covered rights in the water power which might exist or be claimed apart from any title in the land covered by the dam or pond, and that, as the mortgagee claimed title to such rights at the time the mortgage was executed, complainant was not entitled to relief. Crauston Print Works v. Dyer, 32 Atl. 922, 923, 924, 19 R. I. 208.

WATER SIDE

Where a proprietary grant of shore land described it as bounded on the east by the "water side," the grant was not subject to the doctrine that sovereign grants should be strictly construed in so far as they affect public rights, and should be held to pass to the grantee the private title to the land to low-water mark, subject to the jus publicum in the fore shore. Bardes v. Herman, 114 N. Y. Supp. 1098, 1101, 62 Misc. Rep. 428.

WATER-TIGHT

A contract to make a cellar "water-tight" is not carried out where, after the work is completed, water leaks in, but the contractor puts under the floor an automatic instrument which, while at work, keeps the cellar dry. MacKnight Flintic Stone Co. v. City of New York, 43 N. Y. Supp. 139, 141, 13 App. Div. 231.

WATER-TUBE BOILER

The term "water-tube boiler," in a patent reciting that the patentee has invented new and useful improvements in sectional steam boilers, of which the following is a specification: "The herein described water-tube boiler is especially adapted to marine service"—is used synonymously with sectional steam boiler, because such use was common, and because the term "sectional steam boiler," used in the specification, relates to a class of boilers no less comprehensive than the class referred to by the term "water-tube boiler." Babcock & Wilcox Co. v. North American Dredging Co., 151 Fed. 265, 267.

WATER WELL

"Water wells," in oil fields, are those in which the inpour of salt water requires constant pumping to recover oil, and the continuous services of an attendant known as a "pumper." Glendenning v. Superior Oil Co., 70 N. E. 976, 977, 162 Ind. 642.

WATERED, FED, AND CARED FOR

A freight contract for the shipment of hogs, providing that the animals are to be "watered, fed, and cared for" by the shipper or his agent in charge, means no more than that the shipper shall see that the stock is furnished with such feed and water as is required for consumption, and has no connection with the general treatment of stock essential to safe transportation; and hence does not impose on the shipper the duty of showering the hogs to keep down their temperature. Peck v. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co., 115 N. W. 1113, 1114, 138 Iowa, 187, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 883, 128 Am. St. Rep. 185.

WATERED STOCK

Corporate stock is "watered" when issued by the company for property at an overvaluation, or where the company does not receive money or money's worth therefor. Goodnow v. American Writing Paper Co., 66 Atl. 607, 72 N. J. Eq. 645.

If an investment of $100,000 in a franchise-protected business authorized in the opinion of the promoters, the issue of $200,000 worth of stock, and such stock for a number of years maintains itself at par, paying satisfactory dividends, it would be obviously fair to assert that in the opinion of the shareholders the franchise is worth $100,000, assuming no appreciation of tangible assets; yet it will always be true that, unless the whole net return, compared with the value of tangibles, is above a satisfactory return on tangible investment alone, the addition of stock issued for franchise will be regarded as "water," and detract from the value of the entire issue. Consolidated Gas Co. v. New York, 157 Fed. 849, 878.

WATERS OF THE STATE

In Pen. Code, § 636, providing that every person who shall set any net for catching fish in waters of the state shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, the words "waters of the state" refer to the waters coming within the regulating power of the state concerning the fish therein. People v. Miles, 77 Pac. 666, 669, 143 Cal. 636.

Defendant took game fish from an inland unnavigable lake and shipped the same from the state. His grantors owned the fee to the lands in part bounding the lake prior to the passage of any law regulating the taking of any fish from the waters of the state. The lands at the time he acquired them were chiefly valuable for the fishing adjacent thereto, and they continued to be chiefly valuable for such purpose. Held, that he violated Kirby's Dig. § 3620, as amended, making it unlawful to export from the state game fish; and also Laws 1907, p. 912, prohibiting fishing in the waters of the state by means of any net, in view of Act March 17, 1885, § 2, defining the term "waters of the state" as all streams, lakes, etc., wholly or in part within the state. Fritz v. State, 115 S. W. 385, 386, 88 Ark. 571.

WATERS OF THE UNITED STATES

See Navigable Water of the United States.

A fleet in Manila bay, about six weeks after the treaty with Spain by which the Philippine Islands were acquired by the United States, were not in the "waters of the United States." United States v. Smith, 25 Sup. Ct. 489, 491, 197 U. S. 386, 49 L. Ed. 801.

WATERPROOF CLOTH

Woolen or worsted fabrics known as "cravenette cloths," which have been subjected to a process to render them nonabsorbent, are dutiable under Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, § 1, Schedule J, par. 369, as "waterproof cloth." Brown & Eadie v. United States, 126 Fed. 446.

The titles of the various schedules in tariff acts are not intended to be perfectly accurate, but furnish general information only of the articles enumerated in the paragraphs therein; and the principle of ejusdem generis should not be applied to exclude waterproof woolen cloth from the provision for "waterproof cloth" in paragraph 369, Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, § 1, Schedule J, because the subject of that schedule is flax, hemp, and jute. Certain woolen goods known as "cravenette cloths," which have been subjected to a process intended to make them rain-repellent, which are chiefly used for outer garments to be worn in rainy weather, and which, for all ordinary purposes, are waterproof, are dutiable as "waterproof cloth," under paragraph 369, and not under paragraphs 392 and 395. United States v. Brown & Eadie, 136 Fed. 550, 551, 69 C. C. A. 260.

WATERWAY

Where the natural conformation of the surrounding country necessarily collects therein so large a body of water, after heavy rain or the melting of large bodies of snow, as to require an outlet to some common reservoir, and where such water is regularly discharged through a well-defined channel, which the force of the water has made for itself, and which is the accustomed channel through which it flows or has ever flowed, it constitutes a "water course" or "waterway." Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Groves,

One who obtained from a city a franchise authorizing him to sink an artesian well to supply water to the public therefrom for pay, through mains and pipes which he was authorized to lay over certain streets in a particular part of the city, was conducting a system of "waterworks," within Code 1906, § 3886, imposing an annual privilege tax on waterworks in cities; the fact that the water supply is an artesian well not making the business taxable as an artesian well, instead of a waterworks, where the main purpose of the well is to conduct a waterworks business, and is not merely incidental to its use by the owner. Randall v. Smith, 51 South. 917, 918, 96 Miss. 647.

WATERWORKS AND ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANT

The phrase "a waterworks and electric light plant," in an ordinance providing for an election to determine the advisability of issuing bonds for the purpose of erecting a waterworks and electric light plant, relates to but one plant on one site, to be conducted by one management, so that the ordinance is not defective as submitting two propositions in such a manner that the voters cannot vote for one. State ex rel. City of Chillicothe v. Wilder, 98 S. W. 465, 466, 200 Mo. 97.

The unit of power, called the "watt," equals 10,000,000 units of power in the C. G. S. system, or one ampere times one volt. One horse power is 746 watts, or three-fourths of a kilowatt. Peoria Waterworks Co. v. Peoria Ry. Co., 181 Fed. 990, 1001.

WAX

Carnauba wax substitute, which is, compounded of carnauba wax (vegetable wax), and paraffin (mineral wax), and which is to all appearance a waxy substance used for the same purpose as other waxes, is covered by the provision for "wax, vegetable or mineral," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 695. United States v. Charles Morningstar & Co., 168 Fed. 541, 542, 94 C. C. A. 123.

WAY

See By Way of; County Ways; Established Road or Way; Passageway; Private Way; Public Way; Right of Way; Sluiceway; Traveling Way; Under Way; Waterway.

Any way dispose of, see Any.

Any way mentioned, see Any.

See also, Avenue.

A "way" is an incorporeal hereditament consisting of the right of passing over another's ground, and may arise from grant, prescription, or necessity, and is either in gross, attached to the person using it, or appurtenant, annexed to and passing with a conveyance of the estate, but it is never presumed to be in gross when it can be fairly construed to be appurtenant. Lucas v. Rhodes, 94 N. E. 914, 917, 48 Ind. App. 211.

"A 'way' ex vi termini imports a right of passing in a particular line." An easement of private way over land must have a particular definite line. Crosier v. Brown, 66 S. E. 326, 327, 66 W. Va. 273, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174 (citing Washb. Easem. 160; 3 Kent, Comm. 419).

"The word 'passageway' cannot be any broader in its signification than 'way' or 'highway,' and can have essentially no different meaning." Hence the reservation of the privilege of a passway, reading "passway" as "passageway," was merely the reservation of a way or right of passage over the ground. Chandler v. Goodridge, 23 Me. 78, 82.

A "way" is a right, the enjoyment of which requires no exclusive possession of the locus in quo by the owner. It is the right of going over another man's ground. A reservation of "the right of passway near the original road through said land for a passway," while not void for uncertainty, reserves no specific land, but only a right to pass over a way to be selected "near" the original road. Bunch v. Wheeler, 109 S. W. 654, 655, 210 Mo. 622.

A "way" imports a right of passing in a particular line, and not everywhere, over the land upon which the right may be claimed, and this does not mean that a person using the right of way may not deviate at all from the traveled road or track, to the extent, at least, that this may become necessary in a reasonable use of the right of way; but it does mean that the claimant may not abandon one track or right of way and adopt another, and where defendant, before acquiring a right of way over plaintiff's land by prescription, made a material deviation from the previously traveled way to avoid a washout on the old way, such deviation broke the continuity of the use required by law to establish a prescriptive right. Lund v. Wilcox, 97 Pac. 33, 35, 34 Utah, 205.

Rev. Laws, c. 111, § 188, provides that the bell of an engine shall be rung or its whistle blown where the railroad crosses on the same level any highway, townway, or traveled place at which a signboard is required to be maintained by sections 190 and 191. Section 190 requires a signboard to be maintained at any highway or townway where a railroad crosses at the same level. Held that, a "way" being a highway within the meaning of Rev. Laws, c. 111, §§ 188, 190, the failure to ring the bell or sound the whistle at a crossing thereon was of itself evidence of negligence. Giacomo v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 81 N. E. 899, 900, 196 Mass. 192.

Road distinguished

Private road distinguished, see Private Road.

The terms "public highway" and "public road" are not synonymous. The word "road" refers to the piece or strip of land taken. "Way," in legal parlance, merely denotes an easement, and that the land has been subjected to servitude. "Highway" is also a generic term, which includes other uses besides the right of ordinary locomotion over land which has been subjected to public use. Johnson v. State, 58 S. E. 265, 267, 1 Ga. App. 195.

In the common acceptance of the term, roads or "ways" are considered to be either public or private; but in the legal acceptance a way may be a road that is neither a public highway nor a private road or way under the statute, and an indictment under Pen. Code, § 524, for malicious injury to a private way is bad unless it alleges the facts showing that it was laid out by authority of law. Territory v. Richardson, 76 Pac. 456, 457, 8 Ariz. 336.

WAY OF NECESSITY

See, also, Common of Ways Implied.

A "way by necessity" arises only between grantor and grantee; none arising where there is no privity of title. Roper Lumber Co. v. Richmond Cedar Works, 73 S. E. 902, 904, 158 N. C. 161.

A "right of way from necessity" must be in fact what the term naturally imports, and cannot exist, except in cases of strict necessity. That the way over his land is too steep or too narrow, or that other and like difficulties exist, does not alter the case; and it is only when there is no way through his own land that a grantee can claim a right over that of his grantor. It must also appear that the grantee has no other way. No right of way over another's land exists as a way of necessity, where claimant's land is bounded by a road connecting with the county roads, though there is not easy access to that road, and no constructed track for teams connecting his land with it. Corea v. Higuera, 95 Pac. 882, 884, 153 Cal. 451, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1018 (citing Kripp v. Curtis, 11 Pac. 879, 71 Cal. 63).

A purchaser of land, excluded from the public highway except by passing over the vendor's land, takes a way over the vendor's land as a "way of necessity." Bentley v. Hampton (Ky.) 91 S. W. 266, 267.

Where land is so situated that access to it from the highway cannot be had except over other land of the grantor or lessor, the grantee or lessee is entitled to a "way of necessity" over such intervening land of the grantor or lessor. Commonwealth v. Burford, 73 Atl. 1064, 1066, 225 Pa. 93.

A right of way over a street, passing as an incident to a conveyance of a lot described with reference to a plat "as bounded on the street," is not a "way of necessity," but is an easement created by estoppel, which exists, though there are other ways, public or private, leading to the land. New England Structural Co. v. Everett Distilling Co., 75 N. E. 85, 86, 189 Mass. 145.

Where an owner of land was a stranger to the title of land owned by a lumber company, the latter was not entitled to a "private way of necessity," since a "way of necessity" can only be raised out of land granted or reserved by the grantor, but not out of the land of a stranger. Healy Lumber Co. v. Morris, 74 Pac. 681, 686, 33 Wash. 490, 63 L. R. A. 820, 99 Am. St. Rep. 964.

That there may be a "way of necessity," the relation of grantor and grantee must have existed between the parties, or persons in their lines of title; and it is not enough that the land was once part of the public domain, and hence owned by a common grantor. That defendants may have a "way of necessity" over plaintiff's land, it is necessary that there be no other way to reach their lands; and it is not enough that it is the only way by which a wagon can reach them, if a way can be constructed over defendant's lands. Bully Hill Copper Mining & Smelting Co. v. Bruson, 87 Pac. 237, 238, 4 Cal. App. 180 (citing Kripp v. Curtis, 11 Pac. 879, 71 Cal. 65).

L. S. was the owner of a tract of 198 acres of land, entirely surrounded by the lands of others, and without access to a public road. L. S. purchased a tract of 80 acres adjoining to and lying between the 198-acre tract and the public road, and made a private way through the 80 acres to the public road, placing gates or bars to admit of passage through wherever it was necessary to build fences across said way. In a suit to enforce liens against the 198 acres, the same were sold, and a conveyance thereof made by special commissioner to the purchaser. Held, there was a "way of necessity" in favor of the purchaser through the 80 acres still remaining the property of L. S. Proudfoot v. Saffie, 57 S. E. 256, 257, 62 W. Va. 51, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 482.

It is a familiar principle of law that, when one sells land surrounded by other lands of the grantor, a right of way across such other land, as a necessity, is implied from the grant. But that is because the existence of such way is necessary to the use and enjoyment of the granted estate, and hence, by operation of law, is included in the grant. But the principle does not control when there exists over the lands of the grantee, or otherwise, an open and convenient way of access to the granted estate. Such additional way of ingress and egress, while perhaps a convenience which might enhance the value of the land, cannot be in any proper legal sense classed as a "way of necessity." Wills v. Reed, 38 South. 793, 795, 86 Miss. 446.

The right to a "way of necessity" is based upon the theory of an implied grant; the way being necessary to the use and enjoyment of the estate granted, and for the purpose of enabling one to use and enjoy one's own lands, and not to use or enjoy the lands of another. It is an incorporeal right appurtenant to the estate granted, and not a personal right or one incident to personal property. The fact that a person has more cattle than can be supported on his own lands, and that for many years he has engaged in stock raising and used the public range, does not any more entitle him to ways of necessity over surrounding lands than any other cattle owner would be, whether he owns real estate or not, in order that his cattle might pasture upon the public domain, or than would be a resident of a town, owning a cow, that the same might reach some particular section of public land, though it could not be reached in any other way. McIlquham v. Anthony Wilkinson Live Stock Co., 104 Pac. 20, 22, 18 Wyo. 53.

WAY OPENED AND DEDICATED TO PUBLIC USE

A road laid out by park commissioners partly across private land is not a "way opened and dedicated to public use," within Rev. Laws, c. 48, §§ 98, 99, making cities, etc., liable for injury caused by defects in such ways, though such road is of such appearance as to lead an ordinarily observant traveler to suppose that it was a public highway, and not a parkway. Jones v. City of Boston, 87 N. E. 589, 590, 201 Mass. 267.

WAYBILL

In a prosecution for the theft of whisky, testimony that a car was found to be short according to the waybill is admissible, even though the "waybill" is not shown to have been made by or to be correct within the knowledge of the witness; for it is a document containing a description of and shipping directions for goods transported by common carriers on a land route, and so is admissible in evidence itself, being in the nature of an act, rather than a declaration. Berry v. State (Ark.) 146 S. W. 139, 140.

Bill of lading distinguished

"Waybill" is not technically synonymous with "bill of lading," though sometimes so used, but rather indicates the bill accompanying the goods. Sellers v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co., 51 S. E. 398, 400, 123 Ga. 386.

A "waybill" goes with the shipment, and shows the routing, free charges, and such matters. It is very different from a bill of lading, which in many ways represents the property, its contents or contract or affreightment, and largely fixes the representative rights of carrier, shipper, and consignee. Berry Coal & Coke Co. v. Chicago, P. & St. L. Ry. Co., 92 S. W. 714, 717, 116 Mo. App. 214.

WAYLEAVE

In 12 Ency. of Laws of England, 575, it is said: "The term 'wayleave' means a right of way. * * * In considering the extent to which a wayleave may be used, the very object of the grant or reservation to which it is ancillary must be borne in mind, and this may involve a user of a different kind from that which was actually in contemplation at the time of the grant or reservation." Jones & Co. v. Venable, 47 S. E. 549, 551, 120 Ga. 1, 1 Ann. Cas. 185.

WAYS, WORKS, MACHINERY, OR PLANT

Where a construction company was blasting a trench in an excavation, the rock which was being blasted out was not, under the Employers' Liability Act, a "way" provided by the master for his servants. McGowan v. New York Contracting Co., Pennsylvania Terminal, 127 N. Y. Supp. 532, 534, 143 App. Div. 1.

A wall in course of construction is not "works," "ways," nor "means," within the Employers' Liability Act, making an employer liable for injuries caused by defective works, ways, or means. Ripp v. Fuchs, 113 N. Y. Supp. 361, 364, 129 App. Div. 321.

A signal rope in a mine extending from the hoisting engine on top into the mine, used to signal the engineer, is part of the "ways, works, machinery, or plant." New Connells-ville Coal & Coke Co. v. Kilgore, 50 South. 205, 209, 162 Ala. 642.

A pole, with a "T" end to aid employes in lifting quarters of beef suspended from an overhead track by a wheel and hook, is not "ways, works, machinery, or plant," within Employers' Liability Act. Davis v. Plant, 138 N. Y. Supp. 145, 146.

Where a servant was injured by the fall of certain bales of cotton which were alleged to have been negligently piled, such bales did not constitute a part of the master's "ways, works, or machinery," within the Employers' Liability Act. Cahill v. Boston & M. R. R., 76 N. E. 911, 912, 190 Mass. 421 (citing Lynch v. Allyn, 35 N. E. 550, 160 Mass. 248, 252).

Whether a crosspiece nailed across lumber on a flat car and from the standards on one side to those on the other, for the purpose of staying the lumber, was a "way or appliance," within the statute (Revisal 1905, § 2646), which defendant was bound to inspect and see that it was properly nailed, was on the evidence for the jury. Wallace v. Seaboard Air L. R. Co., 54 S. E. 399, 402, 403, 141 N. C. 646, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 384.

The ladder having been used for from one to two weeks by defendant's employes in passing from the ground to the dredge, it could have been properly found to be a part of defendant's "ways" within Labor Law, § 200, providing that the employer should be liable for an injury caused to an employé by reason of any defect in the "ways" connected with the business of the employer which arose from or which had not been remedied owing to the employer's negligence, etc. Cooney v. Central Dredging Co., 135 N. Y. Supp. 472, 473, 151 App. Div. 345.

While the fellow-servant law, giving a right of action to an employé injured by reason of defective machinery, ways, or appliances, extends to logging railroads, the term "ways" refers rather to roadways and material objects, which it is the duty of the employer to provide, than to methods of work. Hamilton v. Hines Bros. Lumber Co., 72 S. E. 588, 589, 156 N. C. 519.

An unguarded rip saw is a defect in the condition of the "ways, works, and machinery," within the provisions of the Employers' Liability Act, giving a servant a right of action for injuries received because of such defect. Proctor v. Rockville Centre Milling & Construction Co., 99 N. E. 81, 205 N. Y. 508.

Under St. 1887, p. 899, c. 270, § 1, making employers liable for injuries to employes caused by any defect in the "ways, works, or machinery," an employer is not liable for injuries caused by the falling of a casting which an employé was preparing to attach to an elevator gate, since the appliance did not become a part of the "ways, works, or machinery," until it was attached. Nye v. Dutton, 73 N. E. 654, 655, 187 Mass. 549.

Mule holes in mines made to prevent mules from straying and being a source of danger to employes on mine cars are part of the "works" of mine owners, and failure to provide them with hitching posts to keep the mules therein is a "defect in the works," within Act June 10, 1907, which renders the owner liable for injuries to an employé caused thereby, though negligence of a fellow servant was shown. Toward v. Meadow Lands Coal Co., 79 Atl. 129, 131, 229 Pa. 553.

The floor of a brewery room used for washing empty beer kegs, with its sink hole, was not a "way," within the meaning of Labor Law, § 202, formerly Employers' Liability Act, § 3, providing that an employer is liable for injury to an employé caused by "any defect in the condition of the ways, works or machinery" due to negligence chargeable to the employer; "ways" having reference to passageways between the machines, vats, etc., or between different departments, and not to a proper and adequate part of the works adapted to a particular purpose. Kern v. Welz & Zerweck, 138 N. Y. Supp. 412, 415, 151 App. Div. 432.

Evidence held to show that a wall of a stone quarry was a part of the "ways or works" of the master within the meaning of Employers' Liability Act, Code 1907, § 3910, subd. 1, making the master liable for injuries to a servant as if he were not engaged in such employment in case the injury is caused by reason of any defect in the condition of the ways, works, etc., connected with or used in the business of the master. Alabama Consol. Coal & Iron Co. v. Hammond, 47 South. 248, 249, 156 Ala. 258.

The harness of a horse attached to a delivery wagon which an employé was driving was not a part of the employer's "machinery," within Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 71, cl. 1, giving an employé the same right of action against his employer for personal injuries by a defect in the ways, works, and machinery connected with the employer's business, as if he had not been an employé; "machinery" only including such machines or mechanical devices as are in use, and such appurtenances thereof as are used incidental to the use of the machine. Nor was the harness a part of the "ways" or "works." Murphy v. O'Neil, 90 N. E. 406, 407, 204 Mass. 42, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 146.

A tree projecting over a railroad track so as to injure employés riding on trains is a part of the "way" of a railroad company, within Code 1907, § 3910, subd. 1, making an employer liable to an employé as to a stranger, when the employé is injured by any defect in the condition of the ways, works, or machinery used in the employer's business; the "way" of a railroad company including such adjacent space as may be necessary for the unobstructed operation of the train, and any permanent obstruction to their operation being a part of the way. Southern Ry. Co. v. Bentley, 56 South. 249, 251, 1 Ala. App. 359.

Under the construction placed by the Supreme Court of Alabama upon the subsection of the Employers' Liability Act of that state which provides that an employer is liable for a personal injury received by his employé when the injury is caused by any defect in the "ways, works, machinery, or plant" connected with or used in the business of the employer, a wire stretched over the track of a railroad company, not sufficiently high above a freight car running on the track to permit an employé standing on the top of such car to safely pass under the wire, does not constitute a defect in the way or track, where there is nothing to indicate that the wire is not a mere movable object, temporarily placed too near the track. Hubbard v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 63 S. E. 19, 22, 131 Ga. 658, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 738.

Hatchways and hatches

In the absence of a contract governing the relation between shipowner and stevedore, hatchways and hatches are not a part of the "ways, works, and machinery" of the stevedore or owner. Crimmins v. Booth, 88 N. E. 449, 451, 202 Mass. 17, 132 Am. St. Rep. 468.

A hatch cover on the second deck of a vessel, which when in place constituted part of the gangway over which employés were required to move cargo in loading the vessel, constituted a "way," within Employers' Liability Act, which makes employers liable under certain conditions for injuries resulting from defects in the condition of ways, works, and machinery. La Compagnie Generale Transatlantique v. Maguire, 168 Fed. 34, 35, 93 C. C. A. 385.

Where plaintiff's intestate was killed by the defectiveness of the hatch of a vessel which he was unloading by virtue of his employment by defendant, a stevedore, and the hatch was not under defendant's control, it was no part of defendant's "ways, works, or machinery" within Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 71, cl. 1, authorizing a recovery by an employé for an injury resulting from a defect in the ways, works, or machinery connected with or used in his employer's business. Hyde v. Booth, 74 N. E. 337, 188 Mass. 290.

Skids

A skid used for the transferring of freight from a car to the platform of a warehouse, which rests loosely upon a wooden horse set in the street, is not a "way," within the purview of the Employers' Liability Act, giving a right of action to an employé injured by reason of any defect in the condition of the ways, works, or machinery connected with or used in the business of the employer. Heiser v. Cincinnati Abattoir Co., 98 N. E. 747, 205 N. Y. 379; Id., 126 N. Y. Supp. 265, 269, 141 App. Div. 400.

An iron skid or running board, one end of which was placed on a railroad freight-house floor against a cleat to prevent it from slipping, and the other end in a car door, for loading and unloading cars, the skid and cleats being moved about from car to car, was not a part of the "ways, works, or machinery" within Employers' Liability Act (Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600) § 1, subd. 1, making the employer liable for injuries caused by defects in the ways, works, or machinery not remedied owing to the employer's negligence, etc.; the skid and cleats being a part of the tools and appliances furnished the freight handlers. Nappa v. Erie R. Co., 88 N. E. 30, 32, 195 N. Y. 176, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 96.

Staging or scaffold

A scaffold, which collapsed while plaintiff was standing on it nailing strips to the ceiling, which was portable and consisted of planks resting upon horses, was a part of the employer's "ways, works, and machinery," within Employers' Liability Law, § 200, as amended. Keyser v. Reid-Palmer Const. Co., 138 N. Y. Supp. 452, 453, 78 Misc. Rep. 393.

Staging constructed by a third person with his own materials and for his own purposes is not a part of the "ways, works, or machinery" of another contractor, though occasionally used by his employés, within Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 71, cl. 1, and St. 1909, c. 514, § 127, cl. 1, which makes the employer liable for injuries resulting from negligence in "ways, works, or machinery." Granara v. Jacobs, 98 N. E. 1029, 1030, 212 Mass. 271.

Under the Massachusetts employer's liability act, as construed by the state courts, a staging built by a shipbuilding company under the direction of its superintendent around a vessel under construction for the carpenters and caulkers to work upon and required for that purpose is a permanent structure which constitutes "ways, works, or machinery," within the meaning of the statute, and a defect in its construction by a failure to spike one of the cross-pawls to the uprights may authorize a recovery against the company for an injury to an employé resulting therefrom. Richard T. Green Co. v. Young, 179 Fed. 493, 494, 103 C. C. A. 73.

Plaintiff, a car painter, was injured by the collapse of a loose staging erected by carpenters who had been working on a car, and which plaintiff used in his work, instead of constructing a staging for himself. The different mechanics were each required to provide their own staging. Held, that such staging, easily movable and not fastened together, was not a part of the "ways, works, and machinery" of defendant, which the employer was bound to keep in a reasonably safe condition by the employer's liability act, and that the railroad company was not responsible to plaintiff for the condition in which he found and used it. Nichols v. Boston & M. R. R., 92 N. E. 711, 713, 206 Mass. 463.

WE

As joint obligation

Where a vendor's lien note stated that "we or either of us promise to pay," etc., the liability of the four makers was joint and several, though the conveyance, a part of the consideration of which was represented by the note, stated that the cash payment was made in the proportions of one-fourth, one-third, one-sixth, and one-fourth, and that the amounts to be paid on the note were in the same proportions. Dolinski v. First Nat. Bank (Tex.) 122 S. W. 276, 278.

Personal or corporate liability implied

The word "we," when used in a note, does not always or necessarily imply a plurality of makers, and is often used to designate or describe a corporation aggregate. A promissory note, which reads, "Thirty days after date we promise to pay," etc., and signed by a corporation per its officers, is on its face the note of the company alone, and is not the note of the officers, and the latter are not personally bound thereon. Aungst v. Creque, 74 N. E. 1073, 1074, 72 Ohio St. 551 (citing Randolph, Commercial Paper, § 143; Bean v. Pioneer Mining Co., 6 Pac. 86, 66 Cal. 453, 56 Am. Rep. 106; Atkins v. Brown, 59 Me. 90; Castle v. Belfast Foundry Co., 72 Me. 167; Latham v. Houston Flour Mills, 3 S. W. 462, 68 Tex. 127; Reeve v. First Nat. Bank of Glassboro, 23 Atl. 853, 54 N. J. Law, 208, 16 L. R. A. 143, 33 Am. St. Rep. 675; Liebscher v. Kraus, 43 N. W. 166, 74 Wis. 387, 5 L. R. A. 496, 14 Am. St. Rep. 171; Miller v. Roach, 22 N. E. 634, 150 Mass. 140, 6 L. R. A. 71).

The phrase, "we, or either of us," in a note reciting, "We, or either of us, trustees" of a designated school district, promise to pay to the order of a person named, a specified sum without interest until after maturity, for money borrowed to build schoolhouse in the district, and signed by two members, followed by the word "trustees," does not show a personal liability of the makers, but the entire note shows that they do not intend to promise in their individual capacity. Warford v. Temple (Ky.) 73 S. W. 1023, 1024.

A note reciting "the G. Association," etc., "and 'we,' the undersigned, promise to pay," and signed in the corporation's name, "by P." and others, who were its officers, binds both the corporation and the officers as individuals. Nunnemacher v. Poss, 92 N. W. 375, 376, 116 Wis. 444.

WEAK

WEAK ALKALINE SOLUTION

A "weak alkaline solution," under a process for preventing stain in lumber, includes lime water. Lumber Anti-Stain Co. v. Nes-ter, 178 Fed. 927, 933, 102 C. C. A. 299.

WEALTH

The term "wealthy," as applied to an individual, is too indefinite and general to charge any one with the knowledge of the kind and amount of property possessed by him. Warner v. Warner, 85 N. E. 630, 637, 235 Ill. 448.

WEAPON

See Assault with Dangerous or Deadly Weapon; Carrying Arms or Weapons; Carrying Concealed Weapons; Concealed Weapons; Cruel and Unusual Weapon; Dangerous Weapon; Deadly Weapon.

Other deadly weapon, see Other.

Possession of, see Possession.

See, also, Arms; Club; Gun; Pistol.

Plank

"A 'weapon' is any instrument of offense; anything used, or designed to be used, in attacking an enemy, as a sword, a dagger, a club, a rifle, or a cannon; * * * any object, particular, or instrumentality that may be of service in a contest or struggle or in resisting adverse circumstances, whether for offense or defense; anything that may figuratively be classed among arms." A piece of plank is not necessarily a weapon. State v. Jones, 58 S. E. 8, 77 S. C. 385 (citing Cent. Dict.); State v. Jones, 58 S. E. 8, 77 S. C. 385.

Stick

As a rule, in the construction of statutes, where a specific term is followed by a more general one, the principle of ejusdem generis is applied; but this rule is not to be applied to the statute relating to the jurisdiction of the offense of assaults in which no "stick or other weapon" is used, since a "stick" is not technically a "weapon," though the statute manifestly intended it as such, and therefore the term "or other weapon" will not be restricted either to a weapon in a technical sense or to what might be commonly termed such, but, as employed, includes any substance or matter foreign to the person used in committing a battery. Martin v. State, 47 South. 104, 105, 156 Ala. 89.

WEAR

WEAR AND TEAR

See Natural Wear and Tear; Ordinary Wear and Tear.

WEARING APPAREL

Neither a watch and chain, nor a sword and belt, constituting a part of Masonic regalia, are exempt to a bankrupt as "wearing apparel," under the Vermont statute. In re Everleth, 129 Fed. 620.

Fan

See Fans

Garters

"Garters" are included within the term "wearing apparel" in the Tariff Act of 1890. United States v. A. Steinhardt & Bro., 141 Fed. 494, 495.

As goods and chattels

See Goods.

As household goods or furniture

See Household Furniture; Household Goods.

Jewelry, watch, etc.

The phrase "wearing apparel," as used in the declaration, made on board a vessel by a passenger in possession of a pearl chain, is a sufficient mention of the chain, within the meaning of section 2802, Rev. St., so that its seizure, while the passenger is awaiting opportunity to give information for completing the entry, is illegal. United States v. One Pearl Chain, 139 Fed. 513, 514, 71 C. C. A. 500.

Under the statute exempting "wearing apparel," a diamond ring worn on the finger is exempt from execution. First Nat. Bank v. Robinson (Tex.) 124 S. W. 177, 179.

A ring and a watch and chain, worn by decedent, may be set apart as exempt to the widow and minor children as "wearing apparel" of decedent, within the statute as to exemptions in favor of the widow and minor children. Phillips v. Phillips, 44 South. 391, 151 Ala. 527, 125 Am. St. Rep. 40, 15 Ann. Cas. 157 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 440); Chamboredon v. Fayet (Ala.) 57 South. 845, 849.

The term "all the wearing apparel," as used in 14 Del. Laws, p. 652, c. 562, § 1, relating to exemptions, includes gold watch and chain, cuff links, watch fobs, gold ring with diamond setting, scarf pins, and shirt studs. In re H. L. Evans & Co., 158 Fed. 153, 154.

Where a testatrix by her will distributes various articles of personal property and her wearing apparel among friends and gives the residue of her estate to her next of kin, the words "wearing apparel" will not be construed to include jewelry. In re Dox's Estate, 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 393, 394.

A watch was held "wearing apparel" in Mack v. Parks (Mass.) 8 Gray, 517, 520, 69 Am. Dec. 267. See, also, Bumpus v. Maynard (N. Y.) 38 Barb. 626, 631, 632.

Whether jeweled rings were exempt as "wearing apparel," under Ky. St. 1909, § 1697 (Russell's St. § 4656), depends largely on whether they were acquired and used as ornamental apparel, or as an investment of value as a matter of business. In re Leech, 171 Fed. 622, 624, 96 C. C. A. 424.

A diamond ring, worth several hundred dollars, and worn by a bankrupt himself, is not exempt under a state statute as "wearing apparel." In re Gemmell, 155 Fed. 551, 553.

Lace neckwear

Lace neckwear is included in "wearing apparel made wholly or in part of lace," as that phrase is used in the Tariff Act of 1897. Goldenberg Bros. & Co. v. United States, 130 Fed. 108, 109, 64 C. C. A. 442.

Shawls

In Maillard v. Lawrence, 16 How. 261, 14 L. Ed. 925, it was held that "wearing apparel," as used in the Tariff Act, was not a technical term, and included shawls. Greenleaf v. Goodrich, 101 U. S. 278, 285, 25 L. Ed. 845.

Wearing apparel in chief value of silk

In applying the provision in the Tariff Act of 1897 for "hats * * * trimmed, * * * composed wholly or in chief value of fur," the composition of the hats should be determined by reference to the whole hat, including the trimming so that where hats, the bodies of which are fur, are so trimmed that the silk trimming is the component of chief value in the hats, they are dutiable under the provision for "wearing apparel in chief value of silk." Leon Rheims Co. v. United States, 160 Fed. 925, 926, 88 C. C. A. 107.

WEATHER

See Stress of Weather.

WEATHER WORKING DAY

Under a charter party for carriage of a cargo for delivery at Savannah, providing that the vessel should be discharged at the rate of 300 tons a "weather working day," where during the discharge it rained shortly before noon and nothing further was done that day, the cargo being of a character which would be injured by being wet, the charterer was entitled to the deduction of such day from the lay days, under the rule of the Savannah Board of Trade, following an old-established custom of the port, providing that rain during working hours previous to noon shall prevent that day from counting. Pyman S. S. Co. v. One Hundred Tons of Kainit, 164 Fed. 364, 365.

WEB HOSE

A "web hose" is a hollow structure for the transmission of water, although, when water is not flowing through it, it may lie perfectly flat and be folded upon itself, with no suggestion of a tube about it. Ferry v. Waring Hat Mfg. Co., 129 Fed. 389, 392.

WEDGE

Where a servant, breaking rock with a steel instrument intended to cut steel rails, made of the best steel and practically new, was injured by a piece of steel flying from the instrument, the master was not liable, though a tool called a "wedge" was generally used for splitting rock. Langhorn, Johnson & Co. v. Wiley (Ky.) 91 S. W. 255, 256.

WEED

"The word 'weed' has a common, everyday meaning to the mind of every man. It may also have a technical meaning to the botanist or the chemist. It is a nuisance to the farmer, the gardener, or the owner of a well-kept lawn, notwithstanding that some weeds may contain valuable medicinal properties, which, when extracted, may be of benefit and profit to mankind. But it is a fact of common information, of which courts may properly take judicial notice, that a high rank growth of weeds in a populous community has a strong tendency to produce sickness and to impair the health of the inhabitants, and so may be a nuisance in such locality, notwithstanding they may be comparatively innocuous in the country, when far away from human habitation." A city ordinance made it a misdemeanor for any owner, lessee, etc., of any part of any lot to allow or maintain on any such lot any growth of weeds to a height of over one foot, and defined the word "weeds," as therein used, to include all rank vegetable growth which exhale unpleasant and noxious odors, and also high and rank vegetable growth that may conceal filthy deposits. Held, that a conviction for the violation of such ordinance was proper under evidence tending to prove that, at the time the city gave defendant notice to cut down the weeds on his lot, there were weeds on the lot from four to five feet high, about one-third of which were sunflowers. the notice to cut down the weeds having been given in July. City of St. Louis v. Galt, 77 S. W. 876, 877, 179 Mo. 8, 63 L. R. A. 778.

WEEK

See Once a Week.

Four consecutive weeks, see Four.

Successive weeks, see Successive.

Three weeks successively, see Three.

The word "week" is usually regarded as referring to a period of seven consecutive days. Jackson v. Guss, 120 Pac. 353, 354, 86 Kan. 280.

Const. 1901, § 116, provides that the Governor shall hold office for four years "from" the first Monday after the second Tuesday in January next succeeding his election and until his successor shall be elected and qualified. Section 48 declares that the Legislature shall meet on the second Tuesday in January next succeeding their election, and section 115 provides that the returns of every election for Governor and other state officers shall be transmitted to the Speaker of the House, "who shall, during the first week of the session * * * open and publish them." Held that, since the word "week" in section 115 can only mean seven consecutive days, the returns might be opened as late as the Monday following the meeting of the Legislature, so that the word "from" contained in section 116, relating to the commencement of the term of office of the Governor, must be construed according to the context and subject-matter as a word of exclusion. Oberhaus v. State ex rel. McNamara, 55 South. 898, 900, 173 Ala. 483.

An ordinance required the city engineer to advertise for bids for sidewalks as provided by statute for advertising for bids for work upon the roadway of any street. Sess. Acts 1901, p. 65 (Ann. St. 1906, § 5859), requires not less than "one week's" advertisement for bids on such work. An advertisement for bids for sidewalks was published on Wednesday morning, January 1st, and every day thereafter until and including the morning of January 7th, and the contract was awarded at 8 p. m. on that day. Held that, as seven full days had not elapsed when the contract was awarded, the ordinance was not complied with. Michel v. Taylor, 127 S. W. 949, 950, 143 Mo. App. 683.

An acrobatic performer's contract provided that she should receive $300 at the end of each "week" after the last performance on Saturday for services rendered, to be performed at such theaters and such other places and on such "days" as might be determined by plaintiff. Held, that it was no objection to the enforcement of such contract by injunction that it provided for exhibitions on Sunday, since, if such exhibitions were prohibited, the words "days" and "week" as used in the contract would be construed to mean week days only. Kelth v. Kellermann, 169 Fed. 196, 201.

As from Sunday to Sunday

The term "week" means a calendar week, commencing on Sunday and ending on Saturday. Derby v. Dancy, 36 South. 795, 796, 112 La. 891 (citing Ronkendorff v. Taylor's Homestead, 4 Pet. 360, 7 L. Ed. 882; In re City of New Orleans, 27 South. 592, 52 La. Ann. 1078; Hanson v. Maubefret, 28 South. 167, 52 La. Ann. 1567; Schenck v. Schenck, 28 South. 302, 52 La. Ann. 2102).

WEEKLY

See Semiweekly.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 7085, requiring the delinquent tax list to be published weekly for two weeks between the second Monday in May and the second Monday in June in each year, "weekly for two weeks" means two weeks in succession, and a biweekly publication did not comply with the statute. Byrne v. Less, 122 S. W. 635, 836, 92 Ark. 211.

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

the idea of a paper issued once a week. Hence, an affidavit of publication of a notice of foreclosure sale, which recites that such notice was published "seven successive times, commencing on July 17, 1885, and ending on August 28, 1885, both inclusive, in [a specified paper], a weekly newspaper," is sufficient proof that it was published once in each week for six successive weeks, as required by Comp. Laws 1887, § 5414. Cook v. Lockerby, 111 N. W. 628, 629, 16 N. D. 19. See, also, Wilson v. Petzold, 76 S. W. 1093, 116 Ky. 873.

A newspaper, published each week under the name of the "Bismark Weekly Tribune," by the publishers of the "Bismark Daily Tribune," such weekly being composed of matter printed in the daily paper, is a "weekly edition" of the Daily Tribune, within Rev. Codes 1899, § 1259 (Rev. Codes 1905, § 1574), requiring a delinquent tax list and notice of sale to be published, in counties having daily papers, in one issue of the daily edition and in two issues of the weekly edition of the same paper. Griffin v. Denison Land Co., 119 N. W. 1041, 1042, 18 N. D. 246.

WEIGHT

See Avoldupois Weight; Dry Weight; Estimated Weight; Mine Weights; Net Weight; Scale Weight.
Exact weight, see Exact.

"Figured weight" is the means of ascertaining the weight by a standard fixed and adopted by dealers in structural steel. For example, steel columns, girders, and other connections necessary for the steel part of a structure, according to their dimensions, are given a standard weight by manufacturers and dealers in such materials. Hale Bros. v. Milliken, 90 Pac. 365, 369, 5 Cal. App. 344.

WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE

See, also, Preponderance.

The expression "weight of evidence" signifies that the proof on one side is greater than on the other. Pumorio v. City of Merrill, 103 N. W. 464, 466, 125 Wis. 102.

The "preponderance of evidence" may not be determined by the number of witnesses, but by the greater weight of all the evidence, and the greater weight does not necessarily mean a greater number of witnesses, but the opportunity for knowledge, the information possessed, and the manner of testifying must be considered to determine the "weight" of testimony. Garver v. Garver, 121 Pac. 165, 166, 52 Colo. 227, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 674.

WEIR

A contrivance for the purpose of regulating the amount of water that should pass from a feeder through different flumes is called a "weir." Merrifield v. Canal Com'rs, 72 N. E. 405, 407, 587, 212 Ill. 456, 67 L. R. A. 369.

WELFARE

See General Welfare; Inimical to the Public Welfare; Relative Interested in Welfare.

In determining to whom an infant child shall be awarded, its "welfare" means, not alone its financial well-being, but also that peacefulness of mind and content upon which its happiness depends. Evans v. Lane, 70 S. E. 603, 605, 8 Ga. App. 826.

WELL

See Water Well.

The use of the term "well," in well drilling contracts, is not conclusive that a producing well was intended. An oil lease provided that, if a well was not completed on the leased premises within six months, it could be kept in force by a quarterly payment of $10 until one was completed; that if, at any time after a well was drilled, six months should elapse without any revenue being received therefrom, and without any further drilling being done, the lease should be deemed abandoned. An attempt was made to drill a well which proceeded until a depth of about 1,000 feet was reached, then the casing was pulled out and the hole was plugged; no further drilling was done. More than six months thereafter the lessor brought an action to declare the lessee's rights lost by abandonment. Held, there being evidence from which it might be inferred that the drilling done showed the existence of oil in sufficient quantity to warrant shooting, which was not attempted, the court was justified in finding that the operations described amounted to the drilling of a well, within the meaning of the contract, and that the cessation of operations for six months thereafter constituted an abandonment of the lease. Federal Betterment Co. v. Blaes, 88 Pac. 555, 556, 75 Kan. 69.

"Tunnels" are practically horizontal "wells," differing from ordinary "wells" only in that the waters from the former find their way to the surface by gravity, while in the latter pumping must be resorted to to bring the water to the surface; both disturbing the natural flow of the subterranean waters, and both being artificial means of reaching and controlling the natural subterranean flow to develop water power. Garvey Water Co. v. Huntington Land & Improvement Co., 97 Pac. 428, 432, 154 Cal. 232.

WELL-DEFINED BOUNDARY

A boundary described in a deed by natural or artificial objects, so that it can be run by a surveyor, is a "well-defined" boundary, entitling a person taking possession, under the deed, of part of the land inclosed to claim title by adverse possession to the entire tract, although the boundary might not constitute a well-defined boundary, if there was no deed. Burt & Brabb Lumber Co. v. Sackett, 144 S. W. 34, 38, 147 Ky. 232.

WELL FOUNDED

In discussing the contention that the trial court erred in charging that a reasonable doubt must be "well founded" it is said: "The expression is certainly a loose one, and not to be commended. The term 'well founded' has a double significance. It may mean founded on good reasons, or it may be defined as not baseless or having no support. In the latter sense the instruction is not erroneous, for, it is well settled that a doubt, to be reasonable, must have some basis either in the evidence, or from a lack of evidence on some material proposition. In other words, it is not a barely possible one, nor one sought after, not a capricious nor an imaginary one, nor one based upon a surmise or groundless conjecture. In other words, it must be a rational or substantial one, having some basis in reason, although it need not be such a one as the jurors may be able to give a reason for." State v. Mahoney, 97 N. W. 1089, 1091, 122 Iowa, 168.

A "well-founded doubt" is a reasonable doubt. Willis v. State, 33 South. 226, 235, 134 Ala. 429; Creagh v. State, 43 South. 112, 114, 149 Ala. 8 (citing Turner v. State, 27 South. 272, 124 Ala. 59; Stewart v. State, 31 South. 944, 133 Ala. 109).

WELL-GROUNDED BELIEF

See Reasonable and Well-Grounded Belief.

WELL KNEW

The words "well knew" or "well knowing" supply the place of a positive averment that defendant knew the fact charged. State v. Waterbury, 110 N. W. 328, 329, 133 Iowa, 135; State v. Wilson, 67 Atl. 533, 534, 80 Vt. 249; United States v. Mitchell, 141 Fed. 666, 670 (citing Dunbar v. United States, 15 Sup. Ct. 325, 156 U. S. 186, 39 L. Ed. 390).

WEST

A call in a description in a deed for "west" will be construed to mean east where such change is necessary to enable the survey to close upon its starting corner. Upton v. Santa Rita Mining Co., 89 Pac. 275, 281, 14 N. M. 96.

WEST HALF

Where there is nothing to suggest the contrary, the word "half," in connection with the conveyance of a part of a tract of land, is interpreted as meaning half in quantity. The words "east half" and "west half" in a deed, while naturally importing an equal division, may lose that effect when it appears that at the time some fixed line or known boundary or monument divides the premises somewhere near the center, so that the expression more properly refers to one of such parts than to a mathematical division which never has been made. Gunn v. Brower, 105 Pac. 702, 703, 81 Kan. 242.

The description, in a complaint in partition of the land, involved as the "westerly one-half of" a specified lot and block according to a certain recorded plat, etc., was sufficient. Home Security Bldg. & Loan Ass'n of Alameda County v. Western Land & Title Co., 78 Pac. 626, 145 Cal. 217.

WESTERLY

The word "westerly," as used in an order of the county court incorporating a village, which describes the commons as "on the west side of said limits one quarter of a mile in a westerly direction," should be construed to mean due west, rendering the description definite and certain. State ex rel. Chandler v. Huff, 79 S. W. 1010, 1012, 105 Mo. App. 354.

WEST POINT CADET

As army officer, see Army Officer.

WET AND COUNTRY DAMAGE

Where special cotton transportation contracts exempted all carriers from liability for "wet and country damage," declarations alleging that the cotton was injured by "water and mud" prior to the termination of the inland transportation stated a cause of damage within such exemption; the terms "water and mud" and "wet and country damage" being synonymous. Inman & Co. v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 159 Fed. 960, 971.

WHARF

See Public Wharf.

Use of wharf, see Use—Used.

See, also, Pier.

A "wharf" is a space of ground artificially prepared for the reception of merchandise from a ship or vessel, so as to promote the convenient loading and discharge of the vessel; a structure used for the handling of freight in connection with the shipment or discharge of a cargo from a vessel; an artificial landing place. It need not be of any particular design; the only necessity being that it affords a place where vessels land. John J. Sesnon Co. v. United States, 182 Fed. 573, 576, 105 C. C. A. 111.

"Wharves" belong to a class of property in which the public is concerned, and as to which the government has always reserved the right, as between its citizens, to regulate and control. This has prevailed in England from time immemorial, and in this country from its earliest colonization; that is to say, the government has exercised the authority to regulate ferries, common carriers, hackmen, bakers, millers, wharfingers, innkeepers, etc. And hence this class of property, when used by the public, becomes affected with a public interest, and it ceases to be juris privati only." A wharf built on the bank of a navigable river, not in a city or town where there are a number of others, but at the terminus of public highways in the country, or at a small place, where it constitutes the only means by which the people of the community can reach the river and use the mediums of commerce navigating the same, and which was built for such use, or is being so used, is impressed with a public interest; and a single carrier cannot, by purchasing or leasing the same, convert it into private property, so as to have the right to exclude the public or other carriers from using it for the loading or unloading of vessels on the payment of reasonable wharfage. Weems Steamboat Co. of Baltimore v. People's Steamboat Co., 141 Fed. 454, 456.

Los Angeles City Charter (St. 1889, p. 457) art. 1, § 2, subd. 7, confers on the city of Los Angeles power to lay out, open, extend, pave, repave, and improve streets, and as amended in 1909 (St. 1909, p. 1291) authorizes the city to acquire or construct and operate public wharves, docks, piers, or moles along the seashore in connection with the transportation of passengers and freight between the ocean and the city. By the charter (section 258), as amended by St. 1909, p. 1303, the city was authorized, throughout its entire area, to acquire, construct, own, operate, and maintain docks, wharves, piers, canals, and sea walls; and by section 262, as amended by St. 1909, p. 1305, was given power to incur a bonded debt for all the foregoing purposes, including the maintaining of the streets in question. Held that, since the term "dock" means an artificial basin, in connection with a harbor, for the reception of vessels and the slip or waterway extending between two piers or projecting wharves, waterways were included within the term, and warehouses were included within the right to erect "wharves," so that the city was authorized to contract indebtedness for the construction of docks, wharves, and warehouses, including the maintaining of streets and highways to navigable waters and the construction and maintaining of canals and waterways. Clark v. City of Los Angeles, 116 Pac. 966, 968, 160 Cal. 317.

As building

See Building (In Criminal Law).

Highway

A dock or wharf is not in any ordinary sense a "highway." State ex rel. Wauconda Inv. Co. v. Superior Court for King County, 124 Pac. 127, 128, 68 Wash. 660, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1076.

P. L. 1897, p. 69, § 48, par. 1, providing that city councils may by ordinance vacate "any street, road, highway or alley," does not, when construed in connection with section 18, par. 7 (page 52), empowering councils to regulate streets, highways, wharves, etc., authorize a city council to discharge the public right in a wharf dedicated to the public; the word "highways" in section 48 not including a wharf. Palen v. Ocean City, 62 Atl. 947, 948, 72 N. J. Law, 15.

As house

See House.

WHARF OR OTHER BUILDING

WHARFAGE

"Wharfage" is the use of a wharf furnished in the ordinary course of navigation. The James T. Furber, 129 Fed. 808, 810.

"Wharfage" is a charge against a vessel for lying at a wharf, and not a charge for caring for the goods. New York Dock Co. v. India Wharf Brewing Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 432, 434, 127 App. Div. 385.

Dockage and moorage

The word "wharfage" is usually and ordinarily employed to designate the charge made for the use of a wharf for the purpose of loading or unloading freight on or from vessels lying by its side. The word is sometimes used synonymously with "dockage" or "moorage" to describe the charge made by the owner of a dock or basin for the privilege of allowing a vessel to lie there. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore v. Baltimore & Philadelphia Steamboat Co., 65 Atl. 353, 358, 104 Md. 485.

WHARFBOAT

A stationary building of three floors, erected on piles, into which goods are unloaded from boats, and which during low stages of the river is not reached by the water, is not a "wharfboat," within Code 1906, § 3780, imposing a tax for the privilege of conducting a wharfboat, although the building serves the purposes of a wharfboat. Bluff City Ry. Co. v. Clarke, 49 South. 177, 95 Miss. 689.

WHARFINGER

Wharfage business as common carrier, see Common Carrier.

A "wharfinger" is one who for hire receives merchandise upon his wharf either for the purpose of forwarding or for delivery to the consignee upon such wharf. Morse v. Steel, 86 Pac. 693, 694, 149 Cal. 303 (citing Chapman v. State, 38 Pac. 457, 104 Cal. 690, 43 Am. St. Rep. 158).

A "wharfinger" is one who keeps a wharf for receiving goods for hire. That this was his business may be proved against him by showing that he so held it out to the public generally and actually received and charged for whatever goods were deposited on his wharf. National Union Bank of Reading v. Shearer, 74 Atl. 351, 353, 225 Pa. 470, 17 Ann. Cas. 664.

A life estate in all of the testator's property, real and personal, given to his wife, who is charged with the administration of the estate for the benefit of herself and the other beneficiaries named in the will, is not enlarged into a fee-simple estate in either the real or personal property by the following phrase describing the property to go over "whatsoever what may be left." Behrens v. Baumann, 66 S. E. 5, 6, 66 W. Va. 56, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092.

WHEAT

Wheat injured by frost to such an extent as to reduce it to a low grade, or to "no grade," but which can still be used for seed and for making flour, is dutiable as "wheat," under the tariff act, and not as a nonenumerated unmanufactured article. United States v. W. P. Devereux Co., 135 Fed. 428, 429.

WHEAT MIDDINGS

"Wheat middlings" are only a part of the ground grains, from which the coarser bran and usually the finer flour has been separated, so that the quality of middlings as feed stuff depends upon the milling process. This by-product of wheat is a "concentrated commercial feeding stuff," within the statute requiring sellers of "concentrated commercial feeding stuff" to affix a label thereto reciting certain facts, and providing that the term "concentrated commercial feeding stuff" shall include wheat middlings, etc., but shall not include unmixed meals made directly from the entire grain of the wheat, etc. These provisions are not repugnant. *State v. A "wheelwright," within Kirby's Dig. §§ 5013-5016, giving a wheelwright a lien on wagons for labor and materials in repairing wagons, is one whose occupation is to make or repair wheels and wheeled vehicles; and one who maintains a garage and who repairs an automobile placed therein is a "wheelwright," and entitled to a lien for labor and materials furnished. Shelton v. Little Rock Auto Co. (Ark.) 146 S. W. 129.

WHEN

See If When.

A scheme for the consolidation of the traction lines of San Francisco contemplated the issuance of $20,000,000 bonds to be delivered to B. & Co., who were entitled to offer them for sale prior to February 1, 1903, at the best price obtainable, but not less than 90 per cent. of their face value, with accrued interest. On or before June 16, 1902, $3,500,000 of the bonds were duly certified and delivered according to directions from B. & Co. to a syndicate by which large amounts of them were sold on the San Francisco market. Defendants on March 17, 1902, contracted to sell plaintiffs 100 of the bonds at 89 and interest payable and deliverable "when, as and if issued," etc. Held, that the words, "when, as and if issued," did not relate only to the total issue of bonds contemplated by the scheme, but meant that the contract should mature and delivery be due when such a reasonable amount of the bonds had been issued as would enable defendants with due diligence to procure the bonds and make delivery, and, defendants having refused to deliver after the $3,500,000 issue, plaintiffs were entitled to sue immediately for breach of contract. Zimmermann v. Timmermann, 86 N. E. 540, 541, 193 N. Y. 486.

As at the time of

The word "when" means "at the time" or "at that time." State v. Donahoe (Del.) 63 Atl. 643, 646, 5 Pennewill, 278 (quoting 2 Bouv. Law Dict. p. 1227).

Ann. St. 1906, p. 178, providing that "when any county shall be entitled to more than one representative, the county court shall subdivide" the county into districts, fixes the time when the county court shall act as the time when it appears by law that a county is entitled to more than one representative, and the power of the county court is dependent on prior legislative action, and the Legislature may only act once in every 10 years, and the subdivisions must be made by the county court at once and must remain until the next decennial period; the word

"when" being equivalent to the words "at the time that." State ex rel. Major v. Patterson, 129 S. W. 888, 891, 229 Mo. 373.

As if

The word "when" is frequently employed as equivalent to the word "if," in legislative enactments and in common speech. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Jones, 63 S. E. 834, 837, 132 Ga. 189.

In an instruction charging that "when" plaintiff entered defendant's employment he assumed all the risks, etc., the word "when" cannot be construed as synonymous with "if" to save the instruction from an objection that it assumes an employment. Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Lynch (Tex.) 136 S. W. 580, 583.

The word "when," in an instruction, on a trial of the right of property levied on under execution, that the burden was on plaintiff to make a prima facie case that the property is defendant's, which burden is discharged "when" he shows that defendant was in possession thereof at the time of the levy, and that then the burden shifts, means "if," and is not objectionable as assuming a fact relative to the possession of the property. Lightman Bros. & Goldstein v. Epstein, 51 South. 164, 168, 164 Ala. 660.

The word "when," as used in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 6567, providing that the Attorney General shall appear for the territory and prosecute and defend all actions and proceedings, civil or criminal, in the Supreme Court in which the territory shall be interested as a party, and shall also, when requested by the Governor or either branch of the Legislature, appear for the territory and prosecute or defend in any other court or before any officer in any case or matter, civil or criminal, in which the territory may be a party or interested, means no more than "in case" or "if." State ex rel. Haskell v. Huston, 97 Pac. 982, 986, 21 Okl. 782.

As relating to time of vesting or enjoyment of estate

The word "when," used in a devise of a remainder following a life estate, is not in and of itself sufficient to justify a conclusion that the remainder is contingent and not vested. Such word, unless there is something else in the will to indicate to the contrary, is construed to relate merely to the time of the enjoyment of the estate and not to the time of its vesting in interest. Trowbridge v. Coss, 110 N. Y. Supp. 1108, 1111, 126 App. Div. 679 (citing Connelly v. O'Brien, 60 N. E. 20, 166 N. Y. 406; Hersee v. Simpson, 48 N. E. 890, 154 N. Y. 496; Nelson v. Russell, 31 N. E. 1008, 135 N. Y. 137; Davidson v. Jones, 98 N. Y. Supp. 265, 112 App. Div. 254).

"When," as referring to a period of life, standing by itself and unqualified by any words or circumstances, is a word of condition, denoting the time when the gift is to take effect in substance. Thus a legacy left to a daughter "when she is 18 years old" is contingent and not vested and not subject to a legacy tax. Heberton v. McClain, 135 Fed. 226, 227.

As thereafter

A will creating a trust for the benefit of testator's sons, and providing for the payment of a certain proportion of the income of the trust fund until each son should have arrived at the age of 30 years, "When I bequeath to them, after all deductions, 98 per cent. of the net income, the balance of 2 per cent. keeping the estate in heart and to be invested," contemplated that the sons should have 98 per cent. of the income from the time of their arrival at the age of 30 years; the word "when" being equivalent to "thereafter." Central Trust Co. of New York v. Egleston, 77 N. E. 989, 185 N. Y. 23.

WHEN ESTATE IS TO BE KEPT TOGETHER

Civ. Code 1895, § 3466, declares: "When an estate is to be kept together for a longer time than twelve months," the widow and children shall have a year's support for each year that the estate may be kept together. Where a will was propounded by an executor, and a caveat interposed by heirs at law, not including the widow, and a year's support was set apart to her, and by reason of the appeal the estate was kept together for longer than 12 months under this section the widow was entitled to have a second year's support assigned to her though there was no provision in the will directing the estate to be held together for more than 12 months. *Edenfield v. #### WHENEVER

"Whenever" is an adverb of time. It is not the equivalent of 'in any case.' Its meaning, and the only meaning given to it by lexicographers, is 'at whatever time.'" As used in a constitutional provision that, whenever the requisite majority of the judges of the Supreme Court of Appeals sitting are unable to agree upon a decision, the case shall be reheard by a full bench, it does not mean in any case in which the requisite majority of the judges sitting, etc., but means at whatever time it may happen that the requisite majority of the judges sitting, etc., the case shall be reheard. Funkhouser v. Spahr, 46 S. E. 378, 379, 102 Va. 306.

The word "whenever" is an adverb of time, which, speaking from the date of the act, looks to the future rather than to the past. B. & C. Comp. § 2225, providing that, "whenever a judgment is given" in a justice's court, the judgment creditor may at any time thereafter, while the judgment is enforceable, file a transcript, etc., enacted in 1899, supercedes Hill's Ann. Laws 1892, § 2103, providing that, whenever a judgment is given in a justice's court, the judgment creditor may within one year thereafter file a transcript thereof, and operates prospectively only, the word "whenever" being an adverb of time, and, when used with the present tense of the verb excludes the idea of a judgment theretofore given, and, though construed to operate retroactively, the statute cannot apply to a justice's judgment rendered in 1896, no transcript of which had been filed within one year after its rendition. Denny v. Bean, 93 Pac. 693, 695, 51 Or. 180.

The word "whenever," used in Bankr. Act, July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 55e, 30 Stat. 560, providing that the court shall call a meeting of creditors whenever one-fourth or more in number of those who have proven their claims shall file a written request to that effect, etc., should be construed to mean "whenever after the first meeting" previously required to be held by section 55a (30 Stat. 559), which can only be held not less than 10 nor more than 30 days after adjudication. In re Back Bay Automobile Co., 158 Fed. 679, 682.

WHERE

The word "where," as used in the statute providing that notice of the time and place of taking depositions shall be served on the adverse party or his attorney, where such party or his attorney resides in the state, is synonymous with "if," and assumes the condition of one or the other—either adverse party or litigant—residing in the state. Swink v. Anthony, 81 S. W. 915, 916, 107 Mo. App. 601.

An instruction that where the negligence of two unite in causing an accident, by which another is injured, it is no defense for one to show that the other was to blame was not subject to the objection that the word "where," instead of the word "if," was misleading in assuming that there was negligence on the part of two. Frank Parmelee Co. v. Wheelock, 79 N. E. 652, 654, 224 Ill. 194 (citing Illinois Cent. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 221 Ill. 42, 77 N. E. 592; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Moranda, 108 Ill. 576).

The word "where," in a statute relating to the removal of causes "where a suit is now pending or may hereafter be brought in any state court," etc., is the equivalent of "when." Campbell v. Milliken, 119 Fed. 982, 986.

The word "where," as used in Acts 29th Leg. (Gen. Laws 1905, p. 116, c. 83, § 1), providing that where advisable in the opinion of the judge of the district court in which any county may be situated, a special term or terms of the district court therein may be held, does not refer to place but to the time when he may deem it advisable. Ex parte Boyd, 96 S. W. 1079, 1080, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 309.

WHEREAS

See For That Whereas.

An affidavit annexed to a chattel mortgage, which states "whereas" the mortgagee loaned a specified sum to the mortgagor at his special request, and that the whole amount thereof with interest is due, and "whereas" deponent at the special instance of the mortgagor became an accommodation indorser on promissory notes, etc., is insufficient to state the consideration, as required by Gen. St. 1895, p. 2113, § 52, since the items of the indebtedness are stated by way of recital, instead of as positive facts. Simpson v. Anderson (N. J.) 70 Atl. 696, 698.

The word "whereas" implies a recital, and in general cannot be used in the direct and positive averment of a fact. "The thing being so that; considering that things are so; implying an admission of facts, something followed by a different statement, and sometimes by inference of something consequent. While, on the contrary, the fact or case really being that; when in fact." Dalton v. U. S., 127 Fed. 544, 547, 62 C. C. A. 238 (quoting Cent. Dict.).

WHEREBY

The clause "whereby he promised and agreed for value received * * * to pay," etc., in a declaration on a promissory note, is a sufficient averment of a promise. The word "whereby" is grammatically and logically equivalent to the words "and by it," so that it has the same effect as if the pleader had said the defendant had made his note and by it promised and agreed to pay, etc. It is undoubtedly descriptive of the note, but it is also affirmative and narrative of the legal effect thereof, or rather of the act of the defendant in making the note. It merely performs a double function, and yet it does not subject the count to the rule against duplicity. Acme Food Co. v. Older, 61 S. E. 235, 236, 64 W. Va. 255, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 801.

WHEREIN

The word "wherein," as used in St. 1901, p. 154, c. 214, § 3, authorizing a street railway company to generate and transmit electricity "in any city or town 'wherein'" it is entitled to operate a street railway, and "for that purpose" to erect and maintain poles and feed wires for conducting electricity over any streets of "any of said cities and towns," relates to the words "any city or town," and includes all parts of such cities and towns.

A statement of the more specific authority is introduced by the words, "and for that purpose may erect." These words do not indicate a limitation of the general authority, but a more particular definition of it. The word "wherein" is not the word which naturally would be chosen to relate to bridges over or on which a railroad was operated, while it is strictly accurate as referring to a city or town in which the operation of a railway is authorized. Williams v. Old Colony St. Ry. Co., 79 N. E. 484, 485, 193 Mass. 305.

WHEREUPON

The word "whereupon," as used in a municipal charter directing that, on ordinances being passed over his veto, the mayor shall cause them to be published, whereupon they shall be of force as law, means "after which," and the meaning of the provision is that after the commands of the law as thus given have been obeyed, and not before, the ordinances shall be of the force of law. Mayor & Board of Trustees of Town of New Iberia v. Moss Hotel Co., 36 South. 552, 553, 112 La. 525.

In Rev. St. 1892, § 722, providing for the filing of objections to the extension of the limits of incorporated cities "whereupon" the court shall order notice to be served on the mayor, etc., the word "whereupon" does not mean "immediately" so that failure to serve such notice does not confer authority on the city to proceed after the objections were properly filed. City of Orlando v. Orlando Water & Light Co., 39 South. 532, 534, 50 Fla. 214.

WHETHER

WHETHER OR NOT

An order of the commissioners' court for local option election is not objectionable because submitting the question "whether or not" local option shall be adopted, though the language of the law is "whether" it shall be adopted. Thurmond v. State, 79 S. W. 316, 317, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 162.

An order submitting to popular vote the issue as to "whether" the sale of intoxicating liquors should be prohibited was not objectionable in failing to use the words "whether or not." Wade v. State, 109 S. W. 191, 192, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 184.

WHETSTONE

The provision for "hones and whetstones," in the Tariff Act, includes only articles used in sharpening edged instruments. R. J. Waddell & Co. v. United States, 135 Fed. 211, 213.

WHICH

See Outside Which.

"Which" refers to the last antecedent, be it word or clause, to which it can properly apply, unless a common-sense reading of the enactment requires a different construction. Peterson v. Turney, 2 Tenn. Ch. App. 519, 534 (citing Endlich, Int. Stat. p. 582).

WHICH PARENT WOULD HAVE TAKEN IF LIVING

As taking by representation, see By Right of Representation.

WHICH PRODUCES INTOXICATION

The qualifying phrases "which produces intoxication," in Rem. & Bal. Code, § 6288, prohibiting the sale or giving away of "malt, spirituous or vinous liquor * * * or any essence * * * compound * * * which produces intoxication," refers only to the enumerated essences and compounds preceding it, and does not qualify spirituous liquor which is deemed intoxicating. State v. Bailey, 121 Pac. 821, 67 Wash. 338 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6610-6615).

WHILE

The word "while," as used in a statute to protect persons, while engaged in the work of operating cars, etc., against the negligence of any employé of the company, places a time limit on this protection, and means during the time such employé may be engaged in the work of operating the cars, etc. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 103 S. W. 447, 449, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 74; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Howard, 80 S. W. 229, 230, 97 Tex. 513.

The term "while," as used in Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 5073, providing that corporate officers, who failed to make an annual report, shall be "liable for all damages resulting from such failure on their part while they are stockholders in such company," means during the time they are stockholders in the company. Stafford v. St. John, 73 N. E. 596, 600, 164 Ind. 277.

The complaint, in an action under Act March 17, 1875 (Laws Sp. Sess. 1875, p. 59, c. 13) § 20, declaring one who sells intoxicating liquors in violation of the act liable to any one damaged on account of the use of such liquor, and based on section 15, making it an offense to sell intoxicating liquor to a person "at the time in a state of intoxication," which alleges that defendants sold intoxicating liquors to plaintiff's husband, "while" he was in an intoxicated condition, is not open to the objection of averring the intoxication by way of recital; "while" having the meaning of "at the same time," and being equivalent to and complying with the terms of the statute on which the action is founded. Greener v. Nielhaus, 89 N. E. 377, 378, 44 Ind. App. 674.

Rev. St. 1874, c. 30, § 13, makes every estate in land devised a fee simple, though other words heretofore necessary to pass such estate be not added, if a less estate be not expressly limited, or do not appear to have been devised by operation of law. The will devised and bequeathed to testator's wife all the realty and personalty that he might die seised of, "provided she remains my widow, but should she marry, then all the property shall go to my children that are alive," except a life estate in one-third of the land. Held, that the widow took a conditional or base fee, subject to be terminated by her subsequent marriage, so that her grantee took such fee subject to divestiture by her marriage, and a child of testator had only an expectancy in the land until the happening of such event; the word "provided," as used in the will, not meaning the same as "while," which is merely an adverb expressing duration, but being an apt word to express a conditional estate, unless a different intention appears from the whole instrument. Cummings v. Lohr, 92 N. E. 970, 972, 246 Ill. 577.

WHILE ACTING IN FIDUCIARY CAPACITY

The words "while acting as an officer or in any fiduciary capacity," found in section 17, cl. 4, Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 550, excepting from the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy debts created by fraud, etc., while acting as an officer, etc., qualifies the words "fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation, or defalcation," and are not restricted in their scope to the limitation of the word "defalcation." In re Harper, 133 Fed. 970, 972.

WHILE ACTUALLY RIDING AS A PASSENGER

WHILE IN DISCHARGE OF OFFICIAL DUTY

The words "while in the discharge of his official duty," as used in proviso of Code 1904, § 3780, as amended by Act March 14, 1908, (Acts 1908, p. 671, c. 385), punishing persons carrying concealed weapons, that such section shall not apply to any police officer, town or city sergeant, constable, sheriff, conservator of the peace, or to carriers of United States mail in rural districts, or collecting officer while in the discharge of his official duty, do not apply to all the officers named in the statute, but only to a collecting officer, and hence a commissioner in chancery, as a conservator of the peace, is permitted to carry a concealed weapon, though not at the time in the discharge of official duties. Withers v. Commonwealth, 65 S. E. 16, 18, 109 Va. 837.

WHISKY

See Bourbon Whisky; Pure Rye Whisky; Scotch Whisky.

"Whisky" is a spirit distilled from grain, the word "whisky" per se indicates an intoxicating liquor. State v. Carmody, 91 Pac. 446, 448, 50 Or. 1, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 828. See, also, United States v. Fifty Barrels of Whisky, 165 Fed. 966, 971.

"Whisky" is spirituous or distilled liquor. State v. York, 65 Atl. 685, 686, 74 N. H. 125, 13 Ann. Cas. 116.

"Whisky" is alcohol, diluted with water and mixed with other elements or ingredients. Marks v. State, 48 South. 864, 868, 159 Ala. 71, 133 Am. St. Rep. 20.

"Whisky," within the purview of Food & Drugs Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, 34 Stat. 768, is the product of sound grain, distilled at a low temperature so as to retain in the distillate the congeneric properties of the grain, which give to the liquor, when matured by aging in charred casks, its desirable potable character. Neutral spirits, which are distilled at a high temperature, may be made from different materials and do not contain such properties, and which are not rendered potable by aging, although reduced by water to potable strength and from which most of the fusel oil has been removed, are not whisky nor a like substance with whisky. Woolner & Co. v. Rennick, 170 Fed. 662, 663.

WHITE OAK

A deed to cut and remove on land described "white oak timber" is ambiguous, and parol evidence is admissible to show the sense in which the parties used the term, defined as an American oak of the Eastern United States, having characteristic leaves with usually seven deep, rounded, entire lobes, and by extension including any species of oak of the group of which the above is typical. Taylor v. Union Sawmill Co., 152 S. W. 150, 151, 105 Ark. 518 (quoting Webster).

WHITE PAINT

Enamel white paint, which contains zinc, but not lead, and is ground in oil, and to which, after grinding, ingredients are added to increase the gloss, is dutiable as "white paint * * * containing zinc, but not containing lead, * * * ground in oil." United States v. J. A. & W. Bird & Co., 167 Fed. 319, 320, 92 C. C. A. 631.

WHITE PERSON

Under the naturalization law, which authorizes naturalization only of "white persons" or Africans, or persons of African descent, an alien's right to citizenship depends upon parentage and blood, and not upon nationality or status. In re Young, 195 Fed. 645.

The term "free white persons," within Rev. St. § 2169, limiting the naturalization act (Act June 29, 1906, c. 3592, 34 Stat. 596), to such persons, includes members of the white, or Caucasian race, as distinct from the black, red, yellow, and brown races; and hence a Parsee is entitled to admission to citizenship. United States v. Balsara, 180 Fed. 694, 695, 103 C. C. A. 660. The term comprehends a Syrian, who is a native of Palestine and a Maronite; the term "white" being used in its popular sense to denote at least the members of the Caucasian race. In re Ellis, 179 Fed. 1002, 1003. A Syrian from Mt. Lebanon, near Beirut. In re Najour, 174 Fed. 735. And a Syrian born in Damascus. In re Mudarri, 176 Fed. 465, 466. The word "white," in the statute, is used to classify the inhabitants and to include all persons not otherwise classified, not as synonymous with "European," there being in fact no "European" or "white" race as a distinctive class, or "Asiatic" or "yellow" race, including substantially all the people of Asia; and hence the term "free white persons" includes Armenians born in Asiatic Turkey and on the west side of the Bosphorus. In re Halladjian, 174 Fed. 834, 835.

Chinese or Japanese

One born at sea on a British schooner, of an English father and mother half Chinese and half Japanese, is not a free "white person," and, though he served 10 years in the United States Navy, is not entitled to naturalization, under Rev. St. § 2169, providing that the act shall apply to aliens being free white persons and those of African nativity and descent, and Act Cong. May 6, 1882, c. 126, § 14, 22 Stat. 61, prohibiting the admission of Chinese to citizenship. In re Knight, 171 Fed. 299, 300.

Rev. St. § 2166, authorizing the naturalization of aliens honorably discharged from the military service of the United States, as limited by section 2169 of the same title, as amended in 1875 (Act Feb. 18, 1875, c. 80, 18 Stat. 318), by providing that "the provisions of this title shall apply to aliens being free, white persons and to aliens of African nativity, and to persons of African descent," does not extend the right of naturalization to a person of the Japanese race, although having an honorable discharge from the army of the United States. In re Buntaro Kumagai, 163 Fed. 922, 923.

The son of a German father and a Japanese mother is not entitled to naturalization as a "white person." In re Young, 195 Fed. 645, 646; Id., 198 Fed. 715, 716.

WHO*WHOEVER

"Whoever," as used in Rev. St. c. 93, § 46, providing that "whoever labors" at cutting, hauling, rafting logs or lumber or at "cooking" for persons engaged in such labor has a lien on the logs and lumber for the amount due for his personal services, which may be enforced by attachment, is a very comprehensive term, but it has been held that it does not include a contractor, though he labors personally at cutting, hauling, etc. This lien can be enforced only by a personal action against the one contracting to pay such wages, and by an attachment of the logs and lumber on the writ in that action. And as a wife cannot sue her husband for her personal services in cooking for him and men employed by him in laboring on logs and lumber under Rev. St. c. 63, § 3, providing that a married woman may receive the wages of her personal labor not performed in her own family, she has no lien on the logs and lumber for such services under chapter 93, § 46; such lien existing only against one legally liable for the services. Mott v. Mott, 78 Atl. 900, 107 Me. 481.

Artificial persons

In analogy to Rev. Laws, c. 8, § 5, which provides that the word "person" may "extend and be applied to bodies politic and corporate," unless a contrary intention is clearly shown, the word "whoever," under Rev. Laws, c. 56, § 55, which provides a punishment for the possession of adulterated milk with intent to sell, includes a corporation. Commonwealth v. Graustein & Co., 95 N. E. 97, 99, 209 Mass. 38.

WHOLE*WHOLE AMOUNT

A municipality issued bonds for the construction of a subway. The bonds, as required by statute, provided that the "whole amount" of the tolls for persons passing through the subway should be pledged for the payment of the principal and interest. The law contemplated the collection of the tolls by an elevated railway company, acting as the city's agent, and suggested payment of compensation for collecting. Held, that the intent of the statute (St. 1897, p. 509, c. 500, § 17) is accomplished on the city retaining as security the amount received for the tolls, less a reasonable allowance to the railway company for the collection of them. In re Opinion of Justices, 77 N. E. 1038, 1040, 190 Mass. 605.

WHOLE CONGREGATION

Where the constitution of a religious corporation, adopted by the unanimous consent of the members of the society, provided that controversies should be determined by a majority rule, the fact that it also provided that the management of its affairs should be vested in the "whole congregation" did not require the assent of every member to every vote; such provision being construed merely to refer to action at a meeting which all the members were entitled and had an opportunity to attend. Duessel v. Proch, 62 Atl. 152, 154, 78 Conn. 343, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 854.

WHOLE COUNCIL

In a city charter, providing that the city council shall consist of a mayor and board of aldermen, and that a majority of the members of the "whole council" shall be necessary to pass any ordinance in any wise increasing or diminishing the city revenues, the term "council" is used synonymously with the "board of aldermen," and the "whole council" referred to means the whole board of aldermen, as distinct from a quorum thereof, so that, one of the aldermen having died prior to the passage of a tax levy ordinance passed by the vote of seven, such ordinance should be considered as having received a majority of the whole board or council. Nalle v. City of Austin, 93 S. W. 141, 145, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 423.

WHOLE EXPENSE

The terms "expense" and "whole expense," as used in statutes relieving towns under certain circumstances from the burden of building and keeping in suitable repair highways or bridges, mean the same. Town of Bridgewater v. Grafton County, 69 Atl. 941, 942, 74 N. H. 549.

WHOLE INSURANCE

The term "whole insurance," as used in a policy on property covered by several policies, which provide that the company should not be liable for a greater proportion of any loss than the amount of the policies bore to the "whole insurance," contemplates the aggregate maximum risk assumed under all the policies. Stephenson v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 93 N. W. 19, 21, 116 Wis. 277.

A fire insurance policy provided that the company should not be liable for a greater portion of any loss than the amount insured by its policy should bear to the "whole insurance" on the policy. Held, that the words "whole insurance" meant the face value of the policy, together with the face value of all other policies issued on the same property, and in apportioning a loss all other insurance is to be included, whether made by another company alone or by a contract between it and the insured, under which, on a partial loss, each stands part as a coinsurer. Farmers' Feed Co. of New Jersey v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. of Edinburgh, 65 N. E. 1105, 1107, 173 N. Y. 241.

A fire policy provided that the insurer should not be liable for a greater proportion of any loss than the amount insured by the policy bore to the "whole insurance," whether valid or not, "covering such property," etc. Held, that a floating insurance policy covering plaintiff's injured goods, but providing that the policy should not cover in whole or in part any merchandise on which there might be at the time specific insurance, excepting on the excess of value over and above such specific insurance, when such specific insurance was exhausted, did not cover the goods insured by the first policy, and was not to be considered in determining the "whole insurance" on the property at the time of the loss. Klotz Tailoring Co. v. Eastern Fire Ins. Co., 102 N. Y. Supp. 82, 84, 116 App. Div. 723.

WHOLE TIME

A provision of a statute requiring an officer to devote his "whole time" to his official duties, means "all his time." It is not meant that he shall at all times be engaged in the performance of some work incident to his office, but that he shall not engage in any other employment. McBrian v. Nation, 97 Pac. 798, 799, 78 Kan. 665.

WHOLE TURN

A "half turn," as used in the irrigation law, consists in the right to take water every 10 or 12 days for 19 or 20 hours, while a "whole turn" is the right to take water every 20 or 21 days for 39 hours. Bartholomew v. Fayette Irr. Co., 86 Pac. 481, 31 Utah, 1, 120 Am. St. Rep. 912.

WHOLE WORK

See Performance of the Whole Work.

WHOLESALE

The primary and usual meaning of the word "wholesale" is the sale of goods in gross to retailers who sell to consumers. State v. Spence, 53 South. 596, 597, 127 La. 336.

The words "at wholesale" are used in opposition to the words "at retail" and mean in large quantities, and the sale of a quart of wine cannot be said to be a sale at wholesale. Commonwealth v. Poulin, 73 N. E. 655, 656, 187 Mass. 568.

The word "wholesale," in Rev. Laws, c. 100, § 1 (St. 1903, c. 460, § 1), providing that the statute prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors shall not apply to sales of cider at wholesale by the original makers thereof, must, as required by Rev. Laws, c. 8, § 4, cl. 3, be understood as having a meaning acquired by a prior judicial construction; and the word, in view of such prior judicial construction, means sales made in large quantities, as distinguished from those made in small quantities, which are to be regarded as sales at "retail," and the court must charge that, in determining whether sales were at wholesale, sales at retail are sales made in small quantities, such as are adapted to individual purchasers, while sales at wholesale are sales made in large quantities, which are beyond the needs of ordinary consumers. Commonwealth v. Greenwood, 91 N. E. 141, 205 Mass. 124, 18 Ann. Cas. 185.

Acts 1902, No. 90, § 68, subjects to a penalty all persons selling liquor without a license, except as authorized by a license granted. Section 23 provides for seven classes of licenses, the fourth of which is one by which the licensee may sell at wholesale. Held, that a person having a license of the fourth class could sell only to persons to sell direct to consumers for the purpose of consumption. A sale by "wholesale" means a sale by a merchant to a retailer, and as a general rule wholesale merchants deal only with people who buy to sell again. State v. Scampini, 59 Atl. 201, 206, 77 Vt. 92.

The International Dictionary defines the term "wholesale" as the sale of goods by the piece or large quantities, as distinguished from retail, and this is its accurate popular meaning. The word "wholesale" accurately imports a selling, and to sell by wholesale is defined by Bouvier as to sell by large parcels, generally in original packages and not by retail. Acts 29th Leg. p. 353, c. 148, is in part entitled "An act for the levy and collection of a tax on individuals," etc., owning, operating, managing, or controlling for profit the business of wholesale dealers in coal oil, etc., and section 9 requires that only those on whom the tax is imposed shall engage in the wholesale oil business. Held, that one engaged in the wholesale oil business was a wholesale "dealer," within such act, whether he bought the oil to sell again, or whether he bought crude oil and refined it into different petroleum products, and sold the latter. Texas Co. v. Stephens, 103 S. W. 481, 486, 100 Tex. 628.

WHOLESALE COST

A contract for the exchange of plaintiff's land for defendant's stock of merchandise provided that the price of the stock should be "the wholesale cost of the same." The stock was somewhat old, and at the time of the sale the parties took an inventory, and it appears that by the general custom among merchants in the town the term "wholesale cost" included the dray and transportation charges, and meant the wholesale cost of the goods in the merchant's house, including such charges, and not the selling price in the wholesale market. Held, that the term "wholesale cost," as used in the contract of exchange, did not mean the original wholesale price, but that price added to the estimated expenses for freight charges and drayage. J. W. Finn & Co. v. Culberhouse, 150 S. W. 698, 700, 105 Ark. 197.

WHOLESALE DEALER

A "wholesale dealer" is one who sells in large or wholesale quantities, as contra-distinguished from one who sells in small lots at retail. Florida Packing & Ice Co. v. Carney, 41 South. 190, 192, 51 Fla. 190 (citing Goodwin v. Clark, 65 Me. 280; Commonwealth v. Gormly, 34 Atl. 282, 173 Pa. 586; Overall v. Bezeau, 37 Mich. 506).

Under the general license act (No. 171 of 1898), providing that persons shall not be deemed "wholesale dealers" unless they sell by the original or unbroken package or barrel only, and unless they sell to dealers for resale, and, if they sell in less than original, unbroken packages or barrels, they shall be considered retail dealers and pay license as such, a dealer in intoxicating liquors who sells to individuals for consumption is a retailer and may be convicted as such in a prohibition parish. State v. Spence, 53 South. 596, 597, 127 La. 336.

A "wholesale dealer" in oleomargarine is defined by statute to be one permitted to sell in the manufacturer's original packages. Ripper v. United States, 178 Fed. 24, 25, 28, 101 C. C. A. 152. A retail grocer ceased handling oleomargarine, but, having two or three customers who desired it, at their request and for their accommodation he sent orders in their respective names to the manufacturer for 10-pound packages at a time, to be shipped to each customer in his care. The manufacturer shipped the same to its local branch house, addressed and billed to the customers. The branch house which did not deliver to retail customers, left the packages at plaintiff's store, and he delivered the same with other groceries. The customers returned the bills to him, and he remitted for the same to the manufacturers each month, charging the customer with the cash so sent. There was no fraud nor attempt at concealment, and plaintiff made no profit whatever on the transactions. It was held that such transactions were not sales of the article by plaintiff and did not render him subject to tax as a "wholesale dealer." Grier v. Tucker, 150 Fed. 658, 663. Plaintiff and his brother were both retail dealers in oleomargarine, and had paid the tax for the first six months of 1910. During that time, a wholesale shipment ordered by plaintiff not having arrived, he borrowed an unbroken package of the same material from his brother, which the latter had obtained from the same wholesale dealer from whom plaintiff's supply had been ordered, and on arrival of plaintiff's order the precise amount borrowed of the same product and brand was returned. Held, that such transaction did not constitute plaintiff a "wholesale dealer" in oleomargarine, nor subject him to a tax imposed on wholesalers. Weaver v. Ewers, 195 Fed. 247, 250, 115 C. C. A. 219.

Pub. Acts 1911, No. 170, § 1, provides that wholesale dealers shall include all persons who shall sell or offer liquors for sale as beverages at wholesale in original sealed trade packages not to be drunk on the premises, provided, however, that it shall be unlawful for any person to engage in the wholesale liquor business in any town, village, or city of less than 2,000 population, or to sell in quantities of less than three gallons. Held, that the word "wholesale" means pertaining to or engaged in trade by the piece or large quantity, selling to retailers or jobbers rather than to consumers, sales en masse or in gross, etc., and hence a wholesale liquor dealer had no right under his wholesale license to sell beer by the pint bottle, or in quantities less than three gallons, though not to be drunk on the premises. People v. Cain, 137 N. W. 159, 171 Mich. 279.

Pol. Code, § 2834, imposes a license tax of $500 on wholesale liquor dealers, to be paid in each precinct, town, or city in which the wholesaler has or operates a warehouse or depository; "wholesaler" being defined by section 2835 to include all persons who sell or offer for sale or deliver liquors in quantities of five gallons or more at any one time to any one person or persons. Section 2836 provides that every person engaged in business mentioned in section 2834 shall pay such license, and section 2838 provides that any person violating the article shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that section 2834 was not limited to wholesale liquor dealers who operate a warehouse or depository within the state, but extended to and included nonresident liquor dealers selling liquor in South Dakota at wholesale by means of traveling salesmen. Jones v. Yokum, 123 N. W. 272, 274, 24 S. D. 176.

The liquor law of 1887 (Pub. Acts 1887, No. 313) repealed all prior ordinances prohibiting saloons in villages, but the village incorporation act of 1895 (Pub. Acts 1895, No. 3, c. 7, § 1, subd. 7 [Comp. Laws 1897, § 2769, subd. 7]) authorized village councils to suppress saloons for the sale of spirituous and intoxicating liquors. The Warner Crampton Act of 1909 (Pub. Acts 1909, No. 291), amending certain sections of the general liquor law, and adding other sections, provided, section 2, that wholesale liquor dealers shall be deemed to include all persons who sell or offer for sale liquors at wholesale in original packages and in bulk and by measure not to be drunk on the premises. Held, that subdivision 7 was not repealed by anything in the act of 1909. Boos v. Scudder, 127 N. W. 1040, 1041, 163 Mich. 678.

Quantity sold

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8351 (Acts 1907, p. 689, c. 293), making any person selling intoxicants without a license guilty of a misdemeanor, but providing that the act shall not apply to any person, etc., engaged as a wholesaler who does not sell less than five gallons at a time, and defining a "wholesale dealer" as a person whose sole business in connection with the liquor traffic is to sell to licensed retail liquor dealers, or to wholesale dealers, druggists, etc., a wholesale dealer cannot sell liquor in any quantity to a consumer. Skelton v. State, 89 N. E. 860, 861, 173 Ind. 462.

WHOLESALE PRICE

Rev. St. § 3394, as amended by Act Cong. July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 10, 30 Stat. 206, classifies cigars and cigarettes for internal revenue duty, and imposes a stamp tax of 54 cents per thousand on cigarettes weighing not more than three pounds to the thousand, and the wholesale value or price of which is not more than $2 per thousand, including the tax, and, if the value exceeds such sum, then they are required to carry a tax of $1.08 per thousand. Held that, where intestate manufactured cigarettes and sold them at wholesale at his store-room to any one who might apply in reasonable wholesale quantities at $2 per thousand, the fact that the larger part of the cigarettes manufactured by him were purchased by his son at $2 per thousand and sold by him at wholesale with cigarettes of other manufacture for more than such price did not make the "wholesale price or value" of intestate's cigarettes more than $2 per thousand, and hence he was not subject to an assessment prescribed by section 3371, as amended by Act March 1, 1879, c. 125, § 14, 20 Stat. 346, for insufficient stamping. Epremlam v. Ward, 169 Fed. 691, 693.

WHOLLY

A shipment from New York City to Buffalo by way of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, is interstate commerce, and so is subject to the provisions of the Elkins Law as to rebates; the interstate commerce act, though providing that the provisions of the act shall apply to any carrier engaged in the transportation of passengers or property from one state to any other state, having a proviso that the provisions of this act shall not apply to the transportation of property "wholly" within one state. The word "wholly," as there used, imports that such provisions shall apply to any transportation of property which is not wholly within one state. United States v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 152 Fed. 269, 272.

Of straw

A small amount of cotton thread in straw braids will not remove such articles from the provision in the Tariff Act for braids composed "wholly" of straw, where the thread is only used for temporarily tying the ends of the braids to prevent them from unraveling. Judgment, Samuel Schiff & Co. v. United States, 140 Fed. 63.

Straw laces sewn with cotton thread are not within the provision in the Tariff Act for laces "composed wholly" of straw. Schmitz v. United States, 146 Fed. 127-129, 76 C. C. A. 553.

Of tin plate

Small disks produced in the manufacture of tin cans, being a by-product in the process of cutting an aperture for filling, and being of much less value than the tin from which they were cut, are not articles "wholly or partly manufactured from tin plate," under the Tariff Act, but are dutiable as articles of metal, "whether partly or wholly manufactured." Shallus v. United States, 162 Fed. 653, 656, 89 C. C. A. 445.

WHOLLY CONVERTIBLE CAR

A "wholly convertible car" is one where the sides, from floor to roof, are composed of panels and ribs or posts, and which panels may be removed in some way to some place so as to make the car wholly open on the sides. O'Leary v. Utica & M. V. Ry. Co., 139 Fed. 330, 333.

WHOLLY DESTROYED

Property is to be regarded as having been "wholly destroyed" or a "total loss" within the meaning of an insurance contract, no matter how great a portion thereof may remain unconsumed, if it is so injured that it must be torn down, or that what remains cannot be utilized in reconstructing the building without incurring a greater expense than if it were not so utilized. Kinzer v. National Mut. Ins. Co., 127 Pac. 762, 763, 88 Kan. 93, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 121 (citing Insurance Co. v. Heckman, 67 Pac. 879, 64 Kan. 388, 395).

Property is "wholly destroyed" for school purposes by the construction and operation of a railroad, if, after reasonable effort and diligence on the part of the board of education and the teachers to avoid the physical dangers and to overcome the interference from the operation of the trains, it is no longer practicable to conduct the school. So long as these things may be overcome by reasonable effort, the efficiency and safety of the school is only impaired but not wholly destroyed. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co. v. Board of Education of Salt Lake City, 90 Pac. 565, 567, 32 Utah, 305, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 645.

WHOLLY DISABLED

A clause, in an accident policy, providing that by "wholly disabled" shall be understood that the insured is "totally unable" to perform "any part" of the duties of his occupation as merchant, cannot be construed literally, but means inability to perform any substantial part of the business. James v. United States Casualty Co., 88 S. W. 125, 127, 113 Mo. App. 622.

An insured was held to be incapacitated from following his occupation as a supervising builder, within the terms of an accident policy against injury which should "wholly and continuously" disable him from transacting any and every kind of business, where, while supervising the construction of a building, he fell and injured the base of his spine, from which he became unable to conduct his work, and devoted substantially his entire time to obtaining relief from his injury, which developed into a severe injury to his hip and leg, though he was able to give some attention to his correspondence. United States Casualty Co. v. Hanson, 79 Pac. 176, 178, 20 Colo. App. 393.

WHOLLY DUE AND PAYABLE

An administrator gave his surety a bond and warrant in the same sum as the bond for administration, payable on a fixed date. An indorsement recited that the bond was given to indemnify against loss on the administration bond. Judgment by confession was entered on the bond and warrant several years before the obligor's default of the administration bond. Under 19 Del. Laws, c. 778 (Rev. Code 1852, amended to 1893, p. 814, c. 110), a judgment wholly due and payable when entered ceases to be a lien after 10 years. Held, that the bond was not "wholly due and payable" when judgment thereon was entered, within the statute, but that it was an indemnifying bond, thus requiring discharge of a rule to have the judgment declared no longer a lien. Faulkner v. Eversen (Del.) 78 Atl. 879, 882, 7 Pennewill, 245.

WHOLLY OR PARTLY

See Reverse or Affirm Wholly or Partly.

WHOLLY VOID

Where a deed of land is made to a foreign corporation which has not complied with St. 1898, § 1770b, prohibiting a foreign corporation from transacting business, or acquiring, holding, or disposing of property in the state without first complying with the statute, and declaring that every contract relating to property entered into before a compliance with the law shall be "wholly void," the deed is a nullity and a prior mortgagee of the vendor under an unrecorded mortgage may show the fact of noncompliance and take the benefit thereof; the words "wholly void" meaning absolutely void and a nullity. Hanna v. Kelsey Realty Co., 129 N. W. 1080, 1082, 145 Wis. 276, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 355, 140 Am. St. Rep. 1075. The words "wholly void," as used in this statute, mean void absolutely and not simply voidable at the option of the other party to the contract. Ashland Lumber Co. v. Detroit Salt Co., 89 N. W. 904, 908, 114 Wis. 66.

WHORE

WIDEST CHANNEL

The widest expanse of water which can reasonably be called a channel is what is meant by the words "widest channel" in Act Feb. 14, 1859, 11 Stat. 383, c. 33. Washington v. Oregon, 29 Sup. Ct. 631, 632, 214 U. S. 205, 53 L. Ed. 969.

WIDOW

"Widow" implies a lawful marriage, so that where plaintiff was only the putative wife of decedent, who had contracted a bigamous marriage with her, she was not his widow. Vaughan v. Dalton-Lard Lumber Co., 43 South. 926, 927, 928, 119 La. 61 (citing Walton v. Booth, 34 La. Ann. 913; Walker v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co., 34 South. 749, 110 La. 718; Lynch v. Knoop, 43 South. 252, 118 La. 611, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 480, 118 Am. St. Rep. 391, 10 Ann. Cas. 807).

Where insured was coerced into a marriage, and never thereafter cohabited or visited his pretended wife, she was not his widow, within the terms of an insurance certificate, payable to insured's "widow or other heirs." Grand Lodge K. P. of North and South America, Europe, Asia, and Africa v. Smith, 42 South. 89, 89 Miss. 718.

A wife dying and leaving a husband surviving is in no sense a "widow." Chesterfield v. Hoskin, 113 N. W. 647, 649, 133 Wis. 368.

The word "widow" in Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2046, requiring the setting apart of the homestead for the use of the widow and minor children and unmarried daughters, refers to the surviving lawful wife of decedent. Hayworth v. Williams, 116 S. W. 43, 45, 102 Tex. 308, 132 Am. St. Rep. 879.

Transfer Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 869, c. 908) § 221, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 829, c. 368, provides that, when property of the value of less than $10,000 passes by any such transfer to or for the use of any wife or widow of a son, such transfer of property shall not be taxable. Held, that the widow of an adopted son, who under Domestic Relations Law (Laws 1896, p. 227, c. 272) § 64, was a son of the testator, was the "widow of a son," within the meaning of the act. In re Duryea's Estate, 112 N. Y. Supp. 611, 128 App. Div. 205.

A will, after giving real estate to testator's son, provided that if the son, who then had a wife and one child living, should die before testator's wife, the property given to the son should be "equally divided between my said wife and my said son's widow and the child or children, that is, my wife to have one-half thereof and my son's widow and child or children, the other one-half." The son's wife living when the will was made died, and the son married again, and at his death before testator's widow left surviving him the child by his first marriage and his widow. Held, that the term "widow," as used in the will, was not restricted to his wife at the time of the will, but included the wife who survived him. Meeker v. Draffen, 94 N. E. 626, 627, 201 N. Y. 205, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 816, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 930; Same v. Meeker, 121 N. Y. Supp. 1051, 137 App. Div. 537.

Alien

Act Pa. 1891 (P. L. 207), providing for the health and safety of persons employed in and about anthracite mines, in article 17, § 8, declares that for any injury to person or property occasioned by any failure to comply with the act by any owner of any coal mine, etc., a right of action shall accrue to the person injured; and, in case of loss of life, a right of action shall accrue to the "widow" and lineal heirs of the decedent for like recovery for damages for the injury they shall have sustained. Held, that the word "widow" construed in connection with Act April 15, 1851 (P. L. 674), and Act April 26, 1855 (P. L. 309), giving a right of action to a "widow" for the wrongful death of her husband, did not include a nonresident alien widow, and hence such widow who was an Italian subject and had resided in Italy since before July 11, 1907, was not entitled to recover under the Act of 1891 for the negligent death of her husband in a coal mine in Pennsylvania, notwithstanding such a right might be enforced under the laws of Italy. Debitulla v. Lehigh & Wilkesbarre Coal Co., 174 Fed. 886, 889.

Divorced wife

Where a member of a benefit society designated his wife as the beneficiary, and thereafter the parties were divorced, she could not be considered as his "wife" at the time of his death, nor was she his "widow." Farra v. Braman (Ind.) 82 N. E. 926, 929.

An application for a benefit certificate was made subject to the association's constitution and laws then in force and that might thereafter be adopted. A subsequent by-law provided that in case a wife is designated as beneficiary, and subsequent thereto becomes divorced from the member, the divorce should annul the designation. Pub. Acts 1893, p. 186, No. 119, § 1, relative to such associations, provides that payment of benefits shall be made only to the widow, children, etc., of the member, provided that if the member have no such relatives he may designate any other person or his estate as beneficiary. Held that, where a member designated his wife as beneficiary, and was divorced from her at the time of his death, she was neither his wife nor his "widow," and therefore was not entitled to benefits under the certificate. Dahlin v. Knights of Modern Maccabees, 115 N. W. 975, 977, 151 Mich. 644.

Testatrix bequeathed the residue of her estate in trust, one share to be invested and the income paid semiannually to complainant for life, and, if she should die either before or after testatrix and her daughter should survive her, the income to be similarly paid to the daughter for life. By a codicil she provided that on complainant becoming a "widow," or should she be a "widow" at testatrix's decease, the principal should be paid her absolutely for her own use, and, if she should die before her husband and their daughter should survive her, on the daughter's attaining 21 years of age one-half of the share should go to her and the other one-half to others. At the execution and probate of the will complainant was the wife of A. G., but was subsequently divorced from him and married C., who died in January, 1907, after which A. G. died. Held, that the codicil did not require that complainant be the "widow" of A. G. in order to be entitled to such share of the estate so bequeathed, and that she was a "widow" within such codicil. Crocheron v. Fleming, 70 Atl. 691, 692, 74 N. J. Eq. 567.

The word "widow," used in statutes with regard to dower, simply means the person whose right to dower has accrued. Where a wife obtained a judgment for separation in New York, and thereafter procured a divorce in Kansas on the ground of cruelty, without personal service on the husband or his appearance, and afterwards married, she cannot recover dower in lands thereafter acquired by the husband, or which he owned at the time of the divorce. Voke v. Platt, 96 N. Y. Supp. 725, 726, 48 Misc. Rep. 273.

Marriage of widow

The term "widow," under Gould's Dig. c. 68, § 29, entitling certain persons to homesteads, and under section 30, making such homesteads exempt while occupied by the widow, etc., of such persons, includes one who has remarried on death of her former husband. Davis v. Neal, 140 S. W. 278, 279, 100 Ark. 399.

Widower

The exemption allowed by Ky. St. 1903, § 1403, subsec. 5, to be set apart to "the widow or infant child" from the estate of an intestate, to the infant child, if no "mother" survives, and to the "widow" if there be no infant children, or if none reside in the family with the "widow," does not apply to the husband and children of the intestate wife.

Thaxton's Guardian v. Walters' Adm'r, 113 S. W. 118, 119, 130 Ky. 235.

As used in Rev. St. 1899, § 2938, providing that, when a wife shall die without any child or other descendants in being capable of inheriting, her "widower" shall be entitled to one-half of the real and personal estate belonging to the wife at the time of her death, etc., the term "widower" means one who has been reduced to that condition by the ordinary and usual vicissitudes of life, and not one who, by felonious act, has himself created that condition, and hence where a husband murdered his wife, and three hours afterward killed himself, he did not upon his wife's death acquire under the section any estate in her property to which his heirs could succeed upon his death. Perry v. Strawbridge, 108 S. W. 641, 648, 209 Mo. 621, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 244, 123 Am. St. Rep. 610, 14 Ann. Cas. 92.

The term "wife" necessarily implies a lawful marriage; thus, where plaintiff was induced to enter in good faith into a bigamous marriage with decedent, she was not entitled to sue for his wrongful death under Civ. Code, art. 2315, conferring the right to sue for damages for the death of a husband on wife or widow. Vaughan v. Dalton-Lard Lumber Co., 43 South. 926, 928, 119 La. 61.

Under a will providing that at the death of testator's son his estate should belong to his son's "wife and children then living, in equal shares," the second wife of the son was entitled to a share of the estate as the "wife" referred to in the will, though the former wife was living at the death of testator, and died thereafter. In re Harris, 136 N. Y. Supp. 711, 712, 152 App. Div. 52.

Unless there is something in a will indicating the contrary, a gift to the "wife" of a designated married man is a gift to the wife existing at the making of the will, and not to the one he may subsequently marry, but a gift to the "widow" of a designated person includes such wife as may survive him. Meeker v. Meeker, 121 N. Y. Supp. 1051, 1053, 137 App. Div. 537; Meeker v. Draffen, 94 N. E. 626, 201 N. Y. 205, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 816, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 930.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 333, requiring that the application for certiorari shall distinctly set forth the error, a petition for certiorari to review orders of the probate court appointing one administratrix, on the theory that she was the putative wife of decedent and awarding her allowances and the homestead, which alleges that the court erred, in that she was not the surviving wife of decedent, is, in the absence of any special exception, sufficient to raise the question whether she was the putative wife; the word "wife" in the petition being used in its generic sense as including a putative, as well as a lawful, wife. Walker v. Walker's Estate (Tex.) 136 S. W. 1145, 1148.

Where a mutual benefit association was empowered to make provision for widows and any person dependent on deceased members, and the policy was issued to deceased, payable to "Ella J. Palmer (wife)," the term "wife" was merely descriptio personæ, and her dependency on insured was not controlled by the legality of the marital relation existing between herself and assured. James v. Supreme Council of the Royal Arcanum, 130 Fed. 1014, 1016.

The term "wife" means a lawful wife. A woman has an insurable interest in the life of a man with whom she has for years been living as his wife, though there has been no marriage ceremony, where he has openly and notoriously recognized her as his wife. Where the beneficiary of a life policy, which was obtained by decedent voluntarily for her benefit, had in good faith married him in the belief that he was divorced from his first wife, and lived with him many years without being informed that there was even a doubt of the legality of her marriage until after his death, though his first wife and daughters had every opportunity to advise her of it long before his death, and the beneficiary and her children were dependent on decedent for support, the beneficiary, independently of the validity of the marriage, had an insurable interest in decedent's life, and the contract could not be regarded as within the rule against wagering policies. Scott v. Scott (Ky.) 77 S. W. 1122, 1124.

Where a fraternal relief association which insures its members only for benefit of their wives, children, heirs, and other similar relations accepts assessments upon the policy or certificate issued to a member and payable to a named person as his "wife," and the member and such woman are at the time of his death living together as husband and wife in the honest belief that they are lawfully married, the policy is not void, but the designated beneficiary upon insured's death is entitled to the proceeds, though when insured contracted the marriage with the beneficiary there existed between him and another woman a prior undissolved marriage which he believed was terminated by death, the woman whom he had previously married having departed and not having been heard of for over seven years, the word "wife" as used in the policy embracing the woman living with him as his wife in view of the spirit of the plan of insurance and the purposes of the policy. Grand Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Barnard, 70 S. E. 678-683, 9 Ga. App. 71.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 16, declaring that words and phrases must be construed according to the context and the approved usage of the language, but that technical words and phrases or those which have acquired a peculiar meaning are to be construed according to such peculiar meaning, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1474, providing that if a homestead, selected by the husband and wife or either during coverture and recorded while both were living, was selected from the community or from the separate property of the one selecting it or joining in its selection, it vests, on the death of the husband or wife, absolutely in the survivor. The words "husband" and "wife," as used in section 1474, mean, respectively, a man who has a wife and a woman who has a husband, and do not mean an unmarried man or woman; and the word "survivor," as therein used, refers to the husband and wife as such, and means that, upon the death of the husband as a husband or the wife as a wife, the homestead shall vest absolutely in the survivor of such marriage relation, so that the survivor must be a surviving spouse, and the surviving individual after the dissolution of the marriage is not within the statute. Zanone v. Sprague, 116 Pac. 989, 993, 16 Cal. App. 333.

A member of a benefit society designated in his application his "wife," E., as the beneficiary of the fund. Held that, after the parties were divorced, E. could not be considered as the "wife" of the member at the time of his death, nor was she his widow. Farra v. Braman (Ind.) 82 N. E. 926, 929.

Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 7298a, subjects to a penalty any male person who, having become civilly or criminally liable for bastardy or seduction, shall marry the wronged female with intent to escape prosecution, and afterwards maltreat, desert, or fail to provide for her. Section 7298b provides that the action shall be instituted in the name of the state on the relation of the "wife," but such "wife" shall not be liable for costs, except, etc. Section 7298d provides the practice to be followed, assimilating it to that in bastardy proceedings, and permits the defendant to be released from jail after a year's imprisonment if he is unable to satisfy the judgment, and the judge deems him sufficiently punished. Held, that a divorce obtained by the wife after the husband's desertion, and before the institution of suit under these statutes, was no defense thereto. The word "wife" is used in the statute to designate and identify the person who may sue as relatrix, and was not intended to fix the status of the person having the right to sue. State ex rel. Lannoy v. Lannoy, 65 N. E. 1052, 1053, 30 Ind. App. 335.

The words "my wife," prefixed to the name of a devisee in a will, held not to imply any condition that the beneficiary shall remain his "wife" but to be a word of description only. Testator devised a legacy to his wife M. B. Held not to lapse, though the wife, after the date of the will, obtained a divorce; the word "wife" being descriptive only. Act June 4, 1879 (P. L. 88), providing that a will is to be construed as of the time of the death of the testator with reference to any property embraced in it, does not apply to a legacy to testator's "wife," though she obtained a divorce prior to testator's death. In re Jones' Estate, 60 Atl. 915, 916, 211 Pa. 364, 69 L. ### WIFEHOOD

Under Const. art. 16, § 51, and Rev. St. 1895, art. 2396, defining a homestead, the homestead right of a married woman rests upon the fact that she has the status of a wife, and that as such she actually used and occupied the 200-acre homestead for the purpose of a home, at the time of its attempted alienation, and did not join in the execution of the conveyance or in any way assent thereto; the term "marriage" meaning the civil status of a man and woman lawfully united in the relation of husband and wife, and "wifehood" being defined as the state of being a wife. McCracken v. Taylor (Tex.) 146 S. W. 693, 695.

WILD

WILD AND FOREST LANDS

Testator owned in his lifetime an undivided interest of land in the Adirondack forest, consisting of about 854 acres covered with forest, except one acre and one-half on the shore of a pond, where buildings had been constructed by the former owner, who had used the property as a fish and game preserve, about one-half acre of the acre and a half being used for garden purposes. Testator also owned other conceded forest lands. By his will his executors were directed to convey to plaintiff and two other persons, all his "wild and forest lands." Held that, at the time of testator's death, all of this land was wild and forest land within the meaning of the devise. Newcombe v. Ostrander, 122 N. Y. Supp. 823, 826, 66 Misc. Rep. 103.

WILD AND UNCIVILIZED COUNTRY

Where an accident to insured occurred in a sawmill camp, in which some 300 people were residing, distant about 35 miles from a railroad station in the province of Ontario, Dominion of Canada, it was not in a "wild and uncivilized country," within an accident policy excepting injuries sustained in such a place. United States Casualty Co. v. Hanson, 79 Pac. 176, 177, 20 Colo. App. 393.

WILD ANIMAL

As property, see Personal Property; Property.

WILD-CAT BUSINESS

The term "wild cat," used by a solicitor of an insurance company, in reference to the business of another insurance company, implied that the latter company was an irresponsible and predatory concern, and, where such charge was false, the latter company was justified in publishing a statement that such solicitor was guilty of misrepresentation and fraudulent conduct. Wells v. Payne, 133 S. W. 575, 576, 141 Ky. 578.

WILD-CAT TERRITORY

In the parlance of oil men, a new field is designated as "wild-cat territory." Lowther Oil Co. v. Miller-Sibley Oil Co., 44 S. E. 433, 435, 53 W. Va. 501, 97 Am. St. Rep. 1027.

WILD-CAT TRAIN

A freight train not scheduled is known as a "wild cat." Kelly v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 84 N. E. 801, 802, 192 N. Y. 203.

WILD DEER

See, also, Deer.

"Wild deer" are deer roaming at large in the forest and used for food. "Deer," as used in Game Law 1896 (Acts 1896, p. 74), prohibiting the killing of any wild deer between certain dates, and the selling of any game, bird, or animal or any part of either, whether dead or alive, relates to wild deer, such as would be commonly denominated "game," and hence a showing that accused sold the meat of a deer without showing that the animal was "wild" was insufficient. Crosby v. State, 48 S. E. 913, 914, 121 Ga. 198.

WILD GAME

The fish within the waters of the state constitute the most important constituent of that species of property commonly designated as "wild game," the general right and ownership of which is in the people of the state, as in England it was in the king; and the right and power to protect and preserve such property for the common use and benefit is one of the recognized prerogatives of the sovereign coming from the common law and preserved and expressly provided for by statutes of the Union. People v. Truckee Lumber Co., 48 Pac. 374, 116 Cal. 397, 399, 39 L. R. A. 581, 58 Am. St. Rep. 183.

WILD LAND

See Wild and Forest Lands.

The word "wild" is used interchangeably with the words "unimproved and uninclosed," relative to lands claimed under Kirby's Dig. § 5057, relating to adverse possession, and a finding that lands were wild was sufficient to show that they were uninclosed and unimproved. Fenton v. Collum, 150 S. W. 140, 141, 104 Ark. 624.

As used in Rev. St. c. 62, § 9, providing that, when a divorce is decreed to a wife, she shall be entitled to one-third, in common and undivided, of all of the husband's estate except wild lands, the words "wild lands" do not include a wood lot or other land used with a farm or dwelling house, although uninclosed. Leavitt v. Tasker, 76 Atl. 953, 955, 107 Me. 33.

Land valuable for pasturage during the summer, or valuable for a summer resort as laid out by the deceased owner, and which may be occupied and improved by the widow without committing waste, is not "wild land," within Rev. Laws, c. 132, § 3, declaring that a widow shall not be entitled to dower in wild land, and the same may be set off to her as dower. Goodspeed v. Lawrence, 94 N. E. 395, 396, 208 Mass. 258.

"Improved lands," in the sense in which the phrase is used in Civ. Code 1895, § 3065, which provides that "the right of private way over another's land may arise * * * from prescription by seven years' uninterrupted use through improved lands, or twenty years' use over 'wild lands,'" comprehends the entire tract, though only part thereof be in actual cultivation. The woodland on such a tract is not wild land, but, in connection with the portion which is cultivated, constitutes a single tract of "improved land." If a tract of land is cultivated in part, and a road through the entire tract traverses both field and woodland, the woodland adjacent to the field is not to be treated as "wild land." The land which the statute designates as wild is that which is located separate and apart from lands which are partly in cultivation. It is a segregated tract of land, remaining in a state of nature, uninclosed, and with no indications of use by the owner. The woodland of a plantation is not "wild land" simply because it is uninclosed, where it adjoins lands which are in cultivation, and the woodland in its natural state is retained by the owner, either for plantation uses, or because he prefers to defer the time for bringing it into cultivation. Hopkins v. Roach, 56 S. E. 303, 304, 127 Ga. 153 (citing Watkins v. Country Club, 47 S. E. 538, 120 Ga. 45; Kirkland v. Pitman, 50 S. E. 117, 122 Ga. 256).

See Wild-Cat Train.

A train which does not run by any schedule, but under special instructions, is called, among railroad men, a "wild train." Abend v. Terre Haute & I. R. R. Co., 111 Ill. 202, 207, 53 Am. Rep. 616.

WILL

See Good Will; Hiring at Will; I Will. My will, see My.
See, also, Volonte.

"Will" is sometimes used synonymously with choice, wish, pleasure, but it is also used frequently in the sense of command, direction, determination, and resolution. It has, when founded in testamentary papers, a universally received mandatory significance. A testament is "a just sentence of our will, touching that we would have done after our death." McRee's Adm'r's v. Means, 34 Ala. 349, 365 (quoting and adopting a definition in 1 Swin. Wills 4).

The word "will" is strictly applicable to the disposition of real property. Barker v. Town of Petersburg, 82 N. E. 996, 997, 41 Ind. App. 447 (citing Mills v. Franklin, 28 N. E. 60, 128 Ind. 444, 447).

In a clause of a will, giving testator's widow power to divide certain property according to her "will," the word "will" means "according to her choice, decision, or discretion," and not "according to her last will and testament," and hence the widow had power to make division by deed. Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. Garrett, 67 S. E. 903, 904, 85 S. C. 543.

As used in the certificate of a member of a beneficiary society, providing that he was "entitled to participate in the death beneficiary fund to the extent of $1,000, which sum shall at his death be paid to the person or persons named in his will as herein indicated," etc., the word "will," as applied to the manner of disposing of the benefit fund should not be construed in its technical sense, but should be held as the equivalent of "wish," "desire," or "direction." Prokes v.

Bohemian Roman Catholic First Cent. Union, 165 Ill. App. 105, 107.

Testator devised certain property absolutely to certain of his sons, with a provision that it was his "will and desire" that none of the real estate so devised should be sold until the oldest son was 35, etc. Held, that the word "will" in such connection amounted to a restriction equivalent to the expression "I direct," and that the devisees were therefore incompetent to convey the property prior to the time specified, though their interest was subject to their debts as expressly provided by St. 1903, §§ 1681, 2355. Girdler v. Girdler (Ky.) 113 S. W. 835, 836.

A testator in one item of his will stated, "I give and bequeath to my son" certain specified items of personal property, "and will that he should stay with his mother until he is 21 years old." The word "will," as used in such item, was intended as a desire or request of his son that he should live with his mother during the period named; that being the natural and only construction that can be given to the word as used in that item of the will. Hume v. McHaffie, 81 N. E. 117, 118, 40 Ind. App. 703.

WILL (Auxiliary Verb)

"The words 'intends to appeal,' 'will appeal,' or 'give notice of their application to appeal' are equivalent to and have the same effect as the more direct phraseology of the statute ('appeals from the judgment'); that is, each will effect an appeal. Of course if the phrases above cited are sufficient to effect the appeal, the words 'has appealed' will likewise perform the same office." James v. James, 77 Pac. 1082, 35 Wash. 655 (citing Ranahan v. Gibbons, 62 Pac. 773, 23 Wash. 255; In re Murphy's Estate, 66 Pac. 424, 26 Wash. 222; Brown v. Calloway, 75 Pac. 630, 34 Wash. 175).

An instruction in a personal injury action that the jury, in assessing the damages, may consider the character of the injury, if any, sustained by plaintiff, the pain and suffering, if any, endured, and "which will be endured," if any, as the result of the injuries, if any, etc., properly limits a recovery for the suffering endured, and for such suffering as the evidence discloses he will endure in the future, since the word "will," as employed in the instruction, must have been understood in its proper sense as referring to the unconditional existence of the fact, and not in the sense of "may," which imports a mere possibility. Scaally v. W. T. Garratt & Co., 104 Pac. 325, 326, 332, 11 Cal. App. 138.

As imperative or mandatory

The word "will," as used in section 1 of an act approved March 18, 1911 (Laws 1910-11, c. 107), entitled "An act amending section 2, art. 1, chapter 66 of the Session Laws of 1910," and providing "any citizen of the state may, within 10 days, by written notice to the Secretary of State and to the party or parties who filed such petition, protest against the same, at which time he will hear testimony and arguments for and against the sufficiency of such petition," means "shall" and is mandatory, and, being addressed to a public official, excludes the idea of discretion. Russell v. Harrison, 124 Pac. 762, 763, 33 Okl. 225.

A written instrument, no matter what its form may be, which is of a testamentary character, is a "will," and, if not executed as required by statute, is void. Thomas v. Singer Sewing Mach. Co., 117 N. W. 155, 156, 105 Minn. 88.

The term "will," as applied to a testament, means in ordinary conception the formal instrument by which a person disposes of his property to take effect at his death. In re Peirce's Estate, 115 Pac. 835, 837, 63 Wash. 437.

A "will" is an instrument by which a person makes a disposition of his property to take effect after his death. Noble v. Fickes, 82 N. E. 950, 951, 230 Ill. 594, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1203, 12 Ann. Cas. 282 (citing 1 Jarm. Wills, 26; Schouler, Wills, p. 1; 1 Redf. Wills [4th Ed.] c. 2, § 2, par. 1; Robinson v. Brewster, 30 N. E. 683, 140 Ill. 649, 33 Am. St. Rep. 265).

A "will" is an instrument by which a person makes a disposition of his property, to take effect after his decease, and which is in its own nature ambulatory and revocable during his life. Blacksher Co. v. Northrup, 57 South. 743, 744, 176 Ala. 190, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 454; Rice's Adm'r v. Rice, 68 Ala. 216, 218 (quoting and adopting a definition in 1 Jarm. Wills, 1); Daniel v. Hill, 52 Ala. 430, 436.

A "will" is an instrument executed by a person of full age and sound mind, for the purpose of disposing of his property after his death, which instrument must be signed by him in the presence of two witnesses, who must sign in his presence and in the presence of each other. In re Brown's Will, 120 N. W. 667, 672, 143 Iowa, 649.

The word "will," in Rev. Codes, § 4736, declaring that the execution of a codicil referring to a previous will has the effect to republish the will as modified by the codicil, means a document which itself has testamentary character. In re Noyes' Estate, 106 Pac. 355, 357, 40 Mont. 231.

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 1322, which provides that a will in writing shall not be revoked except by subsequent will in writing or by burning, etc., the word "will" is used in the sense of a writing executed with the solemnity of a will, and where a testator in a writing, executed with all the formalities required by section 1320, but which makes no disposition of property, declares a revocation of a former will, the writing operates as a revocation. In re Peirce's Estate, 115 Pac. 835, 837, 63 Wash. 437.

"The word 'will' has a technical meaning, and implies an instrument executed in conformity with prescribed formalities, but subject to alteration or cancellation at the volition of the maker. It is his will because his own mind, untrammelled and free, has determined to give the disposition of his property a certain designated direction. It does not take effect until his mental and physical powers have been destroyed by disuse and dissolution, and, while he has a disposing mind, it is under his control." Robbins v. Smith, 73 N. E. 1051, 1055, 72 Ohio St. 1 (quoting and adopting the definition in Wilks v. Burns, 60 Md. 64).

"A 'will' is defined by Johnson, J., in Tomkins v. Tomkins (S. C.) 1 Bailey, 96, 19 Am. Dec. 656, to be a declaration of a man as to the manner in which he would have his estate disposed of after his death. Jarman defines it as an instrument by which a person makes a disposition of his property, to take effect after his decease. 1 Jarm. Wills, 16. At the present day, and under the jurisprudence of our state, there is no doubt that, as the word 'will' is employed in our statutes, it is not limited to instruments which appoint an executor, for it is well settled that there may be a valid 'will' without the appointment of an executor, and our statutes provide for the administration of the estate in a case where no executor is named in the will. It is equally clear that the word 'will,' as used in our statutes, includes instruments that relate to real estate only. Accordingly the most recent definition that I have found (29 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law, 124) defines a will as the legal declaration of a man's intention which he wills to be performed after his death touching either the disposition of his property, the guardianship of his children, or the administration of his estate." In the settling of an account by an administrator, he may set off against the share due the next of kin a debt due by such heir and contracted during the lifetime of the decedent. In re Robinson, 92 N. Y. Supp. 967, 970, 45 Misc. Rep. 551.

The steps prescribed by the statute to be taken in executing a "will" must be shown to have concurred before an instrument of testamentary character will be recognized as a valid will; and an instrument, which is in form a will, is inoperative and void as such, where not attested by two or more credible witnesses. Belgarde v. Carter (Tex.) 146 S. W. 964, 965.

"A 'will' is an instrument by which a person makes a disposition of his property to take effect after his death." An instrument by which a married woman leases premises to her husband during his life, rent free, such lease to take effect from its date, cannot on her death be probated as a will. In re Ogle's Estate, 72 N. W. 389, 97 Wis. 56 (quoting Schouler, Wills, § 1).

A "mere will" is one which takes effect on the death of testator, and is ambulatory during his lifetime. A "mere will" is a composite and superserviceable instrument, which becomes fixed, stationary, and irrevocable in its clause of revocation, while the remainder is ambulatory. An instrument is a will, or it is not. All wills are "mere" wills; a "mere" will is a perfect will. We cannot conceive of such a thing as perfection plus. All parts of wills must remain ambulatory during the lifetime of the testator. Bates v. Hacking, 68 Atl. 622, 628, 29 R. I. 1, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 937.

"The statute (Gen. Statutes, p. 369, § 2) requires a 'will' to be 'in writing, subscribed by the testator, and attested by three witnesses, all of them subscribing in his presence and in the presence of each other.' The charge declares the law to be that the signature of a testator to a will is not duly attested unless at the time of attestation the attesting witness knows that the instrument is a will. This attributes too much meaning to the word 'attestation'; more than has been given to it by courts which have been called upon to define it, where used in similar statutes." Appeal of Canada, 47 Conn. 450, 460.

Under a statute declaring that all devises shall continue in force unless altered by some other will or codicil or other writing of the deviser, signed in the presence of three or more witnesses declaring such alteration, an instrument purporting to be a "will," but executed in the presence of two witnesses only, and containing no clause of revocation, will not revoke a former will, although it purports to dispose of all the property of the party signing it in a manner different from and inconsistent with the disposition in the first will, nor would it operate as a revocation if it contained a clause of revocation. Reese v. Newport Probate Court, 9 R. I. 434, 435.

An instrument, reciting that the person executing it gave and bequeathed to a person named land described, and declared that on the death of the person named without issue the legacy should be returned to the children of the person executing it, and signed and sealed, and delivered to a third person and witnessed by three attesting witnesses, is a "will" within Civ. Code 1902, § 2476, providing that wills of real property shall be in writing, and signed by the party devising the same, and shall be attested by three or more credible witnesses. Rountree v. Rountree, 67 S. E. 471, 476, 85 S. C. 383.

The statute of wills, though it does not alter the law admitting extrinsic proof to identify the subject of a bequest, nor the law treating a codicil as attached to a validly executed will, does limit the power of testamentary disposition to a writing containing in itself the bequest intended to be made, denoted by the language used therein and signed and attested with prescribed formalities, and an instrument executed by decedent, directing a disposition of her property at her death in accordance with a certain deed of trust, was insufficient to constitute a "will" though signed and attested as required in the execution of wills. Hatheway v. Smith, 65 Atl. 1058, 1059, 79 Conn. 506, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 310, 9 Ann. Cas. 99.

A written instrument reciting that according to the last wishes of F., in the presence of A. and B., he makes the following statement: "Funeral expenses paid first. Turn his affairs over to M. & B. to assist in the selling of the same and all household goods to be equally divided between her and A. John Tapp to be fully paid for his trouble. And enough of his property sold to pay all debts. The balance to be equally divided between" two persons named and signed by A. and B.—does not meet the requirements of a "will" under Gen. St. 1901, § 7938, and is insufficient to convey the real estate to the beneficiaries named. Osborne v. Atkinson, 94 Pac. 796, 798, 77 Kan. 435.

An instrument, entitled a contract and designating the parties thereto as parties of the first and second parts, provided that the party of the second part agreed to support the party of the first part during the balance of her life, and that in consideration thereof, the party of the first part should convey certain real property by deed to the party of the second part. This property was held by the party of the first part under a provision of her husband's will which authorized her to dispose of it by will with the consent of her husband's executors. It was further provided by the contract that all the residuary estate of the party of the first part should on her death be paid by her legal representatives to the party of the second part. Held, that the writing was a "will." Heaston v. Krieg, 77 N. E. 805-807, 187 Ind. 101, 119 Am. St. Rep. 475.

Decedent acquired, through his wife's death, corporate stock which was her individual property, and thereafter he wrote to his son: "Through your mother, whose wishes I have tried to follow, and shall continue to do, you to-day are entitled to quite a property. I have transferred a portion of it to you. * * * Your mother's stock * * * I have retained in such manner that the income goes to me, but so that neither your creditors can get it * * * nor can my creditors touch it." On the same day the father transferred the stock to himself as attorney for the son. The certificate was never delivered to the son, and he had no knowledge of its existence until after his father's death; the father having in the meantime voted the stock and applied the dividends to his own use until he canceled the certificate and issued one without consideration to another to avoid "double taxation," she subsequently transferring the stock to him in his own name, which was so retained until his death. Seven years after the writing of the first letter to his son he wrote: "I have no funds * * * belonging to you in trust or that have accumulated for your benefit from your mother's estate." Held, that the transaction could not be sustained as a testamentary disposition of the stock, though the father's subsequent dominion over the same and his denial that he was in any manner trustee for the same had never been made. Paine v. Paine, 67 Atl. 127, 129, 28 R. I. 307, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 547.

Codicil included

The word "will," in its most comprehensive sense, means the "will" as first executed, together with all codicils, be they many or few, which have been added thereto, and the meaning and effect of which, taken together, is reaffirmed or changed by the last codicil, and the "will" so changed or reaffirmed speaks from the date of its republication by the last codicil. Pardee v. Kuster, 89 Pac. 572, 573, 15 Wyo. 368.

As color of title

See Color of Title.

As constituting attested order

See Attested Order.

As conveyance, contract, or gift

See Conveyance.

See, also, Contract.

A "contract" is an agreement between the parties, while a "will" is no contract at all, but a unilateral disposition of property. Isler v. Griffin, 67 S. E. 854, 855, 134 Ga. 192.

Deed distinguished

Did the maker intend any estate or interest whatever to vest before his death and upon the execution of the paper? Or, on the other hand, did he intend that all the interest and estate should take effect only after his death? If the former, it is a deed; if the latter, a will. And it is immaterial whether he calls it a will or a deed. The instrument will have operation according to its legal effect. McLain v. Garrison, 89 S. W. 284, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 431 (citing Gillham v. Mustin, 42 Ala. 366; Trawick v. Davis, 5 South. 83, 85 Ala. 345).

"The general characteristics which distinguish deeds from wills have been repeatedly declared; yet no definite, uniform test has been stated by which to determine the character and operation of each particular instrument, and none can well be. The intention of the maker is the ultimate object of inquiry, whether it was intended to be ambulatory and revocable, or to create rights and interests at the time of execution which are irrevocable. If the instrument cannot be revoked, defeated, or impaired by the act of the grantor, it is a deed; but if the estate, title, or interest is dependent on the death of the testator—if in him resides the unqualified power of revocation—it is a 'will.' " An instrument on its face purporting to be a deed, though there was evidence that the grantor told the draftsman that he wished to make a will, in the absence of any other proof from which a contrary intention could be inferred, is a deed, provided there has been a valid delivery. Griswold v. Griswold, 42 South. 554, 555, 148 Ala. 239, 121 Am. St. Rep. 64 (citing Crocker v. Smith, 10 South. 258, 94 Ala. 295, 16 L. R. A. 576; Jordan v. Jordan, 65 Ala. 306).

To constitute a "will," the instrument must be one which is not by its terms sufficient to convey a present interest in the property, and the provision in a deed reserving to the grantors and the survivor of them the use and occupation of the premises, and providing that the full title and enjoyment thereof "shall only become operative on the death of the survivor of the grantors," does not change the nature of the instrument to that of a will, as a present interest passed by delivery of the deed. In re McIntyre's Estate, 120 N. W. 587, 588, 156 Mich. 240.

A will is "an instrument by which a person makes a disposition of his property to take effect after his decease, which is in its own nature ambulatory and revocable during his life. It is this ambulatory quality which forms the characteristics of wills, for though a disposition by deed may postpone the possession or enjoyment or even the vesting, until the death of the disposing party, yet the postponement is in such case produced by the express terms, and does not result from the nature, of the instrument." Consequently an instrument whereby a husband conveys to his wife all his property, stipulating that the same shall be void during the husband's life, and then to become effective on his death without court process of any kind, is a deed and not a "will". In re Hall's Estate, 84 Pac. 839, 840, 149 Cal. 143.

The rule is that if a paper passes no interest in the lifetime of the maker, whatever may be its form, if it is operative only upon his death, it is a "will," and to be effective must be probated. On the other hand, the object of all construction is to arrive at the intention of the parties, and their intention, where it is apparent on the face of the papers, will be carried into effect, if it can be fairly done under its terms. The law favors the vesting of estates, and it prefers a construction of an instrument that will give it some effect to one which will give it no effect. A deed to the grantor's wife and son recited that it was executed in order that the grantees might be provided for after the grantor's death; "that is, at the time of the death of the first party," the wife "is to have and to hold for life the property, and at her death the property is the property of" the son "to have and to hold to him and his heirs forever." Held, that there was a present grant with reservation of a life estate in the grantor, and not a testamentary disposition. Ecklar's Adm'r v. Robinson (Ky.) 96 S. W. 845, 846.

"A 'will' is an instrument by which a person makes a disposition of his property to take effect after his decease, and which is, in its own nature ambulatory and revocable during his life. It is this ambulatory quality which forms the characteristics of wills, for though a disposition by deed may postpone the possession or enjoyment, or even the vesting, until the death of the disposing party, yet the postponement is, in such case, produced by the express terms, and does not result from the nature of the instrument. Thus, if a man, by deed, limit lands to the use of himself for life, with remainder to the use of A. in fee, the effect upon usufructuary enjoyment is precisely the same as if he should, by his will, make an immediate devise of such lands to A. in fee, and yet the case fully illustrates the distinction in question, for, in the former instance, A., immediately on the execution of the deed, becomes entitled to a remainder in fee, though it is not to take effect in possession until the decease of the settlor, while, in the latter, he would take no interest whatever until the decease of the testator should have called the instrument into operation." Nor does the fact that a deed of trust contains a full power of revocation render the instrument testamentary. Robb v. Washington & Jefferson College, 78 N. E. 359, 361, 185 N. Y. 485 (quoting and adopting definition in Jarm. Wills, p. 17).

The test whether a writing is a will or deed is the animus testandi, and, where the maker of an instrument intends a disposition which is in legal effect testamentary, the writing made will be held a "will"; but if he merely intends to convey a present estate or interest the instrument is a "deed." Where a person on his deathbed sent for a justice of the peace to prepare an instrument disposing of all his property, an instrument prepared by such scrivener, which was in form and substance a will, stating that it is "my last will," etc., and mentioning no consideration, expresses an intention to devise rather than to convey, and must be held a will rather than a deed. That an instrument in the form of a will, and intended to be a will, was invalid as such for a failure to have it attested by two credible witnesses would not of itself transform it into a deed. Belgarde v. Carter (Tex.) 146 S. W. 964, 965, 967.

A paper in the form of a deed, attested as a deed, and delivered to a named grantee, conveying certain property, together with all the rights and privileges thereunto belonging, "at my death forever in fee simple," is not testamentary. Kyle v. Kyle, 57 S. E. 748, 749, 128 Ga. 387.

Where an instrument contained the usual words of conveyance, having premises, habendum, tenendum, reddendum, condition, warranty, and covenants, and was not authenticated as a will, but was acknowledged as a deed, it must be accepted as a deed, the grant being in the present tense, for a will is an instrument which vests no present interest, but only appoints what is to be done after the death of the maker. Taylor v. Purdy, 151 S. W. 45, 46, 151 Ky. 82.

A deed in which the grantor's wife joined, which stipulates that the "grantors * * * reserve the use * * * of said premises for * * * their natural lives and the title of said grantees * * * shall become absolute only on the death of" the grantor and wife, is a "deed," and not a "will"; the quoted clause only reserving a life estate in the grantor and wife. White v. Willard, 83 N. E. 954, 957, 232 Ill. 464.

An instrument conveying land "in consideration of the sum of $1 and other valuable considerations that" the defendant "shall look after my welfare and business when so required to do," "to take effect and be of force after my death," is not a "will," but a deed of a remainder interest. Rogers v. Rogers (Miss.) 43 South. 434 (citing Baum v. Lynn, 18 South. 428, 72 Miss. 932, 30 L. R. A. 441).

Testator and wife executed warranty deeds conveying their real property to their sons and sons-in-law which were delivered to W. to be delivered to the grantees after the death of the wife. On the same day testator executed a will reciting that he and his wife had sold their real estate to their heirs and deeded the same to them, with instructions that the wife should have one-half of the crop annually raised on certain of the property, etc. Held, that such deeds were not testamentary in character, but were operative of their own force independent of the will. Schillinger v. Bawek, 112 N. W. 210, 213, 135 Iowa, 131.

An instrument from a husband to his wife, containing apt words of conveyance, and directing her to hold the property on certain trusts for the grantor, the trustee, and the grantor's children, and reserving a right to direct conveyances by the trustee to others and a power to revoke the entire instrument was a "deed" and not a "testament." "To determine the character of an instrument as to its being a 'will' or a 'deed,' it is necessary to ascertain the intention of the maker from the whole instrument, read in the light of surrounding circumstances. If the intention, at the time of the execution of the instrument, was to convey a present estate, though the position be postponed until after his death, it is a 'deed'; but if the intention was that it should not convey any vested right or interest, but should be revocable during his life, it is a will." Cribbs v. Walker, 85 S. W. 244, 245, 74 Ark. 104 (quoting and adopting definition in Bunch v. Nicks, 7 S. W. 563, 50 Ark. 367).

Decedent executed an instrument in consideration of love and affection and $10, granting certain described premises on the condition that: "If I, the said C. A., outlive the said A. J. [his wife], the land reverts back to me in fee. That if I should die first then the said A. J. shall have this land for her lifetime for her use and support, and at her death said land to go in fee to C. L., my son. In connection with this I give all my live stock to go to her at my death." The instrument was acknowledged and delivered as of date, but not recorded until after the death of the grantor. Held that, considering the fact that the grantor was an old man and died within six months after the execution of the instrument together with his intention as gathered from the instrument, the instrument would be construed as a testamentary disposition of land and not a deed, under Rev. St. 1899, § 4596, providing that "an estate of freehold or of inheritance may be made to commence in the future by deed in like manner as by will," so that the instrument not being executed as a will was void. Aldridge v. Aldridge, 101 S. W. 42, 43, 202 Mo. 565.

As matter of intention

A "will" is the legal declaration of a man's intent, which he wills to be performed after his death. In re Stinson's Estate, 77 Atl. 807, 808, 228 Pa. 475, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1173, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1014.

"A 'will' is the legal declaration of a man's intentions, which he wills to be performed after his death." Burnes v. Burnes, 137 Fed. 781, 792, 70 C. C. A. 357 (citing 2 Black. Com. 499).

A "will" is the legal declaration of one's mind as to the manner in which he would have his property disposed of after his death. Smith v. Smith, 70 S. E. 491, 492, 112 Va. 205, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1018.

"A 'will' is a legal declaration of intention as to the disposition of one's property after death. To this intention, made known through the written declaration, the law gives effect, and so executes the testator's will." Jacobs v. Button, 65 Atl. 150, 151, 79 Conn. 360.

A "will" is the legal declaration of a man's intention, which he wills to be performed after death, and an indorsement by the payee of a note, whereby he transferred it to a third person with the provisions that the third person should have no right to sell or collect it during the payee's life, who might, if he lived until maturity, collect it himself, but that, if not collected until after his death, the indorsee should have the same, having been witnessed by two persons, is a will; it being the obvious intention of the testator to reserve all property in the note to himself, unless he should die before its maturity. Morrison v. Bartlett, 147 S. W. 761, 762, 148 Ky. 833, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 39.

WILL, DEVISE, OR TRUST

Domestic Relations Law, § 60, providing that nothing in regard to an adopted child inheriting from the foster parent shall apply to any "will, devise, or trust," created before a specified date, or interfere with such "will, devise, or trust," and as to any such "will, devise, or trust," a child adopted before that date is not an heir, so as to alter estates, or trusts, or devises in wills so created, does not prevent a child adopted in 1883 by a beneficiary for life in a deed executed prior to the date specified in the statute conveying land in trust for the beneficiary for life, with remainder to heirs, from taking the remainder as an heir of the beneficiary, for the words "will, devise, or trust" in the statute are confined to a testamentary disposition, and even if the word "trust" be assumed to extend to a trust deed, the trust created by the deed was only for the benefit of the beneficiary for life, and terminated at her death. Gilliam v. Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, 78 N. E. 697, 699, 186 N. Y. 127, 116 Am. St. Rep. 536.

WILLFUL—WILLFULLY

"Willful" is sometimes properly defined as done with a specific intent or with some particular design. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Bank of Timmons ville, 139 Fed. 101, 103.

71 C. C. A. 299 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7468).

"A 'willful' act is an obstinate, stubborn, perverse, act; and an act done willfully is one done stubbornly, by design, with set purpose." Claus v. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co., 111 N. W. 15, 17, 136 Iowa, 7 (quoting and adopting definition in Stewart v. Burlington & M. R. Co., 32 Iowa, 561).

The word "willfully" has various meanings, and is used to denote the quality of an act, or the intent with which it is done. It is frequently used in the sense of intentionally, willingly, designedly, or with set purpose. When used in criminal statutes, it usually means with a malevolent purpose or motive, with a wicked or criminal intent, especially if the forbidden act is one that is wrong in itself or involves moral turpitude; but if the forbidden act is not wrong in itself, or does not involve moral turpitude, the word is then used in the sense of intentionally or purposely, so that when the act is so done it is done willfully. The word, however, should be given that meaning only which the context indicates was intended. United States v. Sioux City Stock Yards Co., 162 Fed. 556, 562 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7468 et seq.).

"The word 'willfully' is variously construed. It is defined by Mr. Webster to mean in a willful manner; obstinately; by design; with set purpose. In many of the adjudicated cases it is said that it means, not merely voluntarily, but with bad purpose; that it includes the idea of an act intentionally done with a design to injure another." Carpenter v. Trinity & B. V. Ry. Co., 119 S. W. 335, 336, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 627 (citing Richardson v. State, 5 Tex. App. 470-472; Hewitt v. Newburger, 36 N. E. 593, 141 N. Y. 538; Parker v. Parker, 71 N. W. 421, 102 Iowa, 500; Birmingham Ry. & Elec. Co. v. Bowers, 20 South. 345, 110 Ala. 328; Huff v. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co., 56 N. E. 932, 24 Ind. App. 492, 79 Am. St. Rep. 274; Miller v. Miller, 47 N. E. 338, 17 Ind. App. 605; Wales v. Miner, 89 Ind. 118-127).

"Doing or omitting to do a thing knowingly and 'willfully,'" said the Supreme Court, in Felton v. United States, 96 U. S. 702, 24 L. Ed. 875, "implies not only a knowledge of the thing, but a determination with a bad intent to do it or to omit doing it. 'The word "willfully,"' says Chief Justice Shaw, 'in the ordinary sense in which it is used in statutes, means, not merely voluntarily, but with a bad purpose.' Commonwealth v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 220. 'It is frequently understood,' says Bishop, 'as signifying an evil intent without justifiable excuse.' 1 Crim. Law, § 428." See, also, Potter v. United States, 155 U. S. 446, 15 Sup. Ct. 144, 39 L. Ed. 214. Referring to the word "willful," as employed in a penal statute, Judge Pardee, speaking for the Circuit Court of Appeals, in Roberts v. United States, 126 Fed. 904, 61 C. C. A. 427, quoted with approval the following language used by the Court of Appeals of Texas in Thomas v. State, 14 Tex. App. 204: "In a penal statute the word 'willful' means more than it does in common parlance. It means with evil intent, or legal malice, or without reasonable ground for believing the act to be lawful. State v. Preston, 34 Wis. 675; State v. Clark, 29 N. J. Law, 96; Savage v. Tullar, Brayton (Vt.) 223; United States v. Three Railroad Cars, 1 Abb. U. S. 196, 28 Fed. Cas. 144. In common parlance it is used in the sense of intentional, as distinguished from accidental or involuntary." "To the same purport," said Judge Pardee, "see Sam Lane v. State, 16 Tex. App. 172; Wood v. State, 16 Tex. App. 574; Shubert v. State, 16 Tex. App. 645. See, also, Owens v. State, 19 Tex. App. 249, where the court approved 'by willfully, as used in this charge, is meant that the act was done without reasonable ground to believe the act of taking was lawful.' It was said by Mr. Chief Justice Stayton, speaking for the Supreme Court of this state, in State v. Alcorn, 14 S. W. 664, 78 Tex. 393: "It is universally held that the word 'willful,' when used in a penal statute, means with evil intent or without reasonable ground to believe the act lawful." United States v. Praeger, 149 Fed. 474, 478.

The words "unlawfully," "willfully," "fraudulently," and "feloniously" in an indictment include the word "wrongfully." State v. Pellerin, 43 South. 159, 161, 162, 118 La. 547 (citing State v. Brown, 6 South. 541, 41 La. 345; Marr's Cr. Juris. of La.

An instruction that "willful" is what the word implies; it means an act proceeding from a will; done of a purpose; an intention to do it; and that "willfulness" is an act which proceeds from the will, so as to make the act a purpose act—was not error, where the court, in connection therewith, illustrated the difference between "negligence" and "willfulness." Talbert v. Charleston & W. C. Ry., 55 S. E. 138, 139, 75 S. C. 136.

The act of doing a thing intentionally, recklessly, without regard to propriety or the rights of others by the act of the will (thus, the fact that plaintiff, a peddler, "willfully" and wantonly entered defendant's house, where he was attacked by a dog), did not constitute provocation to the dog, since the willfulness and wantonness of the act were not in the outward, visible aspect of the act, but in the mind of the actor. Carroll v. Marcoux, 56 Atl. 848, 850, 98 Me. 259.

The term "willful wrong" contemplates the doing of an act intended to injure the legal rights of another or the doing of an act so certain to cause injury that the doer must be deemed to have intended that particular injury. Koerber v. Patek, 102 N. W. 40, 45, 123 Wis. 453, 68 L. R. A. 956.

Ky. St. 1903, § 1149, defining "willful murder," does not create a new statutory crime, but only appends one of the elements of and fixes the punishment for the common-law offense, so that an indictment charging defendant with "murder," instead of "willful murder," sufficiently charged the offense defined by such section. Metcalf v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 86 S. W. 534, 535.

The word "willful," as used in the miners' act, is not alone used in the sense that it implies a wrongful intent, but it is employed, likewise, as including a conscious failure to perform or meet a duty imposed by statute. Springfield Coal Min. Co. v. Gedutis, 127 Ill. App. 327, 329.

To be guilty of "willful" or wanton conduct causing injury, the person charged therewith must be conscious of his conduct, and conscious from his knowledge of existing conditions, that injury would likely or probably result therefrom, and that, with reckless indifference to consequences, he consciously and intentionally does some wrongful act, or omits some known duty which produces injury. Montgomery St. Ry. v. Rice, 38 South. 857, 142 Ala. 674.

An intentional and unreasonable refusal by a telegraph company to receive and transmit a proper message, for whose transmission payment has been tendered, is a "willful" refusal, within Rev. Laws, c. 122, § 10, imposing a penalty on a company willfully refusing to receive and transmit messages. Vermilye v. Postal Tel. Cable Co. of Massachusetts, 91 N. E. 904, 905, 205 Mass. 598, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472.

Under Revisal 1905, § 3294, making it a misdemeanor to willfully violate any regulation of the board of agriculture for the quarantine of animals, etc., in a prosecution for "allowing" a cow to run at large, by reason of which she strayed from quarantined territory into territory free from infection, the mere fact that the defendant allowed the cow to run at large and that she crossed the line was sufficient to establish that he "willfully" allowed her to move across the line. State v. Garner, 74 S. E. 458, 158 N. C. 630.

A "willful injury" involves a deliberate purpose not to discharge some duty necessary to safety, which duty the person owing it has assumed by contract, or which is imposed on him by law. It is differentiated from negligence by the fact that the latter arises from inattention or thoughtlessness. The word "willful" or "willfully" as used in this connection means the quality of being willful, obstinate, stubborn, perverse, voluntary. As so used, it implies nothing blamable, but merely that the person of whose action or default the expression is used is a free agent, and that what has been done arises from the spontaneous action of his will. It implies nothing more than that he knows what he is doing, and intends to do what he is doing, and is a free agent. Southern Ry. Co. v. McNeeley, 88 N. E. 710, 711, 44 Ind. App. 126.

A statute providing that, when a dog shall do any damage, the owner shall be liable therefor does not render the owner liable for all damages done by it, but when one's conduct toward a dog is "willful," in the sense of intentional, purposely, and knowingly, and such as is calculated to provoke it to the actual damage, the consequences in law are referable to him. Kelley v. Killourey, 70 Atl. 1031, 1032, 81 Conn. 320, 129 Am. St. Rep. 220, 15 Ann. Cas. 163.

It is not every intentional act that is a willful or wanton act. When used in a penal statute, the word "willful" means more than it does in common parlance. It means with evil intent, or legal malice, or without reasonable ground for believing the act to be lawful. In common parlance it is used in the sense of intention, as distinguished from accidental or involuntary. To make the killing of the sheep, therefore, a willful act, it must have been committed with an evil intent, with legal malice, and without legal justification. In a trial for malicious mischief in shooting a dog, evidence that the presence of dogs among defendant's sheep at the time of the killing would have frightened the sheep, and caused the ewes, which were heavy with lambs, to lose them, was admissible to rebut the charge of malice and wantonness in shooting the dog. Caldwell v. State, 115 S. W. 597, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 164, 131 Am. St. Rep. 809 (quoting and adopting Thomas v. State, 14 Tex. App. 200).

To constitute a "willful injury," there must be a design, purpose, intent to do wrong and inflict injury. Then there is that reckless indifference or disregard of the natural or probable consequences of doing an act, or omission of an act, designated, whether accurately or not, in our decisions, as "wanton negligence," to which is imputed the same degree of culpability, and held to be equivalent to willful injury. A purpose or intent to injure is not an ingredient of wanton negligence. Where either of those exist, if damage ensues, the injury is willful. In wanton negligence, the party doing the act or failing to act is conscious of his conduct, and, without having the intent to injure, is conscious, from his knowledge of existing circumstances and conditions, that his conduct will likely or probably result in injury, and that wanton negligence, which is the equivalent of willful injury, drawn and applied in our decisions. Lacey v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 152 Fed. 134, 136, 81 C. C. A. 352 (quoting and adopting McGhee v. Campbell, 101 Fed. 936, 42 C. C. A. 94; Birmingham Railway & Electric Co. v. Bowers, 20 South. 345, 110 Ala. 328, 331; citing and adopting Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hill, 8 South. 90, 90 Ala. 71, 9 L. R. A. 442, 24 Am. St. Rep. 764; Louis- ville & N. R. Co. v. Markee, 15 South. 511, 103 Ala. 160, 49 Am. St. Rep. 21; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Orr, 26 South. 35, 121 Ala. 489).

Literally construed, the word "willfully," as used in Wis. St. 1898, § 4466a, which imposes imprisonment or fine on persons who combine to willfully or maliciously injure another in his reputation, trade, business, or profession, by any means whatever, etc., would embrace all injuries intended to follow from the parties' acts, though they were intended only as the necessary means to ulterior gain for the parties themselves. Taken in that way, the word would hit, making a new partnership if it was intended thereby to hurt some one's else business by competition. Aikens v. Wisconsin, 25 Sup. Ct. 3, 4, 195 U. S. 194, 49 L. Ed. 154.

Rev. Laws 1902, c. 111, § 124, requires railroad tracks to be laid across public ways so as not to obstruct them, and chapter 111, § 196, prohibits the willful or negligent obstruction of a crossing by a railroad company for more than five minutes at one time. Held, that the words "willfully" or "negligently" did not limit the absolute prohibition of the obstruction of a street crossing for more than five minutes, and it was no defense that the valves on the air brakes had been maliciously opened by strangers without defendant's knowledge, and that the train could not be operated within the period, owing to the delay required to find and close the valves. Commonwealth v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 88 N. E. 764, 765, 202 Mass. 394, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 350, 132 Am. St. Rep. 507, 16 Ann. Cas. 587.

Pen. Code, § 397, subd. 1, declares a person who willfully violates any lawful order or regulation of a local board of health or local health officer guilty of a misdemeanor. Yonkers City Charter, tit. 6, § 10, declares any person willfully violating any lawful ordinance guilty of a misdemeanor. An information charged an unlawful violation of Yonkers Sanitary Code, art. 15, § 144, by using a building as a boarding and lodging house for over 200 men; the building not being constructed as required by Yonkers Sanitary Code, and especially of article 15 thereof. Held, that as the information did not charge, in terms or in substance, that the violation was "willful," it charged no crime; the term "willful" in the statutes having a substantial meaning. People v. Potter, 112 N. Y. Supp. 298, 300.

The enforcement of the law in cities of the metropolitan class is placed by the Legislature directly under the control of the board of fire and police commissioners, of which the mayor is principal officer. The chief of police is appointed by the board and removable at its pleasure. It is the duty of the mayor to "order, direct and enforce" the law. Comp. St. 1911, c. 12a, § 65. If the board directs in what manner and to what extent the law for the suppression of prostitution and the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be enforced, and the chief of police in good faith believes it is his duty to be governed by the established policy of the board and the directions of the mayor, and faithfully enforces the law accordingly, it cannot be found that he did "willfully fail, neglect, or refuse to enforce any law which it is made his duty to enforce." Comp. St. 1911, c. 71, § 1a. State ex rel. Thompson v. Donahue, 135 N. W. 1030, 1034, 91 Neb. 311, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 18.

Acts 30th Leg. 1907, p. 31, c. 19, declares that in all prosecutions for felonies defendant must be personally present when verdict is heard, unless he escaped after commencement of trial, provided that in all cases the verdict may be received in his absence when such absence is "willful or voluntary." Held, that "voluntary" as so used means proceeding from the will; produced in or by an act of choice; done by design or intention; unconstrained by external interference, force, or influence; not prompted or suggested by another; so that where accused was on bail during his trial, and during the jury's consideration of the case, while court was not in session, was at his boarding house within two blocks, and on the jury returning a verdict the judge was informed defendant had been notified by telephone and was on his way to the courthouse, which he reached just after verdict was received and the jury discharged, and dispersed, his absence was neither voluntary nor willful, and reception of the verdict of guilty in his absence was reversible error. Derden v. State, 120 S. W. 485, 488, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 396.

The application for a life insurance policy, which was expressly made a part of the policy, contained a stipulation limiting the time within which any action should be brought. A complaint, in an action on the policy, alleged that insurer "purposely and willfully concealed" from plaintiff the contents of the application to induce her to delay the bringing of the suit until after the expiration of the time limited, and purposely, willfully, and with intent to defraud induced her to delay the bringing of the action until the time limited had elapsed, and that she was never able to obtain an inspection of the application, and that the copy attached to the complaint was a copy of the application as furnished by insurer after repeated demands therefor, and that the application was not furnished until after the expiration of the time limited. Held, that the complaint was insufficient for failing to aver facts on which to predicate relief from the consequences of the delay; the words "purposely" and "willfully" adding nothing to the charge that the insurer concealed the contents of the application, for "to conceal" means purposely to keep from discovery.

Gill v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 95 Pac. 89, 90, 11 Ariz. 232.

Accidental distinguished

"Willful" and "willfully" mean intentional or intentionally and not accidental or accidentally. Hill v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 91 S. W. 1123, 1124; State v. Brown, 79 S. W. 1111, 1112, 181 Mo. 192; Same v. Todd, 92 S. W. 674, 676, 194 Mo. 377; Same v. McCarver, 92 S. W. 684, 686, 194 Mo. 717; Same v. Vaughan, 98 S. W. 2, 5, 200 Mo. 1; Same v. Atchley, 84 S. W. 984, 988, 186 Mo. 174.

The word "willfully" implies a purpose or willingness to commit the act referred to, and excludes the inference that it might have resulted from accident or mistake. State v. Edmunds, 104 N. W. 1115, 1117, 20 S. D. 135.

"Willfully," as used in criminal law, means intentionally and not accidentally. State v. Kinder, 83 S. W. 964, 969, 184 Mo. 276.

"Willful," as used in defining murder, means intentional, not accidental. State v. Hottman, 94 S. W. 237, 239, 196 Mo. 110.

"Willfully," as used with reference to the commission of assault with intent to kill, means intentional, not accidental. State v. Temple, 92 S. W. 494, 496, 194 Mo. 228.

In a prosecution for conspiracy to murder, an instruction that the words "willful" and "willfully" mean intentional, not accidental or voluntary, is correct. Gambrell v. Commonwealth, 113 S. W. 476, 480, 130 Ky. 513.

The word "willful" in an instruction declaring that, where the act of killing another is done willfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought, accused is guilty of murder, means intentional, not accidental. Combs v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 112 S. W. 658, 660.

The word "willful," as used in an indictment charging "willful" murder and in the instructions defining "willful murder" and "voluntary manslaughter," means intentionally, not accidental or involuntary. Ball v. Commonwealth, 101 S. W. 956, 960, 125 Ky. 601.

The word "willfully," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 5341, defining manslaughter, is synonymous with "intentionally" or "designedly," without lawful excuse, not accidental. O'Barr v. United States, 105 Pac. 988, 989, 3 Okl. Cr. 319, 139 Am. St. Rep. 959.

An indictment against a railroad company for "willfully" obstructing a street crossing for an unreasonable length of time, by the use of the word "willfully," meant that the crossing was intentionally obstructed, and not accidentally. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 112 S. W. 573.

"Willfully" is a word generally construed to mean intentionally instead of accidentally, but occasionally in cases dealing with certain offenses, among which is willfully maiming stock, etc., it carries the idea of evil intent. State v. Prater, 109 S. W. 1047, 1049, 130 Mo. App. 348.

An instruction defining "murder in the second degree" as the killing of a human being "willfully, premeditatedly and with malice aforethought," and then defining "willfully" to mean intentionally, not by accident, "premeditatedly" to mean thought of beforehand for any length of time, however short, and stating that "malice" did not mean mere hatred or dislike, but that condition of mind which prompted a person to intentionally take the life of another, and that "malice aforethought" meant malice with premeditation, properly defined "murder in the second degree." State v. Myers, 121 S. W. 131, 136, 221 Mo. 598.

Where a petition in an action for damages for wrongful diversion and discharge of rainwater by defendant against the owner of adjoining lands alleges that such act was done willfully and maliciously, the word "willfully" means on purpose, and not accidentally; not necessarily on purpose to produce the injury, but done of purpose, and not the consequence of a mere accidental act, so that proof that it was done "willfully" and maliciously in that sense was not necessary. Thoele v. Marvin Planing Mill Co., 148 S. W. 413, 417, 165 Mo. App. 707.

The word "willfully," as used in U. S. Comp. St. 1901, § 5341, making one who unlawfully and "willfully," but without malice, injures another, from which injury the other dies, guilty of manslaughter, means not merely voluntarily, but with a bad purpose. It is a synonymous term with "intentionally," "designedly," "without lawful excuse"; that is, not accidental. It is frequently understood as signifying an evil intent without justifiable excuse. Miller v. State, 107 Pac. 948, 3 Okl. Cr. 575 (citing Thomp. Tr. 2209).

Bad purpose

"Willful" indicates a bad purpose with evil intent. State v. Fairbanks, 39 South. 443, 444, 115 La. 457 (citing [Am. & Eng.] Cyc. vol. 12, p. 151).

In a penal statute, the word "willful" generally means with a bad or evil purpose, without ground for believing the act to be lawful. Roby v. Newton, 49 S. E. 694, 696, 121 Ga. 679, 68 L. R. A. 601 (citing Hateley v. State, 44 S. E. 852, 118 Ga. 81).

The word "willful" in a criminal statute means not only designedly, but with a bad purpose. State v. Clifton, 67 S. E. 751, 752, 152 N. C. 800, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 673 (quoting 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7469).

The word "willfully," within U. S. Comp. St. 1901, § 5341, making one who unlawfully and willfully, but without malice, injures another, of which injury the other dies, guilty of manslaughter, means not merely voluntarily, but with a bad purpose, being synonymous with "intentionally," "designedly," "without lawful excuse." Miller v. State, 107 Pac. 948, 3 Okl. Cr. 575.

Deliberation and premeditation

The word "willful," when used in a statute creating an offense, implies the doing of the act purposely and deliberately in violation of law. State v. Banks, 57 S. E. 174, 176, 143 N. C. 652.

The term "willful," used in P. L. 1898, p. 824, providing that any willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing should be murder in the first degree, implies a state of mind which is the consequence of premeditation and deliberation. State v. Mangano, 72 Atl. 366, 367, 77 N. J. Law, 544.

Pub. Acts 1901, c. 154, provides that every person who shall willfully sell or offer to sell the flesh of any calf less than four weeks old when killed shall be punished by a fine, etc. Held, that guilty knowledge was an essential element of the crime defined by such act, and it was therefore error for the court to charge that by "willfully selling" was meant deliberately selling, without regard to defendant's motive. State v. Nusenholtz, 55 Atl. 589, 591, 76 Conn. 92.

A "willful injury" involves a deliberate purpose not to discharge some duty necessary to safety, which duty the person owing it has assumed by contract, or which is imposed on him by law. It is differentiated from negligence by the fact that the latter arises from inattention or thoughtlessness. The word "willful" or "willfully" as used in this connection means the quality of being willful, obstinate, stubborn, perverse, voluntary. As so used, it implies nothing blamable, but merely that the person of whose action or default the expression is used is a free agent, and that what has been done arises from the spontaneous action of his will. It implies nothing more than that he knows what he is doing, and intends to do what he is doing, and is a free agent. Southern Ry. Co. v. McNeeley, 88 N. E. 710, 711, 44 Ind. App. 126.

Kirby's Dig. § 2228, provides that an indictment is sufficient if it can be understood therefrom, among other things, that the act or omission charged as the offense is stated with such a degree of certainty as to enable the court to pronounce judgment on conviction according to the right of the case. By section 2242 the words used in an indictment must be construed according to their usual acceptation in common language. Section 2243 requires it to contain a statement of the acts constituting the offense in ordinary and concise language, so as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended. Held, that an indictment using the words "unlawful, feloniously, of his malice aforethought, with deliberation and premeditation," to characterize the act charged clearly and certainly that it was "willful," and fully met the requirements of these statutes. Harding v. State, 126 S. W. 90, 91, 94 Ark. 65.

Design

The word "willfully," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 5341, defining manslaughter, is synonymous with "designedly," without lawful excuse, not accidental. O'Barr v. United States, 105 Pac. 988, 989, 3 Okl. Cr. 319, 139 Am. St. Rep. 959.

A willful act is one done subject to the volition and will of the doer and intentionally, and a willful or malicious injury is one caused by design. Willfulness and malice alike import intent, and the characteristic element of "willful" or "malicious injury" is the design to injure, either actually entertained or to be implied from the conduct and circumstances. Sharkey v. Skilton, 77 Atl. 950, 951, 83 Conn. 503.

There is a "willful killing," within the statute defining murder, wherever there is simply a specific intent, a design or purpose formed, to take life. Smith v. State, 55 S. E. 475, 126 Ga. 544 (citing People v. Poole, 27 Cal. 572, 585).

The word "willfully," within U. S. Comp. St. 1901, § 5341, making one who unlawfully and willfully, but without malice, injures another, of which injury the other dies, guilty of manslaughter, means not merely voluntarily, but with a bad purpose, being synonymous with "intentionally," "designedly," "without lawful excuse." Miller v. State, 107 Pac. 948, 3 Okl. Cr. 575.

Under Civ. Code Cal. § 2629, providing that "an insurer is not liable for a loss caused by the willful act of the insured, but he is not exonerated by the negligence of the insured, or of his agents or others," expressly made a part of a marine policy on a cargo, there can be no recovery for loss or damage resulting directly from the act of the master in designedly undertaking to force the vessel through floating ice on a voyage to Alaska, with knowledge of the dangers to be encountered, and with ample time to have avoided them, in order to arrive more quickly at his destination and secure a better market for his cargo. Such conduct is not mere negligence but is a willful omission to perform his legal duty and an intentional commission of a wrongful act. The court quoted from the opinion of Chief Justice Shaw in Chandler v. Worcester Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 3 Cush. (Mass.) 328, which was an action on a fire policy: "By an intent to burn the building we understand a purpose manifested and followed by some act done, tending to carry that purpose into effect, but not including a mere nonfeasance. Suppose the assured, in his own house, sees the burning coals in the fireplace roll down onto the wooden floor, and does not brush them up. This would be mere nonfeasance. It would not prove an intent to burn the building; but it would show a culpable recklessness and indifference to the rights of others. * * * To what extent such negligence must go, in order to amount to gross misconduct it is difficult, by any definitive or abstract rule of law, independently of circumstances, to designate. The doctrine of the civil law, that 'crassa negligentia' was of itself proof of fraud, or equivalent to fraudulent purpose or design, was no doubt founded in the consideration that although such negligence consists in doing nothing, and is therefore a nonfeasance, yet the doing of nothing, when the slightest care or attention would prevent a great injury, manifests a willingness, differing little in character from a fraudulent and criminal purpose, to commit such injury." Standard Marine Ins. Co., Limited, or Liverpool, Eng., v. Nome Beach Litherage & Transp. Co., 133 Fed. 636, 648, 67 C. C. A. 602, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1095.

Evil intent, etc.

In the criminal law "willful" involves evil intent or legal malice. State v. McAloon, 124 N. W. 1067, 142 Wis. 72.

In a penal statute the word "willful" generally means with a bad or evil purpose, without ground for believing the act to be lawful. Roby v. Newton, 49 S. E. 691, 696, 121 Ga. 679, 68 L. R. A. 601 (citing Hateley v. State, 118 Ga. 81, 44 S. E. 852).

The term "willful" signifies with evil intent or legal malice, or without legal ground to believe the act to be lawful; and the court should, as an essential part of the law of the case, instruct the jury as to the legal meaning of the term. Windom v. State, 119 S. W. 309, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 198.

To willfully fail, neglect, or refuse to enforce a law involves more than oversight or carelessness or voluntary neglect. It must be prompted by some evil intent, or legal malice, or, at least, be without sufficient grounds to believe that he is performing his duty. State ex rel. Thompson v. Donahue, 135 N. W. 1030, 1034, 91 Neb. 311, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 18.

The word "willfully," when used in statutes to describe acts punishable criminally, includes, in addition to mere purpose to do the act, a purpose to do wrong. It involves evil intent or legal malice, and is used to characterize an act done wantonly, or one which a man of reasonable knowledge and ability must know to be contrary to his duty. Brown v. State, 119 N. W. 338, 340, 137 Wis. 543.

The word "willfully," as used in U. S. Comp. St. 1901, § 5341, making one who unlawfully and "willfully," but without malice, injures another, from which injury the other dies, guilty of manslaughter, means not merely voluntarily, but with a bad purpose. It is a synonymous term with "intentionally," "designedly" "without lawful excuse"; that is not accidental. It is frequently understood as signifying an evil intent without justifiable excuse. Miller v. State, 107 Pac. 948, 3 Okl. Cr. 575 (citing Thomp., Tr. 2209).

While the word "willful" is sometimes synonymous with "voluntary" or "intentional," yet, when used in penal or quasi penal statutes, it usually implies an evil intent, and it is so used in Code, § 1251, providing that any county officer may be removed for willful misconduct or maladministration in office, so that, in a proceeding thereunder to remove a county treasurer, evidence of his good faith and innocence of intentional wrong was admissible, so as to take the question of the willfulness of his wrongful act to the jury. State v. Meek, 127 N. W. 1023, 1024, 148 Iowa, 671, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 566, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1075.

On a prosecution for perjury, a definition of "willfully" as meaning that the act of the defendant was done with an evil intent or without reasonable grounds to believe the act to be lawful was correct. Clay v. State, 107 S. W. 1129, 1130, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 555.

"Willfully" is a word generally construed to mean intentionally instead of accidentally, but occasionally in cases dealing with certain offenses, among which is willfully maiming stock, etc., it carries the idea of evil intent. State v. Prater, 109 S. W. 1047, 1049, 130 Mo. App. 348.

"Willful," as used to characterize the act of shooting at a dog, so as to render the person shooting guilty of malicious mischief, means that the act must have been done with an evil intent, with legal malice, without reasonable ground for believing the act to be lawful, and without grounds justifying the act. Ross v. State (Tex.) 108 S. W. 697.

The word "willful," in an information for the "unlawful," "willful," and "wanton" killing of a dog, meant that the act must be done with evil intent, with legal malice, without reasonable ground for believing it to be lawful, and without grounds justifying the act. Henderson v. State, 111 S. W. 736, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 533.

The term "willful" implies an evil intent without justifiable excuse. Under Comp. Laws, § 11361, making the willful abstraction of papers and records belonging or appertaining to the office of a township a misdemeanor, it is necessary, to constitute the offense, that the abstraction be done with a criminal intent. People v. Jewell, 101 N. W. 835, 836, 138 Mich. 620.

The use of the word "willful" in Elkins Act Feb. 19, 1903, c. 708, § 1, to characterize offenses thereunder, conceding it to apply to the granting of rebates from the published schedule rates, does not require that there should have been an evil intent to constitute the offense, but it is sufficient if the act was done knowingly and purposely. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co. v. United States, 162 Fed. 835, 841, 90 C. C. A. 211.

The word "willful," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 5341, defining "manslaughter" as the unlawful and willful killing of another without malice, means done wrongfully, with evil intent. It means any act which a person of reasonable knowledge and ability must know to be contrary to duty; and, while the act must be done with evil design and knowingly, still a killing which takes place under circumstances showing a reckless disregard for the life of another, and the reckless and negligent use of means reasonably calculated to take the life of another, would be a killing done willfully. Roberts v. United States, 126 Fed. 897, 902, 61 C. C. A. 427.

It is not necessary that a mine examiner should have had an evil intent in order to make his failure to mark a dangerous place in a mine and report the same to the manager, as required by the mines and mining act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, p. 1388, c. 93, § 18), a willful violation of such act, but the words "willful violation" mean only a conscious violation. Mertens v. Southern Coal & Mining Co., 85 N. E. 743, 745, 235 Ill. 540.

Under section 33 of the mining act of 1899, giving a right of action for injuries caused by any willful violation of the provisions of the act, any conscious violation of the statute is a "willful" violation, although not accompanied by an evil intent. Kellyville Coal Co. v. Strine, 75 N. E. 375, 380, 217 Ill. 516.

Under Mines and Miners Act, § 33, making a mining operator liable for injuries caused by "willful" violation of section 98, requiring lights to be maintained at the bottom of shafts, etc., a conscious violation of the statutes is a "willful" violation; an evil intent being non-essential to the operator's liability. The word as used in the statutes implies nothing blamable, but merely that the person of whose action or default the expression is used is a free agent, and that what has been done arises from the spontaneous action of his will. It means that the person acting knows what he is doing and intends to do what he is doing, and is a free agent, and an owner, operator, or manager, who knowingly operates his mine without conforming to the provisions of the statute, willfully disregards its provisions, and willfully disregards the safety of miners employed therein. Eldorado Coal & Coke Co. v. Swan, 81 N. E. 691, 692, 227 Ill. 586 (citing Odin Coal Co. v. Denman, 57 N. E. 192, 194, 185 Ill. 413, 418, 76 Am. St. Rep. 45; Carterville Coal Co. v. Abbott, 55 N. E. 131, 134, 181 Ill. 495, 502; Marquette Third Vein Coal Co. v. Dielle, 70 N. E. 17, 208 Ill. 116; Kellyville Coal Co. v. Strine, 75 N. E. 375, 217 Ill. 516).

The term "willful failure," as used in Acts 1905, giving a right of action for injuries occasioned by any violation or willful failure to comply with the provisions of the act, implies more than mere nonconformity, inattention, thoughtlessness, or heedlessness, and goes to the intent implied in failing to do the thing after attention is called to it or notice given under the statute by the mine inspector, and implies the intentional and conscious violation and persistent refusal or neglect not necessarily with evil or malicious intent; it amounts to more than mere passive negligence; it is active refusal. Princeton Coal Min. Co. v. Lawrence, 95 N. E. 423, 427, 176 Ind. 469.

In Act June 29, 1906, c. 3594, § 3, known as the "28-hour law," which prohibits carriers of live stock from keeping the same confined for more than 28 consecutive hours without unloading "unless prevented by storm or by other accidental or unavoidable causes which cannot be anticipated or avoided by the exercise of due diligence and foresight," and imposes a penalty on any carrier which "knowingly and willfully" fails to comply with its provisions, the word "willfully" is not used as implying a vicious or evil intent, but as meaning intentionally or voluntarily. United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 166 Fed. 160, 163; Same v. Union Pac. R. Co., 169 Fed. 65, 67, 68, 94 C. C. A. 433.

Where, on a trial of the presiding judge of an election on a criminal charge of false imprisonment, based on his ordering the arrest and detention of a voter having in his possession while preparing his ballot the names of the persons he proposed to vote for, the defense was that the judge was ignorant of the law and exceeded his authority, an instruction that the word "willful" means with evil intent or legal malice, and that if accused, without lawful authority, imprisoned the voter, but a reasonable doubt existed whether the imprisonment was willfully done, accused should be acquitted, properly gave accused the benefit of the jury's belief as to whether his act was done willfully or not. Smyth v. State, 103 S. W. 899, 903, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 408.

Kirby's Dig. § 1899, makes it a misdemeanor to willfully and intentionally destroy, injure, or obstruct any telegraph or telephone line and imposes a penalty of double damages. Held, that the words, "willfully" and "intentionally," implied an evil intent without justifiable excuse so that the destruction of a portion of a telephone line by a railway company which is mistakenly believed was an unlawful obstruction of its right of way, and was also a hindrance and a menace to the safe operation of the railway, was not an act for which the owners of the telephone line were entitled to recover double damages under such section. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Batesville & Winerva Telephone Co., 97 S. W. 660, 662, 80 Ark. 499.

Under Rev. St. 1899, providing that it shall not be necessary to show, in the trial of an offense for malicious injury to property specified in that article, that the offense was committed from malice conceived against the owner of the property or against the animal or property itself, but, if the act was wrongfully, intentionally, and willfully done, it may be inferred it was done maliciously, the state is relieved from proving that malice was held toward either the owner or the property, but in both sections 1988 and 1989 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 1332, 1333) general malice is retained as an element, and, though it may be inferred from certain facts, it is not necessarily to be so inferred, and the prohibited offense is not "willfully and maliciously" committed unless the animal is maimed, beaten, or tortured from an evil impulse springing from a state of mind rendering the perpetrator indifferent to the sufferings of the animal and the wrongful quality of the act. State v. Prater, 109 S. W. 1047, 1049, 130 Mo. App. 348.

Intentional

"A 'willful act' is one that is intentional." Brown v. Boston & M. R. R., 64 Atl. 194, 201, 73 N. H. 568.

The word "willful," although broader in its signification than "intentional," embraces the latter in its meaning. State v. Dellso, 69 Atl. 218, 222, 75 N. J. Law, 808.

The word "willfully" has been construed to mean intentionally and to be synonymous therewith. Roberts v. United States, 126 Fed. 897, 903, 61 C. C. A. 427 (citing Harrison v. State, 37 Ala. 156; State v. Preston, 34 Wis. 675).

"Willfully" means intentionally; that is, that the person doing the act intended at the time to perform the particular act. State v. Smith, 105 S. W. 68, 70, 119 Tenn. 521.

The word "willful," as used with relation to penal offenses, means more than "intentional." It means an intentional act done purposely to violate the law. Kendall v. State, 72 S. E. 164, 165, 9 Ga. App. 794.

A "willful killing" is an intended killing. Blevins v. State, 107 S. W. 393, 394, 85 Ark. 195 (citing Aubrey v. State, 35 S. W. 792, 62 Ark. 368).

There is a "willful killing," within the statute defining murder, wherever there is simply a specific intent, a design or purpose formed, to take life. Smith v. State, 55 S. E. 475, 126 Ga. 544 (citing People v. Poole, 27 Cal. 572, 585).

"Willfully" is a word generally construed to mean intentionally instead of accidentally, but occasionally in cases dealing with certain offenses, among which is willfully maiming stock, etc., it carries the idea of evil intent. State v. Prater, 109 S. W. 1047, 1049, 130 Mo. App. 348.

The intentional doing of a wrongful act is sufficient to constitute "willfulness." Such rule, however, does not dispense with proof of willfulness as an element of a crime, when it is included in a statutory definition thereof. Des Moines v. Outler, 123 N. W. 218, 220, 144 Iowa, 535.

In Gen. St. 1906, § 3357, providing for prosecution against one who willfully obstructs or hinders the lienholder in prosecuting his rights against the property, subject to the lien; the word "willfully" means "intentionally." Shuman v. State, 56 South. 694, 696, 62 Fla. 84.

A charge on the corroboration of witnesses that if any witness has "willfully testified falsely" is sufficient, without stating that such testimony must be "willfully and intentionally false;" the words "willfully" and "intentionally" being synonyms in such case. State v. Winney, 128 N. W. 680, 681, 21 N. D. 72.

"Willful" means on purpose, intentional, and where a defendant by her conduct drove her husband from his home the desertion was "willful." Hudson v. Hudson, 51 South. 857, 858, 59 Fla. 529, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 614, 138 Am. St. Rep. 141, 21 Ann. Cas. 278.

The word "willfully" in Act April 24, 1903, relating to the killing of domestic animals, is synonymous with the word "intentionally." Commonwealth v. Frederick, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 228, 230.

The word "willfully," as used in United States statutes, defining manslaughter, is synonymous with "intentionally" or "designedly." O'Barr v. United States, 105 Pac. 988, 989, 3 Okl. Cr. 319, 139 Am. St. Rep. 959.

An instruction in conversion, authorizing exemplary damages if defendant seized the property "willfully or maliciously and with intent to vex" plaintiff, was erroneous because of the use of the word "or" instead of the word "and," for every act intentionally done is done willfully. Baldwin v. G. M. Davidson & Co. (Tex.) 127 S. W. 562, 564.

The word "willfully," within U. S. Comp. St. 1901, § 5341, making one who unlawfully and willfully, but without malice, injures another, of which injury the other dies, guilty of manslaughter means not merely voluntarily, but with a bad purpose, being synonymous with "intentionally," "designedly," "without lawful excuse." Miller v. State, 107 Pac. 948, 3 Okl. Cr. 575.

The word "willful," as used in the provision of the bankrupt law excepting from the operation of a discharge judgments for "willful" injuries, etc., means "intentional." Flanders v. Mullin, 66 Atl. 789, 790, 80 Vt. 124, 12 Ann. Cas. 1010.

The term "willful" as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, providing that a discharge in bankruptcy shall relieve the bankrupt from all his provable debts except judgments in actions for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another, means nothing more than intentional. McChristal v. Clisbee, 76 N. E. 511, 190 Mass. 120, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 702, 5 Ann. Cas. 769.

The word "willful," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 5, providing that a discharge in bankruptcy shall relieve the bankrupt from all provable debts except liabilities for obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations, or for "willful and malicious" injuries to the person or property of another, means nothing more than intentional; while the word "malice," as there used, is intended to imply nothing more than a disregard of duty which is involved in the intentional doing of a willful act to the injury of another. Kavanaugh v. McIntyre, 112 N. Y. Supp. 987, 990, 128 App. Div. 722.

The word "willful," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 219, making the willful cutting or felling of timber upon the land of another without his consent an indictable offense, means intentional, with a bad purpose, an evil purpose, without grounds for believing the act to be lawful. Black v. State, 59 S. E. 823, 3 Ga. App. 297.

A "willful" refusal or neglect of a servant to obey the lawful and reasonable orders of his master or those representing him justifies his discharge, but a willful disobedience is an intentional disobedience, and is something more than a conscious failure to obey, and involves a wrongful and perverse disposition, such as to render his conduct unreasonable and inconsistent with proper subordination. Ernst v. Grand Rapids Engraving Co., 138 N. W. 1050, 1051, 173 Mich. 254.

An intentional and unreasonable refusal by a telegraph company to receive and transmit a proper message, for whose transmission payment has been tendered, is a "willful refusal," within Rev. Laws, c. 122, § 10, imposing a penalty on a company willfully refusing to receive and transmit messages. Vermilye v. Postal Telegraph Cable Co. of Massachusetts, 91 N. E. 904, 905, 205 Mass. 598, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472.

An instruction that the word "willfully" signified intentionally, though not necessarily with express intent or purpose, as used in determining whether defendant was guilty of willful negligence, was correct so far as it went, and was not prejudicial for not using the words "actual intent," instead of "express intent," and not explaining that constructive intent was sufficient to constitute gross negligence, especially in absence of request for such explanation. Barlow v. Foster, 136 N. W. 822, 826, 149 Wis. 613.

A willful act is one done subject to the volition and will of the doer and intentionally, and a willful or malicious injury is one caused by a design. Willfulness and malice alike import intent, and the characteristic element of "willful" or "malicious injury" is the design to injure, either actually entertained or to be implied from the conduct and circumstances. Sharkey v. Skilton, 77 Atl. 950, 951, 83 Conn. 503.

An act is "willful" where the resulting injury is intentional or the natural and probable consequence of the act. The word "wanton" is, however, more comprehensive, and to constitute "wantonness" it is not essential that the injury should have been intentional or the probable consequence of the wrongful act; it sufficing that the act indicates a reckless disregard of the rights of others, a reckless indifference to results, or that the injury is the likely and not improbable result of the wrongful act. Conchin v. El Paso & S. W. R. Co., 108 Pac. 260, 262, 13 Ariz. 259, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 88.

The word "willful," used "in a statute creating a criminal offense, means something more than an intention to do a thing. It implies the doing the act purposely and deliberately; indicating a purpose to do it without authority; careless whether he has the right or not; in violation of law; and it is this which makes the criminal intent, without which one cannot be brought within the meaning of a criminal statute." State v. Morgan, 48 S. E. 670, 671, 136 N. C. 628 (quoting State v. Whitener, 93 N. C. 590).

While the word "willful" is sometimes synonymous with "voluntary" or "intentional," yet, when used in penal or quasi penal statutes, it usually implies an evil intent, and it is so used in Code, § 1251, providing that any county officer may be removed for willful misconduct or maladministration in office, so that, in a proceeding thereunder to remove a county treasurer, evidence of his good faith and innocence of intentional wrong was admissible so as to take the question of the willfulness of his wrongful act to the jury. State v. Meek, 127 N. W. 1023, 1024, 148 Iowa, 671, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 566, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1075.

"To constitute a 'willful injury,' the act which produced it must have been intentional or must have been done under such circumstances as evinced a reckless disregard for the safety of others and a willingness to inflict the injury complained of. It involves conduct which is quasi criminal. * * *"
Memphis St. Ry. Co. v. Roe, 102 S. W. 343, 346, 118 Tenn. 601; Rideout v. Winnebago Traction Co., 101 N. W. 672, 674, 123 Wis. 297, 69 L. R. A. 601 (quoting and adopting definition in Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Bryan, 7 N. E. 807, 808, 107 Ind. 51, 53).

"To constitute a 'willful injury,' the act which produced it must have been intentional or must have been done under such circumstances as evidenced a reckless disregard for the safety of others and a willingness to inflict the injury complained of." The intentional omission to perform a duty or the intentional doing of an act contrary to duty, although culpable and resulting in injury, falls short of showing that the injury was intentionally wantonly inflicted. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 71 N. E. 250, 254, 33 Ind. App. 219 (quoting and adopting definition in Belt Railroad & Stockyard Co. v. Mann, 7 N. E. 893, 107 Ind. 89).

The term "willful failure" as used in Acts 1905, giving a right of action for injuries occasioned by any violation or willful failure to comply with the provisions of the act, implies more than mere nonconformity, inattention, thoughtlessness or heedlessness, and goes to the intent implied in failing to do the thing after attention is called to it or notice given under the statute by the mine inspector, and implies the intentional and conscious violation and persistent refusal or neglect not necessarily with evil or malicious intent; it amounts to more than mere passive negligence; it is active refusal. Princeton Coal Min. Co. v. Lawrence, 95 N. E. 423, 427, 176 Ind. 469.

In Pen. Code, § 639, providing for the punishment of a person who "willfully" removes, injures, or destroys a public highway, the word "willfully" means something more than a voluntary act, and more than an intentional act, which is in fact wrongful. It includes the idea of an act intentionally done with a wrongful purpose, or with design to injure another, or one committed out of mere wantonness or lawlessness. People v. Gillies, 109 N. Y. Supp. 945, 946, 57 Misc. Rep. 568.

In an action for injuries to a trespasser on a freight train by kicking him off, an instruction that if defendant willfully kicked or pushed plaintiff off its rapidly moving train, injuring him, the jury should find for him, was not objectionable for using the word "willfully" instead of "intentionally"; the two words being synonymous in ordinary usage and as used in the instruction. Jones v. Mobile & O. R. Co. (Ky.) 127 S. W. 144, 145.

In an action for assault, in which it appeared that plaintiff was knocked down with a club and severely beaten by defendant, an instruction that, if the jury found that the injuries were "willfully" inflicted, they might assess as punitive damages a further sum, which would be a warning to defendant, was not objectionable for not requiring a finding of express malice before awarding punitive damages; the word "willfully" implying that the battery was intentional. Jennings v. Appleman, 139 S. W. 817, 818, 159 Mo. App. 12.

In Act June 29, 1906, c. 3594, known as the "28-hour law," which prohibits carriers of live stock from keeping the same confined in cars, etc., for more than 28 consecutive hours without unloading for rest, water, and feeding, unless prevented by storm or by other accidental or unavoidable causes which cannot be anticipated or avoided by the exercise of due diligence and foresight, and imposes a penalty on any carrier which "knowingly and willfully" fails to comply with its provisions, the word "willfully" is not used as implying a vicious or evil intent, but as meaning intentionally or voluntarily. United States v. Union Pac. R. Co., 169 Fed. 65, 67, 68, 94 C. C. A. 433; Same v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 166 Fed. 160, 163.

P. S. 5131, requires fourth-class liquor licensees authorized to sell at wholesale to give a bond in form, so far as applicable, to that required by section 5117 of retail licensees, and the bond required by that section provides that the obligor shall become liable to the penalty prescribed if the principal "shall willfully violate any of the conditions or prohibitions" of the license. Held, that the bond was not forfeited unless there was an intentional violation of the act by the licensee, even though he might be convicted and fined for violating some provision of the act; the word "willful" meaning intentionally and by design. State v. Burlington Drug Co., 78 Atl. 882, 886, 84 Vt. 243.

Where a lessee assigned his lease to his wife with the consent of the landlord, and the landlord subsequently instituted summary proceedings to dispossess the lessee without making the wife a party, and under the judgment of dispossession the landlord, through agents, took possession of the premises and removed the wife's property and forcibly removed the wife, a judgment for the wife for damages for the acts of the landlord was based on "willful" and "malicious" acts, within Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, providing that a discharge in bankruptcy does not release the bankrupt from judgments for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another; the word "willful" meaning nothing more than "intentional," and the word "malice" in its legal sense meaning a wrongful act done intentionally, without just cause or excuse. In re Munro, 195 Fed. 817, 823 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, pp. 4298-4312).

A complaint for "willful injury," involving, as it does, conduct which is quasi criminal, must aver that the injurious act was purposely and intentionally committed, with the intent willfully and purposely to inflict the injury complained of. Plaintiff was struck and injured at a railway crossing by defendant's passenger train, which approached and passed over the crossing at a speed of from 50 to 60 miles per hour. The highway at the point in question, including the crossing at that season of the year, was used by from 100 to 125 teams daily. As the train approached the whistle was sounded one-fourth of a mile north of the crossing, and the bell was rung continuously from that time until the train passed over the crossing. The engineer did not see plaintiff at any time before the collision occurred, and did not know of his presence in the vicinity of the track, and the fireman did not discover plaintiff until he was just about to enter on the track, too late to take steps to stop the engine and avert the accident. Plaintiff approached the crossing from a canning factory, driving at a brisk trot, which was continuously maintained until the horses slowed down of their own volition as they proceeded to go on the crossing. Held, that such facts were insufficient to establish a willful injury on the part of the railway company. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Ferrell, 78 N. E. 988, 989, 39 Ind. App. 515 (citing Kalen v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co., 47 N. E. 694, 18 Ind. App. 202, 63 Am. St. Rep. 343; Parker, Adm'r, v. Pennsylvania Co., 34 N. E. 504, 134 Ind. 673, 23 L. R. A. 552).

In an action by a passenger for his expulsion from a railroad train, the defendant's plea averred that, when the conductor demanded of him his ticket or fare, plaintiff "refused" and "willfully failed" to present or tender any ticket or fare, and the conductor thereupon ejected him, and plaintiff's replication alleged that, when the conductor demanded his ticket or fare, he had misplaced his ticket in his clothing, and the conductor ejected him without giving him a reasonable time within which to produce the ticket. Held that, as the replication was in the nature of a confession and avoidance, it was insufficient, for, while the word "fail" at times is synonymous with "refuse," the word "refuse" here means to decline to accept, or reject, and the words "willfully fail" mean an intentional neglect, and so it does not show that plaintiff attempted to produce his ticket or notified the conductor that he had one, and requested reasonable time within which to search for his ticket, which was necessary before he could complain of his ejection. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mason, 58 South. 963, 965, 4 Ala. App. 353 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 631; 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7468).

Knowingly

The word "willfully" implies the doing of an act knowingly, and with stubborn purpose, but without malice. Bailey v. North Carolina R. Co., 62 S. E. 912, 914, 149 N. C. 169.

A "willful act" is one that is done knowingly and purposely, with the direct object in view of injuring another. Hazle v. Southern Pac. Co., 173 Fed. 431, 432.

Acts performed with a knowledge of facts and conditions that render the same greatly dangerous to the lives of others, and where there is a probability that they will result injuriously, may be said to be "willful." Montgomery St. Ry. Co. v. Lewis, 41 South. 736, 739, 148 Ala. 134 (citing L. & N. R. Co. v. Webb, 12 South. 374, 97 Ala. 308; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Anderson, 19 South. 516, 109 Ala. 299; Southern Ry. Co. v. Bryan, 28 South. 445, 125 Ala. 297; Birmingham S. R. Co. v. Powell, 33 South. 875, 136 Ala. 232; Southern Ry. Co. v. Bonner, 37 South. 702, 141 Ala. 517; Southern Ry. Co. v. Jones, 39 South. 118, 143 Ala. 328).

An instruction that, if the jury believe that any witness has "knowingly" testified falsely, they may disregard his entire testimony, was not subject to the objection that it failed to use the word "willfully," since such words are of equivalent meaning. Peterson v. Pusey, 86 N. E. 692, 693, 237 Ill. 204.

The phrase "willfully and corruptly," as used in the statement of the requisites of the offense of perjury that the false testimony must have been given "willfully and corruptly," means knowingly and intentionally. State v. Hunter, 80 S. W. 955, 956, 181 Mo. 316.

Where an indictment of a bankrupt alleged that he "willfully" concealed property belonging to his estate in bankruptcy, the word, "willfully" was sufficient to charge that he knew that the assets which were concealed belonged to such estate. McNiel v. United States, 150 Fed. 82, 84, 80 C. C. A. 36.

In order that one may be held guilty of "willful" or wanton conduct, it must be shown that he was conscious of his conduct, and conscious, from his knowledge of existing conditions, that injury would likely or probably result from his conduct, and that with reckless indifference to consequences he consciously and intentionally did some wrongful act or omitted some known duty which produced the injurious result. Montgomery St. Ry. v. Rice, 38 South. 857, 142 Ala. 674.

Pub. Acts 1901, c. 154, provides that every person who shall willfully sell or offer to sell the flesh of any calf less than four weeks old when killed shall be punished by a fine, etc. Held, that guilty knowledge was an essential element of the crime defined by such act, and it was therefore error for the court to charge that by "willfully selling" was meant deliberately selling, without regard to defendant's motive. State v. Nusenholtz, 55 Atl. 589, 591, 76 Conn. 92.

Where the sufficiency of an indictment for causing nonmailable matter to be deposited in the postoffice is not questioned until after verdict, the words "willfully, unlawfully, wrongfully, and knowingly," as used therein, were to be taken in their broadest sense, as applying to all that was expressed in respect of the act, and therefore as imputing to defendants knowledge of the contents of the circular alleged to have been mailed, and of the book of which it was an advertisement. Burton v. United States, 142 Fed. 57, 59, 73 C. C. A. 243.

The terms "fraudulent," "false," and "willful," in Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 9, providing for forfeiture of imports entered by means of a fraudulent or false invoice, imply the necessity of a guilty scienter and intent to constitute the offense, and, where merchandise is mistakenly entered by a person on an invoice fraudulently made out by the foreign shipper, a forfeiture is not warranted. United States v. Twenty Boxes of Cheese, 163 Fed. 369, 371.

To vote "willfully," in violation of Code, § 4921, providing that if any person "willfully vote who has not been a resident of the state for six months," etc., he shall be punished, etc., involves either knowledge of the voter's disqualification or a reckless disregard of whether he is qualified or not, and where a person on due inquiry ascertains all the facts, and basing his judgment thereon in good faith concludes that he is qualified to vote and does so, his act is not willful, though on further inquiry it turns out that he was not in fact qualified. State v. Savre, 105 N. W. 387, 389, 129 Iowa, 122, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 455, 113 Am. St. Rep. 452.

The crime of perjury, as defined in Rev. St. § 5392, consists in a witness willfully stating, contrary to his oath, any material matter which he does not believe to be true; and while, in an indictment for subornation of perjury, under section 5393, the omission of the identical word "willful," in charging the false swearing by the witness, may not be fatal, the indictment must in such case contain equivalent words, themselves free from ambiguity or equivocation. Such requirement is not met by an averment that the defendant knew, at the time of the subornation, that the testimony to be given by the witness was "false, willful, and contrary to the oath" to be taken by the witness, which relates to the knowledge of defendant, and not to the state of mind of the witness. United States v. Howard, 132 Fed. 325, 326, 350.

Under the coal mine law of Illinois (Laws 1899, p. 325, § 33), which makes a mineowner liable in damages for any injury to person or property or for death "occasioned by any willful violation of this act or willful failure to comply with any of its provisions," as construed by the Supreme Court of the state, a knowing and intentional failure to comply with the requirements of the act is a "willful" failure within its meaning, and a wrongful or evil intent is not necessary to give a right of action thereunder for the death of a miner. Fulton v. Wilmington Star Min. Co., 133 Fed. 193, 195, 66 C. C. A. 247, 68 L. R. A. 168.

Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1899, p. 1174, § 33, an instruction that, where an owner, operator, or manager so operates his mine that he knowingly operates it without conforming to the provisions of the mining act of this state, he willfully disregards its provisions, and willfully disregards the safety of the miners employed therein, in the sense that the word "willful" is used in the statute, is correct. Donk Bros. Coal & Coke Co. v. Stroff, 66 N. E. 29, 32, 200 Ill. 483.

Mines and Miners' Act, § 18, requires a daily inspection of the mine, and provides that no one shall remain in the mine until dangerous conditions discovered therein have been made safe. In a miner's injury action the declaration alleged that the dangerous condition which caused the injury existed the day before it happened, and that defendant "willfully" permitted plaintiff to enter the place. Held, that the word "willfully" was synonymous with "knowingly," and the declaration, at least argumentatively, alleged that defendant knew of the dangerous condition so as to sustain a judgment for plaintiff. Peebles v. O'Gara Coal Co., 88 N. E. 186, 188, 239 Ill. 370.

The term "willful," employed in the statute regulating the operation of mines, means knowingly disregarding the statutory safety of miners, and an operator knowingly disregarding a duty willfully disregards it, and he cannot say that a miner, with knowledge of the facts, is guilty of contributory negligence. Where a miner was injured by reason of the mineowner's willful failure to maintain an open passageway around the landing place at the bottom of the shaft, as required by a statute declaring that for any injury occasioned by any willful violation of the act or willful failure to comply with its provisions, a right of action shall accrue to the party injured for any direct damages sustained thereby, the contributory negligence of the miner was no defense. Chicago-Coulterville Coal Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 130 Fed. 957, 961 (quoting and adopting definition in Carterville, Coal Co. v. Abbott, 55 N. E. 131, 181 Ill. 495; Western Anthracite Coal & Coke Co. v. Beaver, 61 N. E. 336, 192 Ill. 333).

"The act (relating to trespassing on state timber lands) very wisely makes a distinction between trespasses committed involuntarily and those committed willfully. The definition of 'casual and involuntary' should not be restricted. The words are intended to convey the idea that, when an illegal cutting of state timber lacks the elements of willfulness and intention, then the damage shall be double the value only. One who, through mistake or inadvertence, passes beyond his own boundary line, and cuts and carries away timber of another, is not guilty of willful trespass. * * * 'Willful,' in the present case, is not determined by the mere fact that appellant knowingly and purposely entered upon the land in question and cut the state timber thereon. * * * To determine what is meant by 'willful,' we must ascertain the purpose with which the act was performed. Did appellant intend to commit a wrong against the state and appropriate the timber without regard to the rights of the state? * * * The finding of the trial court that appellant was guilty of the willful trespass is not sustained by the evidence. On the contrary, the record conclusively shows that appellant had reasonable ground for believing that authority had been granted, and honestly acted on such belief." State v. Shevlin-Carpenter Co., 113 N. W. 634, 637, 102 Minn. 470.

The word "willful" is "a word of familiar use in every branch of the law, and it amounts to nothing more than this: That the person knows what he is doing, and intends to do what he is doing, and is a free agent." "Willful" is used to denote the intent with which an act is done, is sometimes so modified and reduced as to mean a little more than intentionally or designedly, but implies an intention, act, or commission or of omission. A trustee under a will exempting him from liability, for "losses occurring without his own willful default," though knowing that his cotrustee collected the rents of the estate, and had converted the same to his own use to an amount equal to nearly a third of the corpus of the estate, permitted the cotrustees to continue to collect the rents, without attempting to control the receipts, and the cotrustees misappropriated them. Held, that the trustee was personally liable for the amount misappropriated because he intentionally disregarded the rules regulating the actions of prudent men in conducting their own business; the exemption clause merely protecting the trustee from losses occurring through his carelessness or bad judgment. In re Mallon's Estate, 97 N. Y. Supp. 23, 24, 110 App. Div. 61 (quoting 8 Words and Phrases Judicially Defined, p. 7479, and citing Bouv. Law, Dict.; Crabb v. Young, 92 N. Y. 56, 65; Stratton v. Central City Horse Ry. Co., 95 Ill. 25; State v. Preston, 34 Wis. 675, 683).

A "willful injury" involves a deliberate purpose not to discharge some duty necessary to safety, which duty the person owing it has assumed by contract, or which is imposed on him by law. It is differentiated from negligence by the fact that the latter arises from inattention or thoughtlessness. The word "willful" or "willfully," as used in this connection, means the quality of being willful, obstinate, stubborn, perverse, voluntary. As so used, it implies nothing blamable, but merely that the person of whose action or default the expression is used is a free agent, and that what has been done arises from the spontaneous action of his will. It implies nothing more than that he knows what he is doing, and intends to do what he is doing, and is a free agent. Southern Ry. Co. v. McNeely, 88 N. E. 710, 711, 44 Ind. App. 126.

"The word 'willfully' is sometimes used in statutes and indictments, and sometimes omitted from them, for very differing reasons. In order that there shall be a punishable evil intent, the criminal law ordinarily requires that there shall be a knowledge of the facts, and when with a knowledge of the facts is combined an injurious result which the actor foresaw, or might reasonably have foreseen, all the law ordinarily implies by the word 'willfully' is accomplished. Nevertheless there are numerous phases of the law where a knowledge of all the facts involved is not required, arising, for example, with reference to questions of adultery and incest, and under statutes in regard to sales of liquors to minors, and the pure food laws, etc. Therefore sometimes, to guard against any possible inference of criminality in the absence of knowledge, the word 'willfully' is inserted in the statutes; and sometimes it is inserted for other reasons." In the provision of the 28-hour law (Act June 29, 1906, c. 3594, 34 Stat. 607), subjecting railroads to a penalty for knowingly and willfully failing to obey such act, the words "knowingly and willfully" do not require an evil intent, but only that defendant should have failed to obey the statute purposely and with knowledge of the facts. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. v. United States, 165 Fed. 833, 841, 91 C. C. A. 519.

Malice

The word "willfully" implies the doing of an act knowingly, and with stubborn purpose, but without malice. Bailey v. North Carolina R. Co., 62 S. E. 912, 914, 149 N. C. 169.

"Willful," as used in the statutes relating to punishment for willful trespasses, embodies an element of maliciousness. Price v. Denison, 103 N. W. 728, 729, 95 Minn. 106.

"Willful," in a statute against libel, is covered by "malicious" in an indictment; the latter meaning all that the former does, and more. Glover v. People, 68 N. E. 464, 466, 204 Ill. 170 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. [3d Ed.] § 613).

There is no substantial difference in the meaning of the terms "willfully" and "maliciously," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 1957, punishing every person who shall willfully and maliciously injure or destroy the wires, etc., of any telephone or telegraph company. State v. McKee, 104 S. W. 486, 487, 126 Mo. App. 524.

In general a malicious act involves all that is usually understood by the term "willful," and is further marked by either hatred or ill will toward the party injured or by such utter recklessness and disregard of the rights of others as denotes a corrupt or malevolent disposition. It is true that "malice" may be and is often implied or presumed from the willfulness of the wrongful act. State v. Willing, 105 N. W. 355, 356, 129 Iowa, 72.

An instruction on a trial for homicide, authorizing a verdict of "willful murder" if the jury believe that the killing was done with malice aforethought and a verdict of "voluntary manslaughter" if they believe that the killing was done in sudden heat of passion and without previous malice, is not erroneous as placing on accused the burden of showing that the killing was without previous malice to reduce the homicide to manslaughter. Ball v. Commonwealth, 101 S. W. 956, 959, 125 Ky. 601.

The words "wanton," "willful," and "unlawful" do not necessarily mean, in statutes on malicious mischief, the same as "malicious." The word "malicious," as used in the statute on malicious wounding of domestic animals, means actual malice toward the owner, and any evidence which fairly shows that the act was necessary to prevent injury to the accused or to his property is admissible on the issue of malice. People v. Jones, 89 N. E. 752, 756, 241 Ill. 482, 16 Ann. Cas. 332 (citing 25 Cyc. 1677; 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4307; Glover v. People, 68 N. E. 464, 204 Ill. 170).

An instruction on a trial for homicide, that if the jury should believe that accused willfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought killed decedent by shooting him with a gun, from which shooting decedent died within a year and a day thereafter, and the same was not done in apparently necessary self-defense, accused was guilty of "willful murder," correctly defined "willful murder." Williamson v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 101 S. W. 370, 371.

Under Rev. St. 1899, providing that it shall not be necessary to show in the trial of an offense for malicious injury to property specified in that article that the offense was committed from malice conceived against the owner of the property or against the animal or property itself, but if the act was wrongfully, intentionally, and willfully done, it may be inferred it was done maliciously, the state is relieved from proving that malice was held toward either the owner or the property, but in both sections 1988 and 1989 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 1332, 1333) general malice is retained as an element, and though it may be inferred from certain facts it is not necessarily to be so inferred, and the prohibited offense is not "willfully and maliciously" committed unless the animal is maimed, beaten, or tortured from an evil impulse springing from a state of mind rendering the perpetrator indifferent to the sufferings of the animal and the wrongful quality of the act. State v. Prater, 109 S. W. 1047, 1049, 130 Mo. App. 348.

Negligence

Negligence distinguished, see Negligence.

An allegation of "willful" or wanton wrong cannot be sustained by a proof of simple negligence. Robinson v. Helena Light & Ry. Co., 99 Pac. 837, 843, 38 Mont. 222.

Under the 28-hour law, a negligent failure to comply with the law with a knowledge of fact is a willful failure. United States v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 173 Fed. 764, 769, 98 C. C. A. 110.

A complaint, in an action for injuries to a passenger while alighting from a train, which alleges that plaintiff, urged by the "willful," "unlawful," and "reckless" injunctions of the conductor, and in obedience to his directions, proceeded to alight from the train while in motion, and in so doing was injured, does not charge negligence, but charges willfulness; the word "unlawful" assigning no specific legal character to the acts alleged, and the word "reckless" being equivalent to "willful." Crosby v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 61 S. E. 1064, 1067, 81 S. C. 24.

The term "willful failure," as used in Acts 1905, giving a right of action for injuries occasioned by any violation or willful failure to comply with the provisions of the act, implies more than mere nonconformity, inattention, thoughtlessness, or heedlessness, and goes to the intent implied in failing to do the thing after attention is called to it or notice given under the statute by the mine inspector, and implies the intentional and conscious violation and persistent refusal or neglect not necessarily with evil or malicious intent; it amounts to more than mere passive negligence; it is active refusal. Princeton Coal Min. Co. v. Lawrence, 95 N. E. 423, 427, 176 Ind. 469.

A "willful injury" involves a deliberate purpose not to discharge some duty necessary to safety, which duty the person owing it has assumed by contract, or which is imposed on him by law. It is differentiated from negligence by the fact that the latter arises from inattention or thoughtlessness. The word "willful" or "willfully" as used in this connection means the quality of being willful, obstinate, stubborn, perverse, voluntary. As so used, it implies nothing blamable, but merely that the person of whose action or default the expression is used is a free agent, and that what has been done arises from the spontaneous action of his will. It implies nothing more than that he knows what he is doing, and intends to do what he is doing, and is a free agent. Southern Ry. Co. v. McNeeley, 88 N. E. 710, 711, 44 Ind. App. 126.

"A distinction may be taken between the willful act done by the defendant in those cases, in deliberately planting a dangerous weapon in his ground with the design of deterring trespassers, and the mere negligence of the defendant's servant in leaving his cart in the open street. But between 'willful mischief' and 'gross negligence' the boundary line is hard to trace. I should rather say impossible. The law runs them into each other, considering such a degree of negligence as some proof of malice." The law imposes no liability upon a railroad company for maintaining, upon its private property, an unlocked, unfastened, and unguarded turntable, in favor of children, though located in a thickly settled community, near a public street, and on ground on which children are wont to congregate for play. Conrad v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 61 S. E. 44, 46, 64 W. Va. 176, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1129.

Purpose or willingness

The term "willful," when applied to the intent with which an act is done, implies a purpose or willingness to do the act. State ex rel. Register v. McGabey, 97 N. W. 865, 867, 12 N. D. 535, 1 Ann. Cas. 650.

"Willful" means on purpose, intentional, and where a defendant by her conduct drove her husband from his home the desertion was "willful." Hudson v. Hudson, 51 South. 857, 59 Fla. 529, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 614, 138 Am. St. Rep. 141, 21 Ann. Cas. 278.

That the term "willfully," when applied to the intent with which an act is done, implies simply a purpose or willingness to commit the act referred to. It does not require any intent to violate law or injure another. Klenk v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 76 Pac. 214, 215, 27 Utah, 428.

"Willfully," as used in the penal section of the federal 28-hour law, means purposely or obstinately, and is designed to describe the attitude of a carrier who, having a free will or choice, either intentionally disregards the statute or is plainly indifferent to its requirements. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. United States, 169 Fed. 69, 71, 94 C. O. A. 437; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. United States, 194 Fed. 342, 344, 114 C. O. A. 334; St. Joseph Stockyards Co. v. United States, 187 Fed. 104, 105, 110 C. O. A. 432.

The rule prescribed by Rev. Codes, § 8099, declaring that the word "willfully," when applied to the intent with which an act is done or omitted, implies simply a willingness to commit the act or make the omission referred to, and does not require any intent to violate the law or to injure another, or to acquire any advantage, applies also in civil cases. Haddox v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 113 Pac. 1119, 1122, 43 Mont. 8.

The term "willfully" simply means a purpose or willingness to commit the act or omission referred to, and does not require any intent to violate the law; consequently a railroad company, which negligently failed to file its tariff with the corporate commission, may be guilty of willfully violating the statute, although it did not intend the violation of law. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. State, 125 Pac. 721, 723, 33 Okl. 371.

The word "willfully," when used in statutes to describe acts punishable criminally, includes, in addition to mere purpose to do the act, a purpose to do wrong. It involves evil intent or legal malice, and is used to characterize an act done wantonly, or one which a man of reasonable knowledge and ability must know to be contrary to his duty. Brown v. State, 119 N. W. 338, 340, 137 Wis. 543.

The words "willfully," "unlawfully," "feloniously," and "maliciously" import only that criminal intent which is the necessary part of every felony, or other crime, but they do not necessarily include the specific "purpose" to do the act which is an element of the crime charged. Whether the indictment is on a statute or at the common law, it is a rule universal and without exception that every intent, like everything else, which the law makes an element of the offense must be alleged, for otherwise no prima facie case appears. Newby v. State, 105 N. W. 1099, 1100, 75 Neb. 33.

In an action against a railroad company to recover for killing of plaintiff's team while it was on defendant's tracks in its switchyards, an allegation that defendant "recklessly and willfully ran said train against and over said team" was sufficient, standing alone, to present a case of willful injury, since the word "willful" implies purpose and intent; but, where such averment is accompanied with a further statement that the train was run "without seeing or endeavoring to see said wagon and team," the complaint was converted into one based on negligence and was insufficient to charge a willful injury. Vandalla R. Co. v. Clem, 96 N. E. 789, 790, 49 Ind. App. 94.

A complaint for "willful injury," involving, as it does, conduct which is quasi criminal, must aver that the injurious act was purposely and intentionally committed, with the intent willfully and purposely to inflict the injury complained of. Plaintiff was struck and injured at a railway crossing by defendant's passenger train, which approached and passed over the crossing at a speed of from 50 to 60 miles per hour. The highway at the point in question, including the crossing at that season of the year, was used by from 100 to 125 teams daily. As the train approached, the whistle was sounded one-fourth of a mile north of the crossing, and the bell was rung continuously from that time until the train passed over the crossing. The engineer did not see plaintiff at any time before the collision occurred, and did not know of his presence in the vicinity of the track, and the fireman did not discover plaintiff until he was just about to enter on the track, too late to take steps to stop the engine and avert the accident. Plaintiff approached the crossing from a canning factory, driving at a brisk trot, which was continuously maintained until the horses slowed down of their own volition as they proceeded to go on the crossing. Held, that such facts were insufficient to establish a willful injury on the part of the railway company. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Ferrell, 78 N. E. 988, 989, 39 Ind. App. 515 (citing Kalen v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co., 47 N. E. 694, 18 Ind. App. 202, 63 Am. St. Rep. 343; Parker v. Pennsylvania Co., 34 N. E. 504, 184 Ind. 673, 23 L. R. A. 552).

Reckless or careless

An act cannot be both careless and willful. Negligence is an unintentional act or omission. "Willful" is intentional, an act purposely done, not negligently or carelessly done or left undone; hence evidence to prove negligence would negative willfulness, and vice versa. Cramer v. Springfield Traction Co., 87 S. W. 24, 27, 112 Mo. App. 350.

An allegation in the complaint, in an action against a railroad company, characterizing the act by which plaintiff was injured as "reckless," is equivalent to characterizing it as "willful," so as to justify punitive damages; the word "reckless" being defined as rashly negligent, utterly careless or heedless. Pickett v. Southern R. Co., Carolina Division, 48 S. E. 466, 469, 69 S. C. 445 (citing Webst. Int. Dict.).

The use of the word "carelessly," in an instruction that a verdict for punitive damages could have been given if defendant either willfully, intentionally, or carelessly injured the plaintiff, was not fortunate, as it was more nearly synonymous with negligently or inadvertently than with "willfully" or "wantonly." Horn v. Southern Ry., 58 S. E. 963, 965, 78 S. C. 67.

A complaint, in an action for injuries to a passenger while alighting from a train, which alleges that plaintiff, urged by the "willful," "unlawful," and "reckless" injunctions of the conductor, and in obedience to his directions, proceeded to alight from the train while in motion, and in so doing was injured, does not charge negligence, but charges willfulness; the word "unlawful" assigning no specific legal character to the acts alleged, and the word "reckless" being equivalent to "willful." Crosby v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 61 S. E. 1064, 1067, 81 S. C. 24.

The complaint in an action for the death of a person struck by a train, which alleges that defendant "unlawfully and grossly negligently and wantonly omitted to give any signal," and ran the train at a "speed grossly negligently and wantonly high," and "unlawfully, wantonly and grossly carelessly and negligently" ran the train over decedent, and which charges a violation of a municipal ordinance regulating the speed of trains, and which states the facts showing the relative situation of the parties at the time and before the accident, charges negligence, for the word "unlawfully" refers to the alleged violation of the ordinance, and the words "willfully" and "wantonly" merely meaning "recklessly" or "heedlessly." Neary v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 110 Pac. 226, 231, 41 Mont. 480.

Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2393, declares that every person who "willfully" discharges a firearm in a public place, etc., is guilty of a misdemeanor. A complaint charged defendants with violating such section by shooting "recklessly" and in a manner liable to injure some one. Held, that the words "recklessly" and "willfully" were not synonymous; the word "willfully" being employed in penal statutes as synonymous with intentionally, designedly, or without lawful excuse, while the word "recklessly" is used to mean heedlessly, carelessly, or indifferent to consequences, without contemplating or intending such consequences, there being in general a wide difference between "intentional" acts and those resulting as the consequence of recklessness or carelessness. Thurman v. State, 104 Pac. 67, 68, 2 Okl. Cr. 718.

Rudely

An information charging that accused "willfully" and "unlawfully" displayed an alleged deadly weapon in a manner calculated to disturb, etc., is insufficient to charge an offense under Pen. Code 1895, art. 334, providing punishment for those who "rudely" display any pistol or other deadly weapon in a manner calculated to disturb, for "willfully" is not synonymous with "rudely," nor does it convey the same meaning. The instrument could be displayed "willfully" or "unlawfully" without coming within the terms of the statute. Fuller v. State, 87 S. W. 832, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 300.

Unlawful or felonious

The word "unlawful" is not confined to criminal acts. It includes all "willful," actionable violations of civil rights. White v. White, 111 N. W. 1116, 1119, 182 Wis. 121 (quoting and adopting definition in Martens v. Reilly, 84 N. W. 840, 843, 109 Wis. 464, 473).

The use of the word "willingly," in an indictment for murder, instead of "willfully," which latter word was doubtlessly intended, does not render such indictment insufficient, where the indictment charges that defendant unlawfully, feloniously, and of his malice aforethought, and after deliberation and premeditation, did kill and murder, etc.; these latter words include all the meaning that could be conveyed by the word "willfully." Daniels v. State, 88 S. W. 844, 845, 76 Ark. 84.

An instruction, on a trial for homicide, that if the jury should believe that accused willfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought killed decedent by shooting him with a gun, from which shooting decedent died within a year and a day thereafter, and the same was not done in apparently necessary self-defense, accused was guilty of "willful murder," correctly defined "willful murder." Williamson v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 101 S. W. 370, 371.

Kirby's Dig. § 2228, provides that an indictment is sufficient if it can be understood therefrom, among other things, that the act or omission charged as the offense is stated with such a degree of certainty as to enable the court to pronounce judgment on conviction according to the right of the case. By section 2242 the words used in an indictment must be construed according to their usual acceptance in common language. Section 2243 requires it to contain a statement of the acts constituting the offense in ordinary and concise language so as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended. Held, that an indictment using the words "unlawful, feloniously, of his malice aforethought, with deliberation and premeditation" to characterize the act charged clearly and certainly meant that it was "willful," and fully met the requirements of these statutes. Harding v. State, 126 S. W. 90, 91, 94 Ark. 65.

Voluntary

"Willful" is not the synonym of "voluntary." In truth, they express no distinct idea which is common to both. The former is a word of much greater strength than the latter. Roberts v. United States, 126 Fed. 897, 903, 61 C. C. A. 427 (quoting and adopting definition in McManus v. State, 36 Ala. 285).

In a prosecution for conspiracy to murder, an instruction that the words "willful" and "willfully" mean intentional, not accidental or voluntary, is correct. Gambrell v. Commonwealth, 113 S. W. 476, 480, 130 Ky. 513.

The word "willfully," within U. S. Comp. St. 1901, § 5341, making one who unlawfully and willfully, but without malice, injures another, of which injury the other dies, guilty of manslaughter, means not merely voluntarily, but with a bad purpose, being synonymous with "intentionally," "designedly," "without lawful excuse." Miller v. State, 107 Pac. 948, 3 Okl. Cr. 575.

While the word "willful" is sometimes synonymous with "voluntary" or "intentional," yet, when used in penal or quasi penal statutes, it usually implies an evil intent, and it is so used in Code, § 1251, providing that any county officer may be removed for willful misconduct or maladministration in office, so that, in a proceeding thereunder to remove a county treasurer, evidence of his good faith and innocence of intentional wrong was admissible so as to take the question of the willfulness of his wrongful act to the jury. State v. Meek, 127 N. W. 1023, 1024, 148 Iowa,

The word "willfully," in Pen. Code, § 639, subjecting to punishment any person who willfully or maliciously displaces, injures, or destroys any water main, means something more than a voluntary act, and more also than an intentional act which in fact is wrongful. It includes the idea of an act intentionally done with a wrongful purpose, or with a design to injure another, or one committed out of mere wantonness or lawlessness. McMorris v. Howell, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1018, 1021, 89 App. Div. 272 (citing Wass v. Stevens, 128 N. Y. 123, 28 N. E. 21).

In Pen. Code, § 639, providing for the punishment of a person who "willfully" removes, injures, or destroys a public highway, the word "willfully" means something more than a voluntary act, and more than an intentional act which is in fact wrongful. It includes the idea of an act intentionally done with a wrongful purpose, or with design to injure another, or one committed out of mere wantonness or lawlessness. People v. Gillies, 109 N. Y. Supp. 945, 946, 57 Misc. Rep. 568.

A "willful injury" involves a deliberate purpose not to discharge some duty necessary to safety, which duty the person owing it has assumed by contract, or which is imposed on him by law. It is differentiated from negligence by the fact that the latter arises from inattention or thoughtlessness. The word "willful" or "willfully," as used in this connection, means the quality of being willful, obstinate, stubborn, perverse, voluntary. As so used, it implies nothing blamable, but merely that the person, of whose action or default the expression is used, is a free agent, and that what has been done arises from the spontaneous action of his will. It implies nothing more than that he knows what he is doing, and intends to do what he is doing, and is a free agent. Southern Ry. Co. v. McNeeley, 88 N. E. 710, 711, 44 Ind. App. 126.

In Act June 29, 1906, c. 3594, known as the "28-hour law," which prohibits carriers of live stock from keeping the same confined in cars, etc., for more than 28 consecutive hours without unloading for rest, water, and feeding, unless prevented by storm or by other accidental or unavoidable causes which cannot be anticipated or avoided by the exercise of due diligence and foresight, and imposes a penalty on any carrier which "knowingly and willfully" fails to comply with its provisions, the word "willfully" is not used as implying a vicious or evil intent, but as meaning intentionally or voluntarily. United States v. Union Pac. R. Co., 169 Fed. 65, 67, 68, 94 C. C. A. 433; Same v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 166 Fed. 160, 163.

Wanton

While "wanton" is often used as synonymous with willful, an injury may be wanton without being willful, "wanton" lacking the element of intent to injure contained in willful; thus a partial employment of available means evidencing some degree of care shows an injury not to be willful, although it may not establish that it was not wanton. Adler v. Martin (Ala.) 59 South. 597, 600.

An act is "willful" where the resulting injury is intentional or the natural and probable consequence of the act. The word "wanton" is, however, more comprehensive, and to constitute "wantonness" it is not essential that the injury should have been intentional or the probable consequence of the wrongful act; it sufficing that the act indicates a reckless disregard of the rights of others, a reckless indifference to results or that the injury is the likely and not improbable result of the wrongful act. Conchin v. El Paso & S. W. R. Co., 108 Pac. 260, 262, 13 Ariz. 259, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 88.

In Pen. Code, § 639, providing for the punishment of a person who "willfully" removes, injures, or destroys a public highway, the word "willfully" means something more than a voluntary act, and more than an intentional act which is in fact wrongful. It includes the idea of an act intentionally done with a wrongful purpose, or with design to injure another, or one committed out of mere wantonness or lawlessness. People v. Gillies, 109 N. Y. Supp. 945, 946, 57 Misc. Rep. 568.

"Willful" imports a much more positive affirmative mental condition prompting the act than 'wanton.' Many judges hold, and with much reason, that willful negligence is a contradiction—an anomaly. It has been generally held that willful injury is not charged by an allegation that the act was committed recklessly, wantonly, or purposely, wrongfully, or unlawfully. Nor is a charge of gross negligence equivalent to an allegation of a willful act." Western Union Tel. Co. v. Catlett, 177 Fed. 71, 75, 100 C. C. A. 489 (citing 29 Cyc. 574, McAdoo v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 11 S. E. 316, 105 N. C. 140).

Rev. St. 1909, § 5433, provides that "if any person shall willfully set on fire any woods," etc., a person injured thereby shall make satisfaction in double damages. Held, that "willfully" means wantonly, or with intent that the fire shall be allowed to spread uncontrolled, and the statute does not apply to a farmer who, in the cultivation of his farm or for the protection of his property, while using ordinary care, sets out fire intending to burn over only a limited space and with no intention to permit it to spread beyond his control, and he would not be required to wait until his property was threatened with immediate danger before setting such a fire, and if such fire spreads recovery can be had only at common law on the ground of negligence, unless his conduct is so wanton that willfulness will be inferred therefrom.

Without just or lawful cause or excuse

The word "willfully," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 5341, defining manslaughter, is synonymous with "intentionally" or "designedly," without lawful excuse, not accidental. O'Barr v. United States, 105 Pac. 988, 989, 3 Okl. Cr. 319, 139 Am. St. Rep. 959.

The word "willfully" within U. S. Comp. St. 1901, § 5341, making one who unlawfully and willfully, but without malice, injures another, of which injury the other dies, guilty of manslaughter, means not merely voluntarily, but with a bad purpose, being synonymous with "intentionally," "designedly," "without lawful excuse." Miller v. State, 107 Pac. 948, 3 Okl. Cr. 575 (citing Thomp. Tr. 2209).

The term "willful" implies an evil intent without justifiable excuse. Under Comp. Laws, § 11361, making the willful abstraction of papers and records belonging or appertaining to the office of a township a misdemeanor, it is necessary, to constitute the offense, that the abstraction be done with a criminal intent. People v. Jewell, 101 N. W. 835, 836, 138 Mich. 620.

Kirby's Dig. § 1899, makes it a misdemeanor to willfully and intentionally destroy, injure, or obstruct any telegraph or telephone line, and imposes a penalty of double damages. Held, that the words "willfully" and "intentionally" implied an evil intent without justifiable excuse, so that the destruction of a portion of a telephone line by a railway company, which is mistakenly believed was an unlawful obstruction of its right of way, and was also a hinderance and a menace to the safe operation of the railway, was not an act for which the owners of the telephone line were entitled to recover double damages under such section. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Batesville & W. Telephone Co., 97 S. W. 660, 662, 80 Ark. 499.

Without reasonable belief

On a prosecution for perjury, a definition of "willfully" as meaning that the act of the defendant was done with an evil intent or without reasonable grounds to believe the act to be lawful was correct. Clay v. State, 107 S. W. 1129, 1130, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 555.

"Willful," as used to characterize the act of shooting at a dog so as to render the person shooting guilty of malicious mischief, means that the act must have been done with an evil intent, with legal malice, without reasonable ground for believing the act to be lawful, and without grounds justifying the act. Ross v. State (Tex.) 108 S. W. 697.

The word "willful," in an information for the "unlawful," "willful," and "wanton" killing of a dog, meant that the act must be done with an evil intent, with legal malice, without reasonable ground for believing it to be lawful, and without grounds justifying the act. Henderson v. State, 111 S. W. 736, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 533.

WILLFUL ACT

See Willful—Willfully.

WILLFUL AND MALICIOUS INJURY

The phrase "willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, subd. 2, providing that a discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all his provable debts except such as are judgments in actions for fraud or for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another, includes a judgment for damages for criminal conversation, and hence such a judgment is not discharged by a discharge in bankruptcy. Tinker v. Colwell, 24 Sup. Ct. 505, 506, 193 U. S. 473, 48 L. Ed. 754. It does not necessarily involve hatred or ill will as a state of mind, but arises from a wrongful act done intentionally without just cause or excuse; it being sufficient, to constitute a willful and malicious injury to person or property, that the wrongful act is intentionally done without just cause or excuse, special malice not being required. Where a judgment against a bankrupt was rendered on a declaration containing a count for trespass vi et armis, alleging that she overstepped her authority as a school teacher in administering corporal punishment to the plaintiff, it would be assumed, under the full faith and credit clause of the federal Constitution, that the verdict rendered in the state court on which the judgment was based was sustained by sufficient evidence, and was rendered under proper instructions, and hence that the judgment was for a willful and malicious injury from which a discharge in bankruptcy would not relieve, under the rule that a judgment for damages under a count for trespass vi et armis cannot lawfully be rendered except on proof of a willful and malicious injury. Peters v. United States, 177 Fed. 885, 887, 101 C. C. A. 99. Where a lessee assigned his lease to his wife, and the landlord recognized her as the actual tenant and subsequently obtained possession under process of dispossession issued against the lessee and retained possession against the wife wrongfully and by means of force and threats inspiring fear, a judgment for the wife against the landlord in forcible detainer, entered on a verdict returned under instructions allowing only a recovery for the value of the lease for the term above the rent to be paid, was for a liability for "willful and malicious injury" to property rights within the statute, though there was no evidence of express malice, and though express malice could not be implied from the forcible detainer, since there was a disregard of the duty which the landlord owed to the wife. In re Munro, 197 Fed. 450, 453. A conversion of property is not a "willful and malicious injury to person or property," within the meaning of the statute. In re Ennis & Stoppani, 171 Fed. 755, 756. Where a defendant, against whom a judgment has been obtained for an assault, on being arrested on execution makes application to take the poor debtor's oath, and gives a recognizance under Rev. Laws Mass. c. 168, § 29 et seq., such recognizance is merely a cumulative security for the original judgment, and a judgment subsequently rendered thereon constitutes a liability for a willful and malicious injury to the person, within the statute, which is not released by a discharge. In re Colaluca, 133 Fed. 255, 256. The exception of the statute extends to all actions in which the facts of intent and malice are judicially ascertained, and a close jail certificate may be included in the consideration of the question whether the injuries for which judgment was recovered were willful and malicious, and a close jail certificate, in an action for injuries sustained while undergoing a surgical operation, that the cause of action "arose from the willful and malicious act of the defendant and for willful injuries to the person of the plaintiff" sufficiently shows that the judgment was founded on a "willful and malicious injury to the person," under the bankrupt act. Flanders v. Mullin, 66 Atl. 789, 80 Vt. 124, 12 Ann. Cas. 1010.

WILLFUL AND UNLAWFUL

While the term "willful and unlawful," used in determining whether exemplary damages may be awarded for the commission of a tort, may not under all circumstances imply malice, an act "unlawfully and purposely" committed with knowledge that it is wrong and unlawful is in legal contemplation malicious. Anderson v. International Harvester Co., 116 N. W. 101, 103, 104 Minn. 49, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 440 (citing State v. Preston, 34 Wis. 675; Wills v. Noyes, 12 Pick. [29 Mass.] 324; Lynd v. Pickett, 7 Minn. 184 [Gil. 128], 82 Am. Dec. 79).

WILLFUL AND WANTON

A "willful and wanton" tort need not be a conscious invasion of the rights of another if it is done under such circumstances that an ordinary person would say that it was in reckless disregard of another's rights. Tolleson v. Southern Ry. Co., 70 S. E. 311, 313, 88 S. C. 7.

To shoot at a mad dog is not necessarily the "willful and wanton firing of a weapon," within the terms of a statute forbidding shooting on Sunday. It is the duty of the court, upon the trial of one charged with a violation of this statute, to instruct the jury as to the meaning of the words "willful and wanton," as used in the statute; and it is error to restrict the defense of the accused to cases of actual self-defense or defense of property. It is for the jury to determine whether shooting at a mad dog on Sunday is a willful and wanton shooting, within the meaning of the statute, although they might believe that the dog was fleeing at the time he was shot at, and that neither the defendant's person nor his property was in danger. Manning v. State, 64 S. E. 710, 711, 6 Ga. App. 240.

Where defendant's engineer acted "willfully and wantonly" (that is to say, in intentional or reckless disregard of human life) by not giving any warning and by allowing the engine to run on and strike the plaintiff, whom he saw sitting in an intoxicated condition, helpless on the cross-tie, in the way of the rapidly moving train, the plaintiff ought to recover such damages, as he can legally show to the satisfaction of the jury. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Moore, 63 S. E. 642, 644, 5 Ga. App. 562.

An exception to the rule that contributory negligence of a person injured precludes recovery therefor is that when such contributory negligence is discovered in time to avoid the injury, and it could be avoided with due diligence, but is not avoided, the person injured can recover; the act of the defendant being characterized as "willful and wanton." In the earlier cases the conduct of those in charge of a train, who, seeing one in a dangerous position, made no effort to avoid injuring him when it could have been easily avoided, is characterized as "willful and wanton." The cases, however, all hold that the discovery of such a person in a dangerous position in time to prevent injury by the exercise of ordinary care is necessary to constitute an exception to the rule that one guilty of contributory negligence can recover. Where, in an action for injuries from being struck by a street car, evidence showed that the motorman did not see plaintiff, but that the motorman was looking back, no recovery could be had. Bennichsen v. Market St. R. Co., 84 Pac. 420, 421, 149 Cal. 18.

WILLFUL CONDUCT

See Willful—Willfully.

WILLFUL DEFAULT

The words "willful default" imply more than negligence or carelessness. The word "willful" means intentional, while the word "default" means transgression. Where a testator exempted his trustee from liability for losses occurring without his own willful default, it was evidently his intention to relieve the trustee from everything but his individual intentional transgression. In re Mullon's Estate, 89 N. Y. Supp. 554, 43 Misc. Rep. 569.

Willful default on the part of a trustee, within the terms of a will providing that the trustees should be liable only for willful default, and not for any loss or damage which might happen to the trust property without their respective "willful neglect or default," meant intentionally making away with the trust property, and a willful neglect means such reckless indifference to true interests of the trust as to amount to or partake of a willful violation of duty; neither being fulfilled by a mere improper exercise of discretion on the part of the trustees in using $850,000 of the principal of the trust, amounting to $920,000, in the construction of a new building. Where trustees had become committed to the construction of a new building out of the funds of the trust estate, and the plans had been practically completed, they were not guilty of willful neglect or default in purchasing a lease of a tenant in an old building that was to be destroyed, and in agreeing to pay the rent of another store for such tenant during the erection of the new building, in order to lease to the tenant the first floor and basement of the new building for ten years at a rent of $17,000 a year. Warren v. Pazolt, 89 N. E. 381, 382, 203 Mass. 328.

WILLFUL DESERTION

See, also, Desertion.

Of spouse

"Willful" means on purpose, intentional, and, where a defendant by her conduct drove her husband from his home, the desertion was willful. Hudson v. Hudson, 51 South. 857, 858, 59 Fla. 529, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 614, 138 Am. St. Rep. 141, 21 Ann. Cas. 278.

The essence of a "willful," obstinate desertion by a wife consists in her refusing to live with her husband when he does his marital duty, and wants her to live with him. Hill v. Hill, 56 South. 941, 942, 62 Fla. 493, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1117.

"Willful desertion," as used in the divorce laws, means that the desertion must be wrongful (that is, in disregard of the marital obligations), but it is not essential that it be with any purpose of working an injury. Kupka v. Kupka, 109 N. W. 610, 611, 132 Iowa, 191.

A letter written by a wife to her husband, stating, in response to his request for information, that she intended never to live with him again, indicates a "willful desertion." Edwards v. Edwards, 61 Atl. 531, 532, 69 N. J. Eq. 522.

Where complainant was not living with her husband at the time he uttered certain threats and committed certain acts of violence against her, such misconduct did not constitute "willful desertion." Corson v. Corson, 61 Atl. 157, 69 N. J. Eq. 513.

Under B. & C. Comp. § 507, providing that "willful" desertion for the period of one year shall be a ground for divorce, an intentional desertion is willful, within the meaning of the term as defined by the statute. State v. Luper (Or.) 95 Pac. 811, 813 (quoting and adopting definition in Ogilvie v. Ogilvie, 61 Pac. 627, 37 Or. 171).

"Willful desertion" is a breach of matrimonial duty, and is composed, first, of a breaking off of matrimonial cohabitation; and, second, an intent in the mind to desert. Both facts must be shown. Mere cessation of cohabitation is not enough. Tillis v. Tillis, 46 S. E. 926, 55 W. Va. 198.

Absence from a wife without her knowledge of the cause thereof, or of the place where the husband is residing, or the business in which he is engaged, or of his ability to support her, and living with another woman, for the period required by the statute, is evidence from which a finding may be made of "willful desertion." Carroll v. Carroll, 61 Atl. 383, 385, 68 N. J. Eq. 724.

Where a husband fails to furnish his wife a home suitable to their condition and reasonable support, and she is compelled by necessity to leave him and seek employment whereby to earn her own support, without intent of deserting him, such a leaving is not "willful desertion," within Rev. St. 1887, § 2460, so as to constitute a ground of divorce. Bell v. Bell, 98 Pac. 196, 199, 15 Idaho, 7.

Where a wife, in leaving her husband, wrote to him indicating that she had taken the step because of serious quarrels with her husband's mother, and gave him permission to come and see her, and signed herself in an affectionate manner, there was no "willful desertion," and it was the husband's duty to seek his wife and urge a reconciliation. Edwards v. Edwards, 61 Atl. 531, 532, 69 N. J. Eq. 522.

Where plaintiff and defendant were married, not expecting to establish a marital home, and plaintiff, who was a mere child, after occupying a room in a hotel with her husband for two or three days, went to her own home, and he to his former residence, after which they met at times, when on one occasion she demanded that he support her or make a home for her, his refusal did not establish "willful desertion," in the absence of proof that he was able to do so. Corson v. Corson, 61 Atl. 157, 69 N. J. Eq. 513.

"Willful desertion," to be ground for divorce, is a voluntary separation of one of the married parties from the other, or the voluntary refusal to renew a suspended marital relation, without justification either in the consent or wrongful conduct of the other. A divorce cannot be granted a husband for desertion, if the wife's separation from him was either by his compulsion or with his consent. A wife's separation from her husband by his compulsion may be caused either by actual physical force, or by threats and conduct on his part to afford her reasonable ground for belief or fear that the security of her life or person will be seriously endangered, unless she seeks safety by separation. A husband's consent to his wife's continued separation from him may be either express or implied, and may be proven either by a direct declaration or admission, or by such conduct and other circumstances as plainly and reasonably import such consent. Where a wife left her husband because of his threats, growing out of a mistake and belief on his part that she had taken certain money belonging to him, it was his duty, on discovering his mistake, to seek his wife, assure her of her future safety, and invite her to return, and without such an invitation her continued absence is not desertion. Ward v. Ward (Del.) 75 Atl. 611, 612, 7 Pennwilt, 364.

A husband, who leaves the family home merely because the wife declared that she would not live with him if he continued in the saloon business, cannot charge the wife with "willful desertion," under Rev. Civ. Code, § 70, subsec. 3, defining what will justify a spouse in leaving the family dwelling without being chargeable with desertion, but which will charge the other spouse with desertion, as departure caused by threats of bodily harm, etc.; the opinion of the wife on the subject of the saloon business being entitled to as much consideration as the opinion of the husband, for section 94 provides that husband and wife contract toward each other obligations of mutual respect, etc. Barrett v. Barrett, 105 N. W. 463, 464, 20 S. D. 210.

WILLFUL MISAPPLICATION—WILLFULLY MISAPPLY

The terms "willfully misapplied" have no marked technical meaning, and therefore do not of themselves fully and clearly set forth every element of an offense charged. United States v. Martindale, 146 Fed. 280-286 (quoting and adopting the definition in Britton's Case, 108 U. S. 193, 2 Sup. Ct. 526, 27 L. Ed. 701).

In a prosecution of a national bank officer for "willful misapplication" of the moneys, funds, and credits of the bank, the indictment properly alleged facts showing how the misapplication was made and the illegality thereof; the words "willful misapplication" having no settled technical meaning. United States v. Heinze, 161 Fed. 425, 428.

"Willful misapplication" of the moneys, funds, or credits of a national bank, within Rev. St. § 5209, consists in their misapplication by an officer, clerk, or agent of the bank, made willfully and wrongfully, and with intent to injure or defraud the association or some other person or company, and their conversion to his own use, or to the use of some one other than the bank. No previous lawful possession is necessary to constitute the crime. United States v. Breese, 131 Fed. 915, 921.

"Willful misapplication" of the funds of a national bank, in order to constitute an offense denounced by Rev. St. § 5209, must be a willful misapplication for the use or benefit of accused, or of some person or company other than the banking association, with intent to injure and defraud the association, or some other body corporate or natural person, being entirely different from acts constituting an official maladministration, subjecting the bank to a forfeiture of its charter, as provided by section 5239 (page 3515). United States v. Steinman, 172 Fed. 913, 915, 97 C. C. A. 271.

The words "willfully misapply," as used in Rev. St. § 5209, making it a criminal offense for any officer or agent of a national bank to embezzle, abstract, or "willfully misapply" any of the moneys, funds, or credits of the association, are not used in describing any offense at common law. They have no settled technical meaning like the word "embezzle," as used in the statute, or like steal, take, and carry away, as used at common law, they do not of themselves fully and clearly set forth every element of the offense charged. It would therefore not be sufficient simply to aver that defendant "willfully misapplied" the funds of the association, but there must be averments to show how the misapplication was made and that it was an unlawful one. Hence an indictment under section 5209, charging the defendant, as president and director, with having willfully misapplied certain credits of the bank by procuring the authority of the board of directors to an acceptance of an assignment of an interest in a partnership in satisfaction of an indebtedness due the bank, and charging the amount of such indebtedness to the account of stocks and bonds, knowing that the assignor had in fact no interest in such partnership, does not state an offense under the statute, since what was done seems to have been by authority of the board of directors, and the facts set out do not show a misapplication of credits by defendant, nor is it averred that such misapplication was made to his own use, benefit, or gain, nor to that of any person other than the bank. United States v. Smith, 152 Fed. 542, 543, 547.

WILLFUL MISAPPROPRIATION

Defendant's use of the funds of an estate for his sole benefit, as the controlling stockholder in a bank, amounted to a "willful misappropriation" of funds, within Bankr.

Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, 30 Stat. 550, providing that a discharge shall release the bankrupt of all his provable debts, except such as are created by misappropriation, etc. Morris v. Covey, 148 S. W. 257, 261, 104 Ark. 226.

WILLFUL MISCONDUCT

Since degrees of negligence are not recognized in Colorado, the terms "willful misconduct" and "actual negligence," as used in a bill of lading exempting the carrier from loss caused by acts of its servants, not amounting to willful misconduct or actual negligence, should be construed as a stipulation for exemption from ordinary negligence, and invalid. Adams v. Colorado & S. Ry. Co., 113 Pac. 1010, 1012, 49 Colo. 475, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 412.

"To constitute 'willful or wanton misconduct,' there must be actual knowledge, or that which is esteemed in law as the equivalent of actual knowledge, of the peril of the person injured, coupled with a conscious failure to act to the end of averting the injury." Mere violation of a statutory duty is but simple negligence, and does not constitute "willful or wanton misconduct." Smith v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 51 South. 792, 793, 165 Ala. 407.

While the word "willful" is sometimes synonymous with "voluntary" or "intentional," yet, when used in penal or quasi penal statutes, it usually implies an evil intent, and it is so used in Code, § 1251, providing that any county officer may be removed for willful misconduct or maladministration in office, so that, in a proceeding thereunder to remove a county treasurer, evidence of his good faith and innocence of intentional wrong was admissible so as to take the question of the willfulness of his wrongful act to the jury. While by Code, § 1403, requiring every person subject to taxation to attend at the office of the treasurer and pay his taxes in full, the Legislature seems to have contemplated that each property owner should appear in person and pay his taxes, the receipt by the county treasurer of taxes paid by check on responsible banks is not willful official misconduct within Code, § 1251, permitting any county officer to be removed for willful official misconduct, even though there is a delay of several days in actually collecting the money. State v. Meek, 127 N. W. 1023, 1024, 148 Iowa, 671, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 566, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1075.

The phrase "misconduct in office" is broad enough to include any willful malfeasance, misfeasance, or nonfeasance in office (citing State v. Slover, 20 S. W. 788, 113 Mo. 208). It does not necessarily imply corruption or criminal intention. The official doing of a wrongful act, or official neglect to do an act which ought to have been done, will constitute the offense, although there was no corrupt or malicious motive (citing Mechem, Public Officers, § 457). After defining "misconduct," Webster declares it to be synonymous with "misbehavior," "misdemeanor," "delinquency," and "offense." Pen. Code, § 758, provides that an accusation against any municipal officer for "willful or corrupt misconduct in office" may be presented by the grand jury. Section 772 provides for the summary removal of public officers on an accusation verified by the oath of any person alleging that the officer has "neglected or refused to perform the official duties pertaining to his office." Section 335 declares every public officer who refuses or neglects to inform against and prosecute persons whom he has reasonable cause to believe offenders of the chapter on gambling guilty of a misdemeanor. Under the definitions and statutory provisions recited above, a public officer, who fails to prosecute gamblers of whom he has knowledge, is guilty of "willful misconduct," within the meaning of section 758, and may be accused by the grand jury thereunder. Coffey v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 82 Pac. 75, 76, 77, 147 Cal. 525.

WILLFUL MISSTATEMENT

Where a fidelity bond provided that any "willful misstatement" or suppression of fact by the employer, in his statement or declaration concerning the employed, should render the bond void from the beginning, the phrase "willful misstatement" was intended to mean any material false statement made with knowledge of its falsity, voluntarily, and not inadvertently, and hence an instruction that the bond was not avoided unless the misstatements were made "with intent to secure renewals of the bond" was erroneous. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Bank of Timmons ville, 139 Fed. 101, 103, 71 C. C. A. 299.

WILLFUL MURDER

See Willful—Willfully.

WILLFUL NEGLIGENCE

The words "knowingly and willfully fails," in a statute imposing a penalty, where a corporation or person charged "knowingly and willfully fails" to comply therewith, are about equivalent to "willfully neglects," and mean the same as "willfully omits." New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. United States, 165 Fed. 833, 840, 91 C. C. A. 519.

The term "willful neglect," as used in Civ. Code, § 92, as constituting a cause of divorce, means "a neglect of the husband to provide for his wife the common necessities of life, he having the ability to do so; or it is the failure to do so by reason of idleness, profligacy, or dissipation." Locke v. Locke, 94 Pac. 244, 153 Cal. 56 (quoting Civ. Code, § 105).

The enforcement of the law in cities of the metropolitan class is placed by the Legislature directly under the control of the board of fire and police commissioners, of which the mayor is principal officer. The chief of police is appointed by the board and removable at its pleasure. It is the duty of the mayor to "order, direct and enforce" the law. Comp. St. 1911, c. 12a, § 65. If the board directs in what manner and to what extent the law for the suppression of prostitution and the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be enforced, and the chief of police in good faith believes it is his duty to be governed by the established policy of the board and the directions of the mayor, and faithfully enforces the law accordingly, it cannot be found that he did "willfully fail, neglect, or refuse to enforce any law which it is made his duty to enforce." Comp. St. 1911, c. 71, § 1a. State ex rel. Thompson v. Donahue, 135 N. W. 1030, 1034, 91 Neb. 311, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 18.

"Willful default" on the part of a trustee, within the terms of a will providing that the trustees should be liable only for willful default, and not for any loss or damage which might happen to the trust property without their respective "willful neglect or default," meant intentionally making away with the trust property, and a willful neglect means such reckless indifference to true interests of the trust as to amount to or partake of a willful violation of duty; neither being fulfilled by a mere improper exercise of discretion on the part of the trustees in using $850,000 of the principal of the trust, amounting to $920,000 in the construction of a new building. Where trustees had become committed to the construction of a new building out of the funds of the trust estate, and the plans had been practically completed, they were not guilty of willful neglect or default in purchasing a lease of a tenant in an old building that was to be destroyed, and in agreeing to pay the rent of another store for such tenant during the erection of the new building, in order to lease to the tenant the first floor and basement of the new building for 10 years at a rent of $17,000 a year. Warren v. Pazolt, 89 N. E. 381, 382, 203 Mass. 328.

WILLFUL NEGLIGENCE

See, also, Gross Negligence; Willfulness.

There are no degrees of negligence, and negligence, no matter how reprehensible, can never approximate willfulness. Vandalia R. Co. v. Clem, 96 N. E. 789, 790, 49 Ind. App. 94.

The term "willful negligence" is a misleading and contradictory expression. Conduct cannot be both "willful" and "negligent," as "negligence" involves inattention, and "willfulness" intention. Anderson v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co., 114 N. W. 1123, 1126, 103 Minn. 224 (dissenting opinion, citing 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 7468, 7835; Bolin v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co., 84 N. W. 446, 108 Wis. 333, 81 Am.

St. Rep. 911; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Perkins, 44 South. 602, 152 Ala. 133; Lake Shore & M. S. R. R. v. Bodemer, 29 N. E. 692, 139 Ill. 596, 32 Am. St. Rep. 218).

The conflict in instructions submitting the issue of negligence of defendant and the issue of a willful wrongful act cannot be harmonized on the theory that the term "negligence," as used in the first instruction, covers willful acts, since "negligence" signifies the absence of care and implies a failure of duty and excludes an idea of intentional wrong, while "willful negligence" implies an intentional failure to perform a manifest duty. Tognazzini v. Freeman, 123 Pac. 540, 543, 18 Cal. App. 468.

Whether the term "willful or wanton negligence," which is sometimes employed in relation to a failure to comply with the statutory requirement as to the giving of a signal or the taking of some precaution in connection with railway crossings, and which merely raises the standard of diligence, is accurately used or not, it does not mean that mere negligence alone, as a rule authorizes charges on the subject of exemplary and punitive damages. Southern R. Co. v. Davis, 65 S. E. 131, 133, 132 Ga. 812 (citing 4 Elliott, R. R., § 1801; 1 Thomp. Neg. § 22; Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Moorer, 22 South. 900, 116 Ala. 642, 644; Parker v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 34 N. E. 504, 134 Ind. 673, 23 L. R. A. 552).

While the term "willful negligence" may not be strictly accurate, and many cases hold that willfulness repels, or is inconsistent with, the idea of negligence, this is not necessarily or entirely true. Negligence contains the idea of inadvertence as one of its features, and inadvertence and willfulness are as a rule antagonized. Negligence is the failure to exercise the proper degree of care in the performance of some legal duty which one owes another and causing unintended damage. The breach of duty can be, and frequently is, intentional and willful, and yet the act may be negligent, and it is only when there has been a designed injury caused, or an intended damage done, that the idea of negligence is eliminated. Hence, when the willfulness is referred to the breach of duty instead of the injury caused or damage done, the term "willful negligence" is not improper. Foot v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 54 S. E. 843, 844, 142 N. C. 52 (citing Shear. & R. Neg. §§ 3, 4; 1 Thomp. Com. Neg. § 21; 2 Thompson, § 1626; Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Bryan, 7 N. E. 807, 107 Ind. 51; Southern Express Co. v. Brown, 7 South. 318, 8 South. 425, 67 Miss. 261, 19 Am. St. Rep. 306).

"Willful negligence" consists of a failure on the part of the party charged or his servant to use reasonable care to avoid an accident after acquiring knowledge that it is impending. In an action for injuries by collision with a street car, an instruction that it was the duty of the motoneer, after he discovered plaintiff in a position of danger, to use ordinary care to stop the car, and if he failed to do so he would be guilty of willful negligence, with a further instruction that willful negligence is simply that "first you must find that the motoneer actually saw the plaintiff in a condition of danger. Now, willful negligence is after that, that he did not use reasonable care to avoid the danger"—is proper. Teal v. St. Paul City Ry. Co., 104 N. W. 945, 96 Minn. 379.

As gross negligence

The term "willful negligence," even if not self-contradictory, is not equivalent to gross negligence. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Hamler, 74 N. E. 705, 710, 215 Ill. 525, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 674, 106 Am. St. Rep. 187, 3 Ann. Cas. 42.

As wanton or reckless conduct

"Willful negligence," whereby liability is incurred, irrespective of the contributory negligence of the party injured, is a reckless disregard of the safety of the person or property of another, by failing, after discovering the danger, to exercise ordinary care to prevent injury. Alger, Smith & Co. v. Duluth-Superior Traction Co., 101 N. W. 298, 299, 93 Minn. 314; Gibbons v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 108 N. W. 471, 472, 99 Minn. 142 (citing Alger, Smith & Co. v. Duluth-Superior Traction Co., 101 N. W. 298, 93 Minn. 314).

"Willful negligence," whereby liability is incurred, irrespective of plaintiff's negligence, is not simply greater negligence than that of the injured party, nor does it include the element of malice, but is a reckless disregard of the safety of the person or property of another, by failing after discovering the peril to exercise ordinary care to prevent the injury. Havel v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 139 N. W. 137, 138, 120 Minn. 195; Anderson v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 114 N. W. 1123, 1125, 103 Minn. 224.

"Willful or wanton negligence," which is distinguished from "ordinary negligence" in that liability is incurred thereby, irrespective of contributory negligence, is not simply greater negligence than that of the injured party, nor does it necessarily include the element of malice or an actual intent to injure another, but it is reckless disregard of the safety of the person or property of another by failing, after discovery of the peril, to exercise ordinary care to prevent the impending injury. Alger, Smith & Co. v. Duluth-Superior Traction Co., 101 N. W. 298, 299, 93 Minn. 314 (citing Fonda v. St. Paul City Ry. Co., 74 N. W. 166, 71 Minn. 438, 70 Am. St. Rep. 341; Sloniker v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 79 N. W. 168, 76 Minn. 306; Lando v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 83 N. W. 1089, 81 Minn. 279; Olson v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 87 N. W. 843, 84 Minn. 258; Rawitzer v. St. Paul City Ry. Co., 100 N. W. 664, 93 Minn. 84).

"The use of the phrase 'willful negligence,' in the connection in which it is frequently employed, is, to say the least, inapt. Whatever idea the word 'willful' may express when so used, it is beyond question that, to entitle one to recover for an injury to which his own negligence may have contributed, the injurious act or omission must have been purposely and intentionally committed, with a design to produce injury, or it must have been so committed, under such circumstances, as that its natural and probable consequence would be to produce injury to others. There must have been either an actual or constructive intent to commit the injury. The act must have involved conduct quasi criminal in character. * * * To constitute a willful injury, the act or omission which produced it must have been purposed and intentional, or must have been committed under such circumstances as evinced a reckless disregard for the safety of others." Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Ferrell, 78 N. E. 988, 990, 39 Ind. App. 515 (quoting and adopting definition in Belt Railroad & Stockyard Co. v. Mann, 7 N. E. 893, 107 Ind. 89, 92).

WILLFUL OMISSION

The words "knowingly and willfully fails," in a statute imposing a penalty when a corporation or person charged "knowingly and willfully fails" to comply therewith, are about equivalent to "willfully neglects," and mean the same as "willfully omits." New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. United States, 165 Fed. 833, 840, 91 C. C. A. 519.

WILLFUL REFUSAL

See Willful—Willfully.

WILLFUL TRESPASS

See Willful—Willfully.

WILLFUL TRESPASSER

One who takes the ore of another from his land without right either recklessly or with the actual intent so to do is a "willful trespasser"; but one who takes such ore without right, but inadvertently and unintentionally, or in the honest belief that he is exercising his own right, is not a "willful trespasser." Resurrection Gold Min. Co. v. Fortune Gold Min. Co., 129 Fed. 668, 679, 64 C. C. A. 180.

WILLFUL VIOLATION

WILLFULNESS

"Willfulness" is a wrongful act done intentionally without just cause. McNamara v. St. Louis Transit Co., 81 S. W. 880, 881, 182 Mo. 676, 66 L. R. A. 486 (quoting United States v. Taylor, 2 Sumn. 586, 28 Fed. Cas. p. 31).

Wantonness or willfulness is such gross want of care and regard for the rights of others as show a disregard of consequences or a willingness to inflict an injury. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Ricker, 116 Ill. App. 428, 432.

"Willfulness" or "wantonness," where the peril of the person injured is known, means a direct intent to inflict injury, or an act done or omitted, with the consciousness that the act or omission will probably eventuate in injury. Anniston Electric & Gas Co. v. Rosen, 48 South. 798, 802, 159 Ala. 195, 133 Am. St. Rep. 32.

Each of the words "wantonness," "willfulness," and "recklessness" embodies the element of malice, either express or implied, and are in law substantially the equivalent of each other, in so far as they give rise to an action based upon punitive damages. Hull v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 57 S. E. 28, 76 S. C. 278, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1213 (citing Pickett v. Southern Ry. Co., Carolina Division, 48 S. E. 466, 60 S. C. 445).

Negligence distinguished

Mere "negligence" and "willfulness" are not synonymous terms. Southern Ry. Co. v. Davis, 65 S. E. 131, 132, 132 Ga. 812.

An act done "willingly" on full information is not done negligently. Negligence is the result of inattention or oversight. Dean v. St. Louis Woodenware Works, 80 S. W. 292, 296, 106 Mo. App. 167.

Negligence cannot be of such degree as to become "willfulness." Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Starks, 92 N. E. 54, 56, 174 Ind. 345.

There are no degrees of negligence, and negligence, no matter how reprehensible, can never approximate "willfulness." Vandalia R. Co. v. Clem, 96 N. E. 789, 790, 49 Ind. App. 94.

"An inadvertent failure to observe due care indicates mere negligence, but an advertent or conscious failure to observe due care passes beyond mere negligence into 'wantonness' or 'willfulness.'" Tinsley v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 51 S. E. 913, 914, 72 S. C. 350.

"Willfulness" means something more than mere oversight, carelessness, neglect, or even shiftlessness. True, in the legal sense of the word, an intentional act is ordinarily willful; but the intentional act in opening a gate or leaving it open does not necessarily imply an intention that cattle shall pass through such gate on a railroad track. Claus v. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co., 111 N. W. 15, 16, 136 Iowa, 7.

"Willfulness" and 'negligence' are the opposites of each other; the former signifying the presence of intention and the latter its absence." Rideout v. Winnebago Traction Co., 101 N. W. 672, 675, 123 Wis. 297, 69 L. R. A. 601 (quoting and adopting definition in Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Miller, 49 N. E. 445, 449, 149 Ind. 490-501).

"Willfulness" and "negligence" are diametrically opposed; negligence importing inattention, inadvertence, and indifference, while willfulness imports intention, purpose, and design; and there being no negligence with, and no willfulness without, intent. Barrett v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 96 N. E. 490, 492, 48 Ind. App. 668.

"Willfulness" and 'negligence' are the opposite of each other; the former signifying the presence of intention and the latter its absence. Negligence arises from inattention, thoughtlessness, while willfulness cannot exist without purpose or design, * * * and, when willfulness is the essential in the act or conduct charged to the party with a wrong, the case ceases to be one of negligence." Memphis St. Ry. Co. v. Roe, 102 S. W. 343, 346, 118 Tenn. 601 (quoting and adopting the definition in Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Miller, 49 N. E. 445, 149 Ind. 490)

"Willfulness" and 'negligence' are the opposites of each other; the one signifying the presence of intention or purpose, the other its absence. This distinction has not always been observed. Consequently there are cases that use the terms 'gross' or 'willful' negligence to designate willful injuries. Late cases have made the distinction clear. And the principle of the responsibility of the willful wrongdoer for all the consequences of his misconduct is really an old one." Morrison v. Lee, 113 N. W. 1025, 1029, 16 N. D. 377, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 650.

"Willfulness" or "wantonness," as applied in cases of injury to a person by a breach of duty, where the peril of the person injured is known, means a direct intent to inflict injury, or an act done or omitted, with the consciousness that the act or omission will probably eventuate in injury. Anniston Electric & Gas Co. v. Rosen, 48 South. 798, 799, 802, 159 Ala. 195, 133 Am. St. Rep. 32.

"Willfulness" is the intentional doing of some act or the failure to do some act, according to one's own will, regardless of the right of others, when the party knows, "or is under legal obligation to know," that the doing or the failing to do such act might cause injury to other persons. Geddings v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 75 S. E. 284, 286, 91 S. C. 477.

A conscious act or neglect is willful, though there is no evil intent, but "willfulness" implies something more than mere failure to use ordinary care; there being a clear distinction between a negligent omission and a willful failure to act. Cook v. Big Muddy-

Carterville Mining Co., 94 N. E. 90, 94, 249 Ill. 41.

Negligence and carelessness are generally esteemed as not only not "willfulness," but rather the opposite. Schooler v. Harrington, 81 S. W. 468, 469, 106 Mo. App. 607 (following Gibeline v. Smith, 80 S. W. 961, 106 Mo. App. 545).

"Negligence" and 'willfulness' are the opposites of each other. They indicate radically different mental states. * * * Negligence is also to be carefully distinguished from fraud; the distinction arising in this case, as before, upon the element of inadvertence. Fraud is invariably intentional, either actually or constructively; negligence is never so." Standard Marine Ins. Co., Limited, of Liverpool, Eng., v. Nome Beach Light-erage & Transp. Co., 133 Fed. 636, 647, 648, 67 C. C. A. 602, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1095.

"Willfulness" implies design. It involves conduct which is quasi criminal. Willfulness and negligence are held inconsistent. Purpose or design is foreign to negligence. Willfulness cannot be inferred from a mere knowledge on the part of operatives of the presence of the injured party. Before it will be inferred, such operatives must have knowledge also of the inability of the injured party to avoid the injury. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Ferrell, 78 N. E. 988, 989, 39 Ind. App. 515.

In order to constitute "willfulness" or wantonness or reckless indifference to probable consequences, the act done or omitted must be done or omitted with a knowledge or a present consciousness that injury will probably result; and this consciousness is not to be implied from mere knowledge of the elements of the dangerous situation a person may be in and negligent and inadvertent acts in respect of the peril. Duncan v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 44 South. 418, 420, 152 Ala. 118.

The term "willful negligence" is a misleading and contradictory expression. Conduct cannot be both "willful" and "negligent," as "negligence" involves inattention, and "willfulness" intention. Anderson v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co., 114 N. W. 1123, 1126, 103 Minn. 224 (dissenting opinion, citing 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 7468, 7835; Bolin v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 84 N. W. 446, 108 Wis. 333, 81 Am. St. Rep. 911; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Perkins, 44 South. 602, 152 Ala. 133; Lake Shore & M. S. R. R. v. Bodemer, 29 N. E. 692, 139 Ill. 596, 32 Am. St. Rep. 218.

Negligence may result from omission respecting duty. An "act" or "wrongful act" denotes affirmative action or performance, and an expression of will or purpose, as distinguished from "omission" or "wrongful omission," which denotes a negative and inaction. Randle v. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co., 53 South. 918, 921, 169 Ala. 314.

The conflict in instructions, submitting the issue of negligence of defendant and the issue of a willful wrongful act, cannot be harmonized on the theory that the term "negligence," as used in the first instruction, covers willful acts, since "negligence" signifies the absence of care and implies a failure of duty, and excludes an idea of intentional wrong, while "willful negligence" implies an intentional failure to perform a manifest duty. Tognazzini v. Freeman, 123 Pac. 540, 543, 18 Cal. App. 468.

An instruction that "willful" is what the word implies; it means an act proceeding from a will; done of a purpose; an intention to do it; and that "willfulness" is an act which proceeds from the will, so as to make the act a purpose act—was not error, where the court, in connection therewith, illustrated the difference between "negligence" and "willfulness." Talbert v. Charleston & W. C. Ry., 55 S. E. 138, 139, 75 S. C. 136.

A complaint for willful injury must show that the injurious act was purposely done, with an intent to inflict willfully and purposely the particular injury complained of; "willfulness" being a desire or intent to produce a certain result, and inconsistent with negligence. Southern Ry. Co. v. McNeeley, 88 N. E. 714, 715, 44 Ind. App. 126.

WILLING

An instruction that, under the requirements of the law, a valid location of a mining claim may be made when the prospector has discovered such indications of mineral that he is willing to spend his time and money in following with the expectation of finding ore was improperly modified by substituting the word "justified" for the word "willing." The question whether the miner is "willing" to spend his time and money is an entirely different one from the question whether he is "justified" in doing it. The former is a question to be answered by the miner himself, while the latter would present a question for experts and a jury. Ambergris Min. Co. v. Day, 85 Pac. 109, 113, 12 Idaho, 108.

WILLINGLY

As willfully, see Willful—Willfully.

An instruction, in a prosecution for homicide, that, when the law says one must not fight "willingly," it does not mean that he shall not fight willingly or intentionally for his own protection, but that he shall not fight willingly and intentionally to gratify his own desire to fight, is erroneous. The law requires that he must not fight at all, unless he is free from fault in bringing on the difficulty, and has no reasonable way open for retreat, and the assault on him is of such a character as to endanger life, or to impress a reasonable man that, to save his own life or himself from great bodily harm, it is necessary to strike. Harbour v. State, 37 South. 330, 332, 140 Ala. 103.

WILLOW

WINCH

A "winch" is a windlass upon the upper deck of a vessel, by means of which freight is elevated or lowered by a rope wound around a drum upon the windlass. Suderman & Dolson v. Kriger, 109 S. W. 373, 376, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 29.

WIND

WIND AFT

Within the meaning of International Navigation Rules, art. 17, subd. "e," 26 Stat. 326, which provides that the one of two sailing vessels which has the wind aft shall keep out of the way of the other, a vessel has the "wind aft" when it is not more than  $2\frac{1}{2}$  points from directly aft. The Gov. Ames, 187 Fed. 40, 43, 109 C. C. A. 94.

WIND SHOT

Evidence held to sustain a finding that plaintiff, a miner, was injured by an explosion of mine gas or mine dust due to insufficient ventilation, and not as a result of a "wind shot," consisting of a failure to make the holes for a blast of sufficient depth or to sufficiently tamp the powder so that when it was exploded it would flash out of the drill holes instead of tearing out the coal. Nicholson Coal Mining Co. v. Moulden, 136 S. W. 620, 621, 143 Ky. 348.

WINDRODE

A vessel is "windrode" when it is held in equilibrium between the wind and tide. The Ciudad De Reus, 171 Fed. 470, 473.

WINDSTORM

"Windstorm," as used in a policy insuring against loss of live stock by tornado, cyclone, or windstorm means more than an ordinary gust of wind no matter how prolonged. Jordan v. Iowa Mut. Tornado Ins. Co. of Des Moines, 130 N. W. 177, 178, 151 Iowa, 73, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 266.

WINDING UP

Where a testator, by his will, directed his executors to proceed with moderation and patience, but with due diligence, to the winding up of his estate, and the question was whether the will as a whole manifested his intention to have the real estate sold and the proceeds divided, the term "winding up," as used therein, was held to imply a disposition of the estate which would turn it into money. May v. Brewster, 73 N. E. 546, 547, 187 Mass. 524.

WINE

See Native Wine; Still Wine.

A Japanese alcoholic beverage made from rice by processes similar to those in making beer, which resembles still wine in its percentage of alcohol, which in quality is only remotely similar to wine, is not sufficiently similar to warrant its classification as such, under Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule H, par. 296, 30 Stat. 174. Nishimiya v. United States, 131 Fed. 650, 651.

"Wine" is the fermented juice of the grape. To establish the fact that liquor sold in a local option territory was wine, the formula under which the liquor was made, its composition, and the amount of alcohol it contained, as shown by a chemical analysis, could be proven by an expert, or by nonexpert testimony as that the wine sold was intoxicating. The fact that the liquor sold was intoxicating could be shown by any competent evidence, direct or circumstantial. Nussbaumer v. State, 44 South. 712, 714, 54 Fla. 87.

Vermuth is not "wine" within either the commercial or the popular meaning of that term, and therefore is not subject to the stamp tax on "sparkling or other wines," provided in War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, c. 448, 30 Stat. 463. Taylor v. Treat, 153 Fed. 656.

Vermuth is not a "wine," "cordial," or "liqueur," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule H, par. 296, 30 Stat. 174, prohibiting an allowance for the leakage of those three articles. United States v. Julius Wile, Sons & Co., 178 Fed. 269, 270, 101 C. C. A. 574.

Cider

Cider is not "wine" or any mixture thereof. Donithan v. Commonwealth, 64 S. E. 1050, 109 Va. 845.

As intoxicating liquor

See Intoxicating Liquor.

As liquor

See Liquor.

WINE GALLON

The "wine gallon," which is the gallon of 231 cubic inches, is the customs gallon of the United States and should be used in computing the duty on such articles as olives in brine. J. M. Ceballos & Co. v. U. S., 139 Fed. 705.

WINE GROWER

The term "wine grower," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 3015, giving a wine grower the right to sell wine of his own production in any quantity on his own premises, means one who manufactures wine from grapes grown on his own premises. State v. Miller, 78 S. W. 643, 104 Mo. App. 297 (citing Stand. Dict. p. 2068; Cent. Dict. p. 6939).

WINE ROOM

A "wine room" is a place established for the sale of wines. Barker v. State, 43 S. E. 744, 745, 117 Ga. 428.

To make a room a "wine room," within Sess. Laws 1891, p. 315, § 1, prohibiting the keeping of a wine room in connection with a saloon into which females are permitted to enter and supplied with liquor, it must be kept as a part of a saloon; the statute intending to designate the place which patrons of the saloon might use for private tipping purposes instead of drinking at the bar. Ellis v. People, 88 Pac. 461, 38 Colo. 516 (citing Walker v. People, 37 Pac. 30, 5 Colo. App. 37.)

WING NETS

Fishing with a "wing net," which consists of netting stretched over hoops somewhat similar to barrel hoops, the first of which is about 30 inches in diameter, and of succeeding hoops greatly decreasing in size, and is about 12 feet in length and a wing about 5 feet long on each side, one end of the net being attached to the shore, mouth upstream, does not come within the exception in Acts of 1895, c. 127, p. 256, § 1, allowing minnows to be caught by dip nets not exceeding 6 feet in length. Freeman v. State, 100 S. W. 723, 724, 118 Tenn. 95.

WINNER

All those who have won more than they have lost during one sitting by playing at cards are "winners," within the meaning of Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 38, § 132, which provides that any person who shall at any time or sitting by playing at cards lose to any person so playing any money amounting to $10, and shall pay the same, may sue and recover the money by action in assumpsit. Zellers v. White, 70 N. E. 669, 672, 208 Ill. 518, 100 Am. St. Rep. 243.

The word "winner," as used in Comp. Laws, § 3200, relating to the recovery of money or property lost at gaming, and giving a right of action against the "winner," was not intended to include merely the party in whose favor the wager is theoretically decided, but includes the one to whom, in addition, the money or property wagered has been delivered. Until this delivery is made, he cannot be said in law to have won the money or property; ample redress up to the time of such delivery being given by another section of the statute by suit against the stakeholder. Armstrong v. Aragon, 79 Pac. 291, 292, 13 N. M. 19.

WINNOWER MACHINE

A "winnowing machine" is "a machine in which grain, accompanied by chaff, dirt, cheat, cockle, grass seeds, dust, straw, and other foul [matter] either or all is subjected to a shaking action on riddles and sieves in succession, the while an artificial blast of wind is driven against it on and through the sieves, and as it falls from one to another." The Baker patents, No. 726,812 and No. 736,346, each for a process of treating coffee and the product of such process, which consists of cutting or crushing the roasted coffee bean and winnowing the dust, chaff, and disengaged silver skin of the bean from the granulated product by means of an apparatus designed for the purpose and consisting of a hopper, crushing or cutting rolls, and a screen or sieve through and over which a blast of air is forced, are void for lack of invention, in view of the old and familiar use of the same process in the cleaning of grain, so long known and practiced that a court may take judicial cognizance of it. Baker v. F. A. Duncombe Mfg. Co., 146 Fed. 744, 748, 77 C. C. A. 234 (quoting and adopting the definition in Knight, Mech. Dict. vol. 3, p. 2786).

WINTER

"Winter" means the cold season, including the last part of one year and the first part of the next. J. T. Day's Committee v. Exchange Bank of Kentucky (Ky.) 116 S. W. 259, 260.

WIRE

See Deadened Wire; Guard Wire; Hot Wire; Jumping a Wire; Live Wire; Messenger Wires; Round Steel Wire. Articles manufactured from, see Articles Within Tariff Act. Coated wire, see Coated. Manufactures of wire, see Manufactures—Manufactured Articles.

The word "wires," in Laws 1890, c. 566, p. 1148, § 65, providing that the occupant of any premises within 100 feet of the wires of any electric light corporation may require it to supply him with electric light, was intended to designate the wire through which was distributed the electricity with which the houses were to be lighted. Moore v. Champlain Electric Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 37, 39, 88 App. Div. 289.

In the title of St. 1906, p. 79, c. 117, "An act relative to the granting of locations for poles and wires in towns," the word "wires" comprehends their location under, as well as above, the surface of highways. Metropolitan Home Tel. Co. v. Emerson, 88 N. E. 670, 672, 202 Mass. 402.

WIRE-GLASS

"Wire-glass" is a sheet of plate glass having imbedded in its center a fine wire-web. This web strengthens the sheet and prevents its being shattered by fire or a blow. Rough wire-glass is cast in two varieties; one adapted for polishing, the other not. Unpolished wire-glass is used for skylight and area purposes. Polished, or wire-glass plate, is used as ordinary plate glass in large buildings for window lights. In addition to window-light service, however, wire-glass plate, by reason of its imbedded mesh, serves the further purpose of an iron shutter. It is thus a protection against entry and a fire retardant. Schmertz Wire-Glass Co. v. Pittsburgh Plate-Glass Co., 168 Fed. 73, 74.

WIRING OUT

The process by which electric cars were run out into the street from the building in which they were stored was denominated "wiring out"; the electric power being carried by movable wires 20 to 30 feet long. Mullen v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 134, 89 App. Div. 21.

WISH

As creating a trust

"Undoubtedly the word 'wish' may be equivalent to will or request or direct, if the context justifies that meaning." A testator left his property to his wife and daughter, the will reciting that his mother was living, and dependent upon her children, and therefore requested his wife to pay her such sums as might be requisite for her comfort. The will then added, "and it is my wish and expectation that when my wife, J., shall make her will, disposing of the property left her by me, that she will generously remember the children of my deceased brother, W., and such others as she may choose." The will did not create a trust in favor of the children of the deceased brother. Russell v. United States Trust Co. of New York, 127 Fed. 445, 447 (citing Bliven v. Seymour, 88 N. Y. 469; Phillips v. Phillips, 19 N. E. 411, 112 N. Y. 197, 8 Am. St. Rep. 737).

As elect

The word "elect," as used in a statute providing for the submission of a proposed amendment to a Constitution, and providing that upon the ballot there shall be written or printed the words "for the constitutional amendment or against the constitutional amendment," as the voters shall "elect," is equivalent to the word "wish." Warfield v. Vandiver, 60 Atl. 538, 544, 101 Md. 78, 4 Ann. Cas. 692.

WISH AND DESIRE

Where a will created a trust of the residue of the estate, and provided that, after the death of testator's wife, one-half of the principal of the trust fund should be paid to her appointee, that it was testator's "wish and desire" that she should appoint the share to testator's daughter and her children, the words "wish and desire" did not constitute a trust but merely expressed a wish. Holmes v. Dalley, 78 N. E. 513, 514, 192 Mass. 451.

WISH AND EXPECTATION

A testator willed and bequeathed two-thirds of all his property to his wife, and one-third to his daughter. The will then contained the following: "And it is my 'wish and expectation' that when my wife J. shall make her will disposing of the property left by me that she will generously remember the children of my deceased brother W." Held that, in the absence of any evidence of circumstances which might effect its construction, such clause did not create a trust in favor of the children of the deceased brother. Russell v. United States Trust Co. of New York, 136 Fed. 758, 760, 69 C. C. A. 410.

WIT

Where a deed has the names of two persons written in the place where the names of subscribing witnesses are usually placed, and the letters "Wit" are written above the names of the two persons, and where the testificandum clause is, "In witness whereof we hereunto set our hands and seals this the 4th day of May, 1903," other facts showing delivery, the attestation of the deed is sufficient. Richbourg v. Rose, 44 South. 69, 72, 53 Fla. 173, 125 Am. St. Rep. 1061, 12 Ann. Cas. 274.

WITH

The fact that an alleged agent used cards having "A. G. S., 'with' J. S. B. Co.," did not by the use of such words define his powers, or indicate whether he was the president or the porter of the company, or merely its traveling solicitor, and would not warrant the defendant or the court in concluding that A. G. S. had been authorized by the plaintiff to dispose of its property. Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. v. Grilmon, 81 Pac. 43, 46, 28 Nev. 235.

As used in a will providing that the testator's wife should receive the house and lot with the furniture contained therein, etc., the word "with" was a word denoting continuity, not separation, so far as the different classes of property as named were to have relation to the words which followed them. Ludlam v. Ludlam, 95 N. Y. Supp. 862, 864, 47 Misc. Rep. 232.

The word "with," preceding the grant of the right to set up, operate, and maintain a telegraph or telephone line and also preceding the grant of the right of ingress and egress, imports a close and inseparable union between those rights and the right to maintain the pipe lines, and indicates that the rights granted by the clauses following it were incidental to the pipe line right. North-eastern Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Hepburn, 69 Atl. 249, 251, 73 N. J. Eq. 657.

As in addition to

"With" is frequently used in the sense of "in addition to." Beddow v. Flage, 126 N. W. 97, 98, 20 N. D. 66.

The word "with," as used in a clause in a will providing that "'with' the above legacies I leave them my only heirs of all the real estate credits and real estate that they shall be my only heirs with the obligation to bear the maintenance of the new-born son of my son V.," is to be taken in its ordinary signification, and, where it was previously stated in the will that testatrix would leave "the legacies," it seems apparent that she intended to add to the legacies previously made a devise and bequest of the residuum. Lavaggi v. Borella, 67 Atl. 929, 930, 73 N. J. Eq. 419.

By synonymous

The word "with" in an information for robbery, charging that defendant then and there willfully, etc., and "with" force and fear, committed the offense, was used as synonymous with "by" and equivalent to the expression "by means of"; the meaning of the word not being limited to accompaniment, association, or proximity, though such is its primary meaning. State v. Pemberton, 104 Pac. 556, 557, 39 Mont. 530.

The term "with" denotes or expresses some situation or relation of nearness, proximity, association, connection, or the like. It is used to denote the accompaniment of cause, means, instrument, etc.; sometimes equivalent to "by." Bertig-Smythe Co. v. Bonsack Lumber Co., 86 S. W. 870, 872, 112 Mo. App. 259 (quoting and adopting the definition in Webst. Dict.).

WITH AS LITTLE DELAY AS POSSIBLE

A contract requiring plaintiff to fill defendant's orders for lumber "with as little delay as possible" meant within a reasonable time. Wm. Cameron & Co. v. Matthews (Tex.) 124 S. W. 192, 193 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 528).

WITH COLLECTION

A contract reading "with collection" should be interpreted to mean with a charge for collection; that is to say, a reasonable and customary charge for the nature of the collection which may be necessary. A note payable with collection charges is nonnegotiable, since the payment of the principal sum becomes connected with another and uncertain sum. Buck v. Harris, 102 S. W. 640, 125 Mo. App. 365.

WITH COSTS

The rule that the words "with costs" or "with costs to the respondents," where there are several respondents, means only one bill of costs is well settled in suits of equity, and some of the cases seem also to apply the same rule to condemnation proceedings, where the owners of the leasehold and reversion appear by separate attorneys. In re Pine's Stream & East Meadow Stream in Town of Hempstead, 114 N. Y. Supp. 681, 682, 62 Misc. Rep. 61.

WITH THE DEED

A power of attorney is recorded "with the deed" executed in pursuance of it, though it is recorded at an earlier date than the deed. Flint River Lumber Co. v. Smith, 49 S. E. 745, 746, 122 Ga. 5, 106 Am. St. Rep. 85 (citing Rosenthal v. Ruffin, 60 Md. 324; Mix v. Hotchkiss, 14 Conn. 32).

WITH EVERY OTHER PERSON

Since Factors Act (Laws 1830, c. 179) § 6, excluding carriers from the benefits of the act, does not exclude pawnbrokers they are entitled to the protection of the act, the phrase "with every other person" in section 3 by necessary implication making the act of general application except as expressly stated. Freudenheim v. Gütter, 94 N. E. 640, 644, 201 N. Y. 94.

WITH EXCHANGE

Where a negotiable note is executed at one place, and payable at another, the insertion of the words "with exchange" by the payee, without the knowledge or consent of the maker, does not render the note non-negotiable. First Nat. Bank of Galva v. Nordstrom, 78 Pac. 804, 805, 70 Kan. 485.

If a note or bill reads for the payment of money "with exchange," it means with a charge for exchange at current or customary rate. The negotiability of a note drawn and payable at the same place is not affected by the words "with exchange." Buck v. Harris, 102 S. W. 640, 125 Mo. App. 365.

WITH INTENT OF BRINGING ACTION

Code Civ. Proc. § 73, provides that no attorney shall directly or indirectly buy or be in any manner interested in buying anything in action, etc., "with the intent and for the purpose of bringing an action thereon." Held that, where one against whom there was a valid claim was given ample notification that an action would be brought thereon, but he failed to pay it, the subsequent purchase of the claim by an attorney was not violative of the statute, as the statute only applies to the purchase of claims, where the primary purpose is to enable the bringing of an action. The court in Moses v. McDivitt, 88 N. Y. 62, 64, in commenting upon the language of this section, says: "This language is significant and indicates that a mere intent to bring a suit on a claim purchased does not constitute the offense. The purchase must be made for the very purpose of bringing such suit, and this implies an exclusion of any other purpose. As the law now stands, an attorney is not prohibited from discounting or purchasing bonds and mortgages and notes, or other choses in action, either for investment or for profit, or for the protection of other interests, and such purchase is not made illegal by the existence of the intent on his part at the time of the purchase, which must always exist in the case of such purchases, to bring suit upon them if necessary for their collection. To constitute the offense, the primary purpose of the purchase must be to enable him to bring a suit, and the intent to bring a suit must not be merely incidental and contingent." The court adds that this case has never been overruled or criticised, so far as it has been able to discover, and it undoubtedly states the objects and limitations of the statute. Wightman v. Catlin, 98 N. Y. Supp. 1071, 1073, 113 App. Div. 24.

WITH INTENT TO INTIMIDATE

Gen. St. 1902, § 1296, provides that one who threatens or uses any means to intimidate one to compel him to do, or abstain from doing, a lawful act, or who persistently follows one in a disorderly manner or injures or threatens to injure his property, "with intent to intimidate him," shall be fined. Held, that the quoted clause does not qualify all the provisions preceding it and is not the only language making intent an essential element of the crime defined. State v. McGee, 72 Atl. 141, 142, 81 Conn. 696.

WITH INTEREST

Where plaintiffs failed to comply with an order directing that they deposit with the New York City chamberlain a specified sum, "with interest" from May 12, 1905, to the credit of the action, and were thereupon adjudged in contempt, it was improper for the court to permit plaintiffs to purge themselves by depositing the amount directed, "with interest" at 2½ per cent., as the words "with interest" meant interest at the legal rate of 6 per cent. Lawrence v. Binninger, 106 N. Y. Supp. 500, 501, 121 App. Div. 701.

Under Laws 1893, p. 1447, c. 644, directing the assessors to divide the assessment imposed upon any lot for street improvements into 20 annual installments and each year thereafter for 20 years to assess an amount equal to one of said annual installments, "with interest" upon the lot, the interest to be added to the installment is only the interest upon the installment to be paid in the year during which the assessment is imposed, and not interest upon all the installments remaining unpaid. In re Hagemeyer, 99 N. Y. Supp. 369, 371, 113 App. Div. 472.

If a contract reads, for the payment of money "with interest," it means with a charge of interest at the legal rate. Buck v. Harris, 102 S. W. 640, 125 Mo. App. 365.

A judgment awarding defendant a certain sum of money, "with interest thereon," on a cross-complaint, should be construed as allowing legal interest only from the date of its rendition. Mixer v. Mixer, 83 Pac. 273, 274, 2 Cal. App. 227.

The words "with interest annually" are not ordinarily used in notes signed by sureties for the purpose of constituting the maker the agent of the sureties to renew the note, but to prescribe the rule by which the interest is to be computed. So the mere fact that a note is payable on demand, with interest annually, has no tendency to prove that the sureties intended to constitute the maker their agent to renew it. Newell v. Clark, 61 Atl. 555, 73 N. H. 289.

WITH LIKE INTENT

The words "with like intent," as used in the part of the section prohibiting the bringing into the United States, with intent to pass, any forged, counterfeited, or altered obligation of the United States, refers only to the intent to defraud, and not to the intent to pass, so that an indictment charging possession with knowledge of the counterfeit character of the obligation was not defective for failure to charge an intent to pass the same, in addition to an intent to defraud. United States v. Provenzano, 171 Fed. 675, 676.

WITH MALICE AFORETHOUGHT

See, also, Malice Aforethought.

In an indictment for murder, the words "with malice aforethought" are equivalent to the words of the statute, "of his malice aforethought," and are sufficient; they clearly conveying the meaning of the statute, and fully stating the elements of the crime so as to apprise accused of the crime with which he is charged. State v. Fletcher, 53 South. 877, 879, 127 La. 602.

WITH NOTICE

The expression "with notice" usually means and includes all facts discoverable by reasonable inquiry. Third Nat. Bank of Columbus v. Poe, 62 S. E. 826, 829, 5 Ga. App. 113.

WITH PREJUDICE

See Without Prejudice.

WITH THE PRIVILEGE

A lease of premises "for the term of three years, with the privilege of five years, for" a certain sum per annum, is not a lease for three years with the privilege of five additional years. Geusler v. Nicholas, 115 N. W. 458, 460, 151 Mich. 529, 14 Ann. Cas. 452.

A lease providing that the lessees were to take the premises "for one year and the privilege of four years," at $500 per year, meant that the term was for one year, but at the election of the lessees might be for four years. The particle "and" indicates the relation of connection or addition. Expressions in text-books and decisions may be found treating like clauses, where the word "with" is used instead of "and." But, in the connection employed, the insertion of "with" in place of "and" would not change the meaning. Willis v. Weeks, 105 N. W. 1012, 1014, 129 Iowa, 525.

WITH SAME EFFECT

Judicial Code (Act March 3, 1911, c. 231, 36 Stat. 1087), which went into effect January 1, 1912, changed the amount required to confer federal jurisdiction from a sum in excess of $2,000 to a sum in excess of $3,000. Section 299 exempted from the operation of the act all pending proceedings and rights accruing or accrued, providing that all such suits and proceedings for causes arising or acts done prior to that date might be commenced and prosecuted within the same time, and with the same effect, as if the repeal or amendments had not been made. Held, that the phrase "with the same effect" must be construed to mean with the same result, or with the same consequence, and that where a cause of action involving less than $3,000 but more than $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, arose November 14, 1911, and suit was brought on January 25th following, it was governed by the old law, and therefore involved an amount sufficient to sustain federal jurisdiction. Taylor v. Midland Valley R. Co., 197 Fed. 323, 324.

WITH STRONG HAND

As applied to trespass, the words "strong hand" mean something more than a common trespass. Polack v. McGrath, 25 Cal. 54, 59.

WITH THE WILL

See Found with the Will.

WITHDRAW

WITHDRAWAL

One provoking a difficulty may not rely on self-defense unless he in good faith withdraws therefrom, and a retreat which may be a continuance of hostilities is not sufficient, a "withdrawal" being the abandonment of the difficulty by the party provoking it, and notice of such abandonment by the other party. State v. Heath, 141 S. W. 26, 29, 237 Mo. 255.

WITHDRAWING STOCKHOLDERS

A provision contained in a certificate of membership in a building association that no money should be drawn from the loan fund, except to make loans on security, and to pay amounts due withdrawing shareholders, does not prevent the payment of an amount called for by the certificate on its maturity; the term "withdrawing stockholders" meaning those who withdraw at the maturity of their certificates or afterwards, as well as those withdrawing before the maturity thereof. Vought v. Eastern Building & Loan Ass'n of Syracuse, 65 N. E. 496, 497, 172 N. Y. 508, 92 Am. St. Rep. 761.

WITHHOLD

The word "withhold" is broader than either conceal or secrete; for example, a bankrupt may withhold money from his trustee by stubbornly refusing to turn it over without concealing the same, though whatever property is withheld from an officer by fraud is concealed. United States v. Phillips, 196 Fed. 574, 576.

Code Civ. Proc. § 283, provides that, in an action for recovery of specific property, the jury may assess the value of the property and assess damages, if any, claimed, which the prevailing party has sustained by reason of the withholding of the same. Section 299 provides that, in an action to recover personalty, judgment may be for possession, or recovery of possession, or the value thereof, if delivery cannot be had, and damages for "detention." Held, not to authorize punitive damages, in an action for claim and delivery. By a well-known rule of construction, for the sake of consistency the word "withholding," used in section 283, is to be interpreted and applied as in section 299. To be consistent with 299, the provision of 283, as to damages to the prevailing party, "sustained by reason of the 'detention or taking and withholding' such property," must be held to mean that, when the prevailing party is the plaintiff, the jury must assess the damages for the detention, but when the prevailing party is the defendant, and the property has been taken in the claim and delivery proceedings, the jury may assess for such taking and for the withholding. Tittle v. Kennedy, 50 S. E. 544, 546, 71 S. C. 1, 4 Ann. Cas. 68.

Under Code, § 1374, providing that, "when property subject to taxation is withheld, overlooked or from any other cause is not listed or assessed," the county treasurer may within a specified time demand of the owner the amount the property should have been taxed in each year the same was so withheld or overlooked and not listed and assessed, etc., a county treasurer may list for taxation all taxable property which has not been listed for taxation, and may list for taxation property which the assessor knowingly omitted because of the erroneous decision that it was not taxable; the word "withhold" meaning to hold back, to restrain, to keep from action, to refrain from giving, and the word "overlook" meaning to look beyond, so that what is near by is not perceived, to omit to see by looking at other objects, to refrain knowingly from notice, etc. Talley v. Brown, 125 N. W. 248, 253, 146 Iowa, 360, 140 Am. St. Rep. 282.

WITHIN

See Lying or Being Within.

Under a statute providing that all railroad corporations which have fenced their right of way may be required to make crossings through their fence and over their road-bed every one and one-half mile, provided that, if such fence shall divide any inclosure, at least one opening shall be made "within" such inclosure, a gate on a lane which ran to a crossing is not within an inclosure, and hence a railroad company is bound to keep it shut, so as maintain the fence for the protection of stock. Chicago, R. I. & G. R. Co. v. Wilson (Tex.) 124 S. W. 132, 133.

"Unto" a jail or building "is not a common form of expression, and in no popular sense has it ever been used to mean to convey 'within' a building. Probably no case can be cited where that word has ever been construed to be synonymous with, or to mean 'into.'" People v. Klammer, 100 N. W. 600, 137 Mich. 399.

Where a policy insuring an automobile provided that the policy should not cover loss or damage caused by fire originating "within" the vehicle, the word "within" was used as the antithesis of "extrinsic" or "without," and not as a synonym of "interior," so the policy did not cover loss by fire resulting from the explosion of gasoline, which, after an accident to the automobile, flowed from its gasoline tank and covered the surface of certain water in a ditch, and was thereafter ignited from fire burning in an oil lamp on the automobile. Preston v. Aetna Ins. Co., 85 N. E. 1006, 1008, 193 N. Y. 142, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 133.

Laws 1905, c. 116, § 1, provides that the fact that any person summoned to serve as a juror in any court shall have served as a juror at any prior term within one year next preceding shall be sufficient to excuse such person from service and may be ground for challenge for cause. An act of 1889 (Mills' Ann. St. § 2595) used the language "within the year next preceding," and an act of 1891 (Mills' Ann. St. Rev. Supp. § 2609) used the language "within one year then last past." Held, that the act of 1905 means at any prior term within a year next preceding, regardless of the fact that the time of service may not have been within a year and that it is the terms of court which control. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Kennedy, 117 Pac. 167, 168, 50 Colo. 418.

Election Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 17) § 381, provides that, if any certified original statement of the result of the canvass in an election district show that any of the ballots were rejected by the inspectors as void, a mandamus may, upon the application of any candidate voted for at such election, within twenty days thereafter issue out of the Supreme Court and the inspectors, requiring the recount of such ballots. Held, that the words "within twenty days thereafter" refer to the application of mandamus, and not to the actual issuance of the writ within that time after the election, so that it was sufficient if the application was made within that time. Tamney v. Atkins, 136 N. Y. Supp. 865, 867, 151 App. Div. 309.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 5703, permitting redemption from a tax sale "within one year after the sale" the year begins to run from the date of the sale, and not from that of the confirmation. Brasch v. Mumey, 138 S. W. 458, 460, 99 Ark. 324, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 38.

A fire policy, which requires insured "within sixty days after a fire" to render a statement to insurer, requires submission of the statement within sixty days after the fire has terminated or abated to such an extent that an inspection of the property damaged may be made. Slócum v. Saratoga & Washington Fire Ins. Co. of Saratoga & Washington Counties, 134 N. Y. Supp. 72, 73, 149 App. Div. 867.

The phrase "within ten days from date of invoice" in a contract for the sale of goods, terms sixty days, or 2 per cent. discount for cash, after deducting freight, if remitted within ten days from the date of invoice, means that the buyer is entitled to 2 per cent. discount if he make remittances within ten days from the date of the arrival of the goods at destination. Taussig v. Southern Mill & Land Co., 101 S. W. 602, 604, 124 Mo. App. 209.

In order that a former discharge in voluntary bankruptcy proceedings should be "within six years," so as to defeat the right to a second discharge in subsequent proceedings, it must have been granted within six years prior to the hearing on the application for the second discharge. In re Jordan, 142 Fed. 292.

As used in the bankruptcy law, authorizing the discharge of a bankrupt unless he has been granted a discharge in bankruptcy within six years, the expression "within six years" measures the time between the first and second discharge, and not between the first discharge and the filing of the second petition in bankruptcy. In re Smith, 155 Fed. 688, 689 (citing In re Little, 137 Fed. 521, 70 C. C. A. 105).

Comp. Laws 1897, § 896, provides that it shall not be necessary to prepare a bill of exceptions within 10 days after judgment, but, if any party desires to have any material matter not apparent on the face of the record made a part of the record, he may prepare a bill of exceptions and present the same to the judge at any time within 20 days before the first day of the term of the Supreme Court at which the case shall be docketed; and the judge shall settle and sign the exceptions at least 10 days before such term, unless, for cause, he shall extend the time. Held, that the word "within" as there used was a legislative pleonasm used in repetition of the pre-existing act of 1880, requiring settlement "within thirty days after judgment," and that the words "at any time within twenty days" shall be construed as meaning at any time not less than 20 days, so that a bill of exceptions in a criminal case under such section must be settled and filed at least 10 days before the term of the Supreme Court at which the case is first docketed unless the time is extended by order of the judge. United States v. Sena, 106 Pac. 383 385, 15 N. M. 187.

The phrase "within two miles of," as used in Pol. Code Cal. § 3488, excepting tide lands "within two miles of" any incorporated city or town from the operation of the law authorizing the sale of state lands, does not mean merely lands outside of the limits of the city, though within two miles, but refers also to lands actually within the city limits. Williams v. City of San Pedro, 94 Pac. 234, 235, 153 Cal. 44.

As during

The word "within," in Code 1907, § 4324, providing that, where a garnishee fails to answer, the conditional judgment must be rendered, which will be made absolute unless he answers within the first three days of the next term, means "during," though the word as used in statutes may mean before the expiration of the last day. First Nat. Bank v. Dimmick (Ala.) 58 South. 658, 666.

As not later than

The word "within," as used in Laws 1901, p. 198, c. 50, § 5, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 932, c. 770, § 1 (2), providing that any person aggrieved by the taking of land for a highway may, within six months after the change of road or new road is completed, apply for a jury to assess damages, means "not later than" six months after the road has been changed or the new road has been opened or completed. In re Wittkowsky's Land, 55 S. E. 617, 618, 143 N. C. 247.

In an action tried in the justice court, a motion for a new trial for insufficiency of the evidence was filed after verdict, but before judgment. The statute (Comp. Laws 1907, § 3742) provides that a new trial may be granted by the justice on motion made within ten days after the entry of judgment. Held, that the words, "within ten days after," fixed only the limit beyond which the motion might not be filed, and that the motion was not prematurely made. Beillon v. Durand, 117 Pac. 798, 799, 39 Utah, 532.

On the appointment of a receiver for a railroad company, defendants formed themselves into a reorganization committee, and invited the first mortgage bondholders to deposit their bonds with the committee for mutual protection and as preliminary to the preparation of a reorganization of the corporation. The deposit agreement gave the committee title to the bonds, with power to dispose of them in acquiring the railroad property either before or after formulating a plan, and also declared that any holder of a certificate of deposit might within sixty days after first publication of the plan withdraw his bonds on paying his pro rata share of the committee's expenses and be relieved from the obligation of the agreement, etc. The agreement, however, imposed no obligation on the committee to prepare and present a plan at any time; the committee reserving the right to return the deposited bonds. Held, that the word "within," as used in the clause "within sixty days" from the publication of the plan of reorganization, must be construed in the sense of "before," and hence depositing bondholders, on becoming dissatisfied with the acts of the committee before any plan had been formulated or promulgated, were entitled to withdraw from the agreement and to a surrender of their bonds. Colonial Trust Co. v. Wallace, 183 Fed. 897, 898.

A provision in a will that legacies shall "be paid 'within three years' from the probating of this will at the discretion of the trustees" meant that the legacies were to be paid within three years of the probate of the will, or sooner, at the discretion of the executors. Pope v. Hinckley, 95 N. E. 798, 800, 209 Mass. 323.

As to See To.

As wholly within

A county seat is "within five miles" of the geographical center of the county, within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 811, providing that, when the county seat is within five miles of the geographical center, it shall not be removed except by a two-thirds vote of the electors of the county voting on the subject, where any part of the county seat would be included within a circumference described around such center with a five-mile radius, although the whole of the county seat is not within such circumference. Ralls v. Parish, 149 S. W. 810, 812; Id., 147 S. W. 564, 105 Tex. 253.

Holidays excluded

Notice was posted in a custom house that it would be closed June 17th—a holiday observed by local custom, but not established by law. Certain importers, having notice of the closing of the custom house on that day, which was the tenth day after the liquidation of their entry, filed a protest on the day following. Held, that the protest was filed in accordance with the requirements of section 2931, Rev. St., providing that protests shall be made "within ten days after the ascertainment and liquidation of the duties." Frost & Adams v. Saltonstall, 129 Fed. 481, 482.

WITHIN ANY COUNTY OR PRECINCT

The words "within any county or precinct," as used in Gen. Laws 30th Leg. p. 166, c. 81, § 1, subdiv. 2, making one a creator and promoter of a public nuisance who establishes and conducts a saloon "within any county or precinct" of the state where the sale of intoxicating liquors has been prohibited by law, must be construed to mean and include, not only the entire county or precinct, but any definite or prescribed portion thereof within which the sale of intoxicating liquors has been prohibited and in which it is made unlawful for a person to manage or conduct any public place or business where such liquors are stored, drank, or sold. Paul v. State, 106 S. W. 448, 451, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 25.

WITHIN CITY

WITHIN THE COMMONWEALTH

See Incorporated within the Commonwealth.

WITHIN THE CURTILAGE

Under Laws 1905, p. 114, penalizing drunkenness "within the curtilage of any private residence," the appearing in an intoxicated condition in any portion of the area enclosed by the curtilage, whether it be within or without the dwelling house, is a violation of the act. Haines v. State, 70 S. E. 84, 86, 8 Ga. App. 627.

WITHIN THE DISTRICT

Shares of stock in a incorporated company, held and claimed by a nonresident of the district where the company has its domicile or is engaged in business, cannot be considered "personal property within the district," so as to authorize the court, in a suit in which complainant sets up title to the stock, to order the holder to be constructively served in the manner provided by statute. McKane v. Burke, 132 Fed. 688, 689 (citing Kilgour v. New Orleans Gaslight Co., 2 Woods, 144, 14 Fed. Cas. 468).

WITHIN IMMEDIATE KNOWLEDGE

The words, "in his presence," as used in Pen. Code 1910, § 917, authorizing an officer to arrest without a warrant if the offense is committed in his presence, and the words "within his immediate knowledge," as used in section 921, authorizing a private person to arrest where the offense is committed in his presence or within his knowledge, are synonymous. Piedmont Hotel Co. v. Henderson, 72 S. E. 51, 55, 9 Ga. App. 672.

WITHIN THE JURISDICTION

A foreign corporation not subject to process issuing from the courts of the state is not "within its jurisdiction," within the meaning of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, § 1, providing that no state shall deny to any person "within its jurisdiction" the equal protection of its laws. Merchants' Nat. Bank of Lafayette, Ind., v. Ford, 99 S. W. 280, 282, 124 Ky. 403.

A foreign corporation applying for admission to do business in a state, although a "person," is not within the jurisdiction of such state within Const. U. S. Amend. 14, forbidding a state to deny to any person "within its jurisdiction" the equal protection of its laws. State ex rel. Atlantic Horse Ins. Co. v. Blake, 144 S. W. 1094, 1096, 241 Mo. 100, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1283.

A foreign corporation, which has complied with state laws, so that process can be served upon it, and paid the fees required for the privilege of doing business in the state, and also purchased property in the state and entered upon the transaction of the business authorized, is "within the jurisdiction of the state" within Const. U. S. Amend. 14, forbidding a state to deny to any person "within its jurisdiction" the equal protection of the laws. Southern Ry. Co. v. Greene, 49 South. 404, 409, 160 Ala. 396.

WITHIN THE LIMITS

Where a street railroad company agreed to issue transfer tickets within the city limits, "within the city limits" was interpreted as not to apply only to limits as then fixed, as it must have had in contemplation that the city in the future might exercise the right of annexing territory and thereby extend its limits. Indiana R. Co. v. Hoffman, 69 N. E. 399, 401, 161 Ind. 593.

The term "within the corporate limits," as used in a city ordinance requiring the ringing of the engine bell and the sounding of the whistle at every crossing while an engine or cars are in motion within the city limits, and prohibiting a greater rate of speed than seven miles an hour within the city limits, includes railroad yards situated within the city. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Melville (Tex.) 87 S. W. 863, 865.

The phrase "within the limits of two miles thereof," in a city ordinance making it unlawful for any one to sell intoxicating liquors within the limits of two miles of the city, does not mean within the city, but within a two-mile limit without the city. Territory v. Robertson, 92 Pac. 144, 146, 19 Okl. 149.

WITHIN ONE YEAR

See To be Brought within One Year.

WITHIN SAID COUNTY

In an agreed statement, stating that the assessment on the franchise of a telegraph company represents the valuation of the right or privilege of carrying on telegraph business "within the said county," the quoted phrase refers to business originating or terminating in or passing through the offices in the county, and cannot be construed to refer to business wholly between points within the county. State v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 117 Pac. 93, 94, 42 Mont. 445.

WITHIN SAID LIMITS

See Streets within said Limits.

WITHIN SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT

See Scope of Employment.

WITHIN A SPECIFIED TIME

As used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1810, permitting an order for inspection of evidence to be had "within a specified time," the words "within a specified time" indicate that the inspection must not be extended over a longer time than may be reasonably necessary under the facts of the particular case, to be fixed by the court and not left to the discretion of the moving party. State ex rel. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist., 76 Pac. 206, 209, 30 Mont. 206 (citing State ex rel. B. & M. C. C. & S. M. Co. v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist., 71 Pac. 602, 27 Mont. 441, 94 Am. St. Rep. 831).

WITHIN THE STATE

See Property Not within the State.

Business done within the state, see Business Done.

Employed within the state, see Employed.

In a statute providing that "all actions hereafter accruing for injuries to persons caused by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of any person or persons, firm or firms, individual or individuals, corporation or corporations, within this state, shall be commenced and instituted within two years next after the cause of such action shall have accrued and not after," the phrase "within this state" is not a part of the description of the torts, and therefore an action for a tort committed outside the state must be brought within two years. Mooney v. Camden Iron Works, 83 Atl. 770, 83 N. J. Law, 32.

The mere presence in the state of notes and mortgages belonging to a nonresident does not give them a situs therein for the purpose of taxation, notwithstanding Ky. St. 1903, § 4020, providing that all personal estate "within the state" shall be taxable under the state laws, and Const. § 171, providing that taxation shall be uniform on all property subject to taxation "within the state," for, until the situs of such property is changed by law, it is not "within the state" for taxing purposes. Commonwealth v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. (Ky.) 107 S. W. 233, 234.

Though it may be doubted whether personal property casually brought into the state for a temporary purpose, as by a visitor or traveler, is "within the state," within the meaning of the tax law, yet wherever the money of a nonresident is invested in the state, as in a bond and mortgage, or deposits are made by him in savings banks, or the property is habitually kept, even for safety, in the state, it is "within the state," within the meaning of that law. Buck v. Beach, 71 N. E. 963, 966, 164 Ind. 37, 108 Am. St. Rep. 272.

WITHIN THREE DAYS

See Day.

WITHIN A YEAR

See Not to be Performed within a Year.

Where a wife deserted her husband December 8, 1896, and the husband began a suit for divorce on July 1, 1899, a finding that, long prior to the commencement of the action for divorce, defendant returned to plaintiff, is not a finding that she returned "within a year" of the desertion, so as to cure the desertion, as provided by statute. Kusel v. Kusel, 81 Pac. 297, 147 Cal. 52.

WITHOUT

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 5908, providing that certain cities shall have power to borrow money or to issue bonds for the purpose of erecting certain public works and buildings "without increasing the annual rate of taxation," the word "without" need not be read as meaning "unless" or "except." Good usage permits its meaning to be, when employed in a correct prepositional sense, "independently of," or "otherwise than with." So read, the phrase would stand, "independently of increasing the annual rate of taxation." In other words, the annual rate of taxation was to be left to be used for every-day municipal purposes, and any rate of taxation rendered necessary by the bond issue should be otherwise than by increasing such annual rate which by the Constitution is devoted to the municipal life proper. Evans v. McFarland, 85 S. W. 873, 879, 186 Mo. 703 (citing Webst. Int. Dict.; Anderson's Law Dict.).

WITHOUT ADDITION OR ERASURE

A written contract providing that the machine shall be warranted according to the terms of the written warranty, "without addition or erasure," did not preclude the agent of the seller from waiving the terms of the written warranty, or some of them, after the machine had been delivered. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Hiatt, 95 N. W. 627, 629, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 587.

WITHOUT ADMINISTRATION

An antenuptial contract, which provides that the wife, on the death of the husband, shall receive from his estate "without any administration" $1,000, does not require the husband to provide the sum by will or other affirmative means, but the contract makes the wife a creditor, and authorizes collection of her claim in the mode applicable to creditors of estates; the quoted phrase merely allowing the wife to receive the sum in advance of complete administration and distribution. In re Warner's Estate, 111 Pac. 352, 353, 158 Cal. 441.

WITHOUT ANY PERSON IN CHARGE

Where a laundry wagon driver left his team standing at the curb unattended while he went into the second story of a building, 40 to 50 yards away and 30 feet from the sidewalk, to deliver some articles from the laundry, the team was left standing "without any person in charge," within the meaning of an ordinance punishing such neglect, and the occasion was not within an exception when the vehicle is being loaded and unloaded, which exception is not to be extended so as to include more than such temporary abandonment of the reins as is reasonably incident to loading and unloading by the driver. Excelsior Steam Laundry Co. v. Lomax, 52 South. 347, 166 Ala. 612.

WITHOUT AUTHORITY OF LAW

An indictment for murder must allege that the killing was done "without authority of law," but it need not allege it in the exact language of the statute, the use of any other words equivalent in effect and meaning being sufficient; and the word "unlawfully" is the full equivalent in effect and meaning of the phrase "without authority of law" as used in the statutory definition of murder. Fooshee v. State, 108 Pac. 554, 559, 3 Okl. Cr. 666.

Prima facie at least the father is entitled to the custody of his minor children as against the exclusive possession by the mother, and any detention of such children from the father by the mother may be "without lawful authority," within Gen. St. 1906, § 2248 et seq., regulating the use of the writ of habeas corpus. Porter v. Porter, 53 South. 546, 547, 60 Fla. 407, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 867.

WITHOUT A CERTIFICATE

Under Medical Practice Act (Laws 1899, p. 275) § 6, which imposes a penalty for practicing medicine "without a certificate" issued by the state board of health, an action for penalty may be maintained after revocation of a license, since one whose certificate has been revoked is without a certificate as much as one to whom no certificate has been issued. People v. Apfelbaum, 95 N. E. 995, 999, 251 Ill. 18.

WITHOUT CHILDREN

See Die Without Children.

WITHOUT CLAIM FOR DAMAGE

Where the grantor of land by conveyance and lease reserved to himself the right to flow said premises by the waters of the river as they may be raised by the dam belonging to the lessor as the dam now exists, or might thereafter be raised or lowered, the words "without claim for damage" are unimportant, and mean no more than that the lessor might exercise the rights reserved therein without claim for damage on the part of the lessees. Stadler v. Missouri River Power Co., 139 Fed. 305, 307, 71 C. C. A. 435.

WITHOUT CONSENT

Where the statutes defining rape contain the words "against her will," the indictment should contain the words of the statutes, instead of the words "without her consent," for, "though the former ['against her will'] are a permissible substitute for the latter ['without her consent'], it is not so plain that the latter is such for the former." Beard v. State, 97 S. W. 667, 669, 79 Ark. 293, 9 Ann. Cas. 409.

Upon the trial of one under indictment for rape the court did not err (the evidence authorizing it) in instructing the jury: "If you believe and find from the evidence submitted in this case that the defendant now on trial had knowledge of Penny Jones [the prosecutrix, and the wife of another], and that at the time she was asleep and not consenting, or having given the defendant any reason to believe she consented, and the sexual connection was against her will, the jury would be authorized to find that the act was one of rape. Carnal knowledge of a woman while she is asleep and unconscious of the act, and her body being penetrated before she awakes, would be against her will and without her consent, and would constitute the offense of rape, unless she had given the party charged with the rape some reason to believe that she consented to the act." Harvey v. State, 14 S. W. 645, 53 Ark. 425, 22 Am. St. Rep. 229; Maupin v. State (Ark.) 14 S. W. 924; Malone v. Com., 15 S. W. 856, 91 Ky. 307; Payne v. State, 49 S. W. 604, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 202, 76 Am. St. Rep. 712; State v. Shroyer, 16 S. W. 286, 104 Mo. 441, 24 Am. St. Rep. 344; State v. Welch, 89 S. W. 945, 191 Mo. 179, 4 Ann. Cas. 681. In Gore v. State, 46 S. E. 671, 119 Ga. 418, 100 Am. St. Rep. 182, it was held that the words "against her will," in the definition of rape, are synonymous with "without her consent," and that therefore "a man who had sexual intercourse with an imbecile female; who is mentally incapable of expressing any intelligent assent or dissent, or of exercising any judgment in the matter, is guilty of rape, though no more force be used than is necessary to accomplish the carnal act, and though the woman offer no resistance." This ruling in effect authorized the instruction complained of. See, also, Carter v. State, 35 Ga. 263; Com. v. Burke, 105 Mass. 376, 7 Am. Rep. 531; Brown v. State, 76 S. E. 379, 138 Ga. 814.

In a prosecution for receiving stolen goods, a charge authorizing a conviction, if the jury should find that the property was unlawfully stolen from the possession of the owner by some person other than defendant, with the intent on the part of the thief to convert the property to his own use and to permanently deprive the owner thereof "without its consent," and the defendant afterwards received the property into his possession, knowing at the time he received the property that it was stolen, was not subject to the objection of failing to require the jury to find, in order to convict defendant, that the taking was without the owner's consent. The clause "without its consent" evidently refers to the stealing, taking, and carrying away, as well as to the conversion of the property. State v. Sakowski, 90 S. W. 435, 440, 191 Mo. 635, 4 Ann. Cas. 751.

WITHOUT DELAY

See At Once.

The requirement of the administration of justice "without delay" means without unreasonable and unnecessary delay. Ex parte Ryan, 50 South. 385, 389, 124 La. 356.

By the use of such vague and indefinite terms as "without delay" in a statute merely prescribing the form and requisites of a return of a commission to take depositions, the statute is meant to be directory, and in the absence of anything to show that the delay has prejudiced appellant, or that appellee is chargeable therewith, the motion to suppress the deposition should be overruled. Kane v. Sholars, 90 S. W. 937, 938, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 154.

In a contract to indemnify a person in case of accident, for injury sustained by violent means which shall, "Independently of all other causes, immediately, wholly, and continuously prevent him from the prosecution of any and every kind of business pertaining to his occupation," the word "immediately" is not synonymous with "instantly," "at once," and "without delay." A disability is immediate, within the meaning of such contracts, when it follows directly from an accidental hurt, within such time as the processes of nature consume in bringing the person affected to a state of total incapacity to prosecute every kind of business pertaining to his occupation. Order of United Commercial Travelers of America v. Barnes, 80 Pac. 1020, 1023, 1024, 72 Kan. 293, 7 Ann. Cas. 809.

WITHOUT EXCUSE OR JUSTIFICATION

Though Comp. Laws 1897, § 1379, uses the word "unlawfully" in describing the crime of assault with a deadly weapon, it was not error in an instruction as to the circumstances under which defendant might be convicted, to omit the word "unlawfully" where the jury were informed in such instructions that the assault must have been committed without "excuse or justification"; such phrase being clearly equivalent to the word "unlawfully." Territory v. Gonzales, 89 Pac. 250, 252, 14 N. M. 31.

WITHOUT FAULT

One is not "without fault," as used in the law of self-defense, who does that which a reasonable man would expect to bring on a physical encounter, and which did actually contribute to bringing it on. It would be manslaughter to kill a man found in the house for purposes of illicit intercourse with the owner's daughter; but such wrongful act on the part of the person entering the house will deprive him of any right of self-defense, should he kill the owner of the house, who attacks him on the spot. State v. Emerson, 58 S. E. 974-978, 78 S. C. 83.

WITHOUT GOOD CAUSE

In a prosecution of a husband for abandonment of his wife "without good cause," the phrase quoted means such cause as will authorize a decree of divorce in favor of the husband. State v. Williams, 116 S. W. 1128, 1129, 136 Mo. App. 304.

WITHOUT GRACE

The words "without grace," as used in a note given for a premium on an insurance policy, the policy providing for a grace of one month on the payment of all premiums except the first, refers to the month of grace named in the policy, and not to the days of grace allowed by the law merchant in the payment of certain negotiable instruments. Henningsen v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 143 Fed. 810, 814, 74 C. C. A. 484.

WITHOUT IMPEACHMENT OF WASTE

In the case of an estate devised "without impeachment of waste," the quoted words "do not operate as a license to the tenant to destroy the estate or commit malicious waste." Wiley v. Wiley, 95 N. W. 702, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 350 (citing Stevens v. Rose, 37 N. W. 205, 69 Mich. 259).

WITHOUT ISSUE

See Die Without Issue; Die Without Leaving Issue.

WITHOUT LAWFUL EXCUSE

The word "willfully," as used in U. S. Comp. St. 1901, § 5341, making one who unlawfully and "willfully," but without malice, injures another, from which injury the other dies, guilty of manslaughter, means not merely voluntarily, but with a bad purpose. It is a synonymous term with "intentionally," "designedly," "without lawful excuse"; that is, not accidental. It is frequently understood as signifying an evil intent without justifiable excuse. Miller v. State, 107 Pac. 948, 3 Okl. Cr. 575 (citing Thomp. Trials, 2209).

WITHOUT LEGAL CAUSE

In an action against a water company to recover damages for shutting off plaintiff's supply of water, an allegation in plaintiff's petition that defendant company, without giving plaintiff any notice and "without legal cause," cut off the supply of water from his premises, was an allegation to the effect that the company without any justification wrongfully discontinued to serve him, and was not a mere conclusion of law. Freeman v. Macon Gaslight & Water Co., 56 S. E. 61, 63, 126 Ga. 843, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 917.

WITHOUT A LICENSE

See License (Governmental Regulation);
Sale Without a License.

WITHOUT LITIGATION

The answer, in an action on a mortgage, providing for allowance for reasonable attorney's fee, having denied the averments of the complaint, among which was one that $25 was a reasonable sum for an attorney's fee, it was error to allow such a fee in the absence of evidence of what sum would have been reasonable on account thereof; the phrase "without litigation," in circuit court rule 17, that in actions on contracts providing for attorney's fees, in which judgment is obtained without litigation, and in which such a fee is allowed by the court, the fee shall be a certain per cent. of the amount involved, meaning where there is no controversy concerning the reasonableness of an attorney's fee. Guernsey v. Marks, 106 Pac. 334, 336, 55 Or. 323.

WITHOUT NOTICE

See Notice.

Bona fide purchaser without notice, see Bona Fide Purchaser.

The words "without notice" and the words "in good faith" signify the same thing. As used in Rev. St. 1899, § 3412, providing that where personal property is sold, to be paid for in installments or delivered to another on a condition reserving title, etc., such condition shall be void as to all subsequent purchasers in "good faith" and creditors, unless evidenced by a writing executed and recorded as in cases of mortgages of personal property, the words "good faith" were confined to a case of a subsequent purchaser and did not apply to a subsequent chattel mortgagee of the holder of the property, mortgaged under an alleged conditional sale, who was not therefore precluded by notice of claim of the conditional seller. Gilbert Book Co. v. Sheridan, 89 S. W. 555, 557, 114 Mo. App. 332.

The phrase "without notice," used in relation to the taking of a note, usually refers to some defense of the maker or to some claim of title to it other than that of the seller, with or without notice of which a purchaser has taken it. Vansickle v. Watson, 123 S. W. 112, 116, 103 Tex. 37.

WITHOUT PREJUDICE

The terms "with prejudice" and "without prejudice," in reference to the dismissal of actions, have been recognized by the Legislature and by the decision of the courts as having reference to and being determinative of the right to bring future actions. Where a party voluntarily dismisses a case and wishes to reserve to himself the privilege of enforcing his right in a subsequent proceeding, he should procure and have entered an order of dismissal stating in express terms that it is "without prejudice." An order dismissing "with prejudice" is equivalent to an adjudication upon the merits, and will operate as a bar to a future action. Hargis v. Robinson, 79 Pac. 119, 121, 70 Kan. 589.

The phrase, "without prejudice to interested parties," as used in an order consolidating with involuntary proceedings in bankruptcy the proceedings on a voluntary petition subsequently filed, cannot be construed to mean that a third person who took goods from the possession of the bankrupt on a writ of replevin from a state court, after the petition in involuntary bankruptcy had been filed and a receiver appointed therein, shall be permitted to retain possession of the merchandise taken under the replevin suit. If any signification be attached to the phraseology of the order it must be that the words quoted were inserted for the protection of the petitioning creditor's rights which might otherwise be defeated, and not for the benefit of the adverse claimant. In re Briskman, 132 Fed. 201, 203.

The court dismissed the bill without prejudice. The intention and effect of such a reservation in a decree are, by express terms, to prevent it from operating as a bar to another suit. A dismissal "without prejudice" leaves the parties as if no action had been instituted. It has been held that such a reservation prevents the bar, even though it has been erroneously incorporated in the decree. Reynolds v. Hennessy, 20 Atl. 307, 308, 23 Atl. 639, 17 R. I. 169.

A judgment of dismissal "without prejudice" is not res judicata of the merits of the controversy, notwithstanding the judgment entry further recites that testimony was taken, and was not sufficient to warrant the relief asked. A. H. Averill Machinery Co. v. Allbritton, 97 Pac. 1082, 1083, 51 Wash. 30.

The effect of a dismissal "without prejudice" in a decree of dismissal is to prevent such decree from constituting a bar to another bill brought upon the same title; but it by no means compromises the court as a judicial determination in favor of such title. Lang's Heirs v. Waring, 25 Ala. 625, 639, 60 Am. Dec. 533.

In an action against T. and O., in which T. was not served, but appeared as a witness for plaintiff, there was a judgment on the merits for O., and on appeal it was affirmed with the words "without prejudice to a new action." Held, that these words referred only to defendant T., so that the judgment for O., when affirmed, settled the litigated issues between him and plaintiff. O'Hare v. Thompson, 123 N. Y. Supp. 339.

WITHOUT PREVIOUS MALICE

The use of both the expressions "in sudden heat and passion" and the expression "without previous malice" was proper, to make clear to the jury that to reduce homicide from murder to manslaughter there must not exist malice aforethought. Frequently tautology is useful, where clearness of meaning rather than logical refinement is desired. Metcalfe v. Commonwealth (Ky.), 86 S. W. 534, 535.

WITHOUT RECOURSE

The indorsement of commercial paper "without recourse" does not avoid the warranty of its genuineness and of title under the express provisions of Code Supp. 1902, § 3060-a65. State v. Corning State Sav. Bank, 115 N. W. 937, 938, 139 Iowa, 338.

"Now care must be taken to remember distinctly that the defendants, having hedged about their assignment with the words 'without recourse,' are protected against any claim by the plaintiff to respond in value for the thing assigned, and that the liability of the defendants arises purely from having assigned something which never in fact existed as a fact, but was a paper which was not genuine." Hall v. Latimer, 61 S. E. 1057, 1059, 81 S. C. 90.

Under Acts 1899, p. 148, c. 94, § 38, providing that an indorsement of a note "without recourse" does not impair the negotiable character of the instrument, and independent of the act, an indorsement of a note "without recourse" is not sufficient to put the purchaser on notice. Elgin City Banking Co. v. Hall, 108 S. W. 1068, 1070, 119 Tenn. 548.

When an indorsement of a bill or note is "without recourse," the indorser specially declines to assume any responsibility as a party thereto, but by transferring it he engages that it is what it purports to be—the valid obligation of those whose names are upon it. He is like a drawer, who draws without recourse, but who is nevertheless liable if he draws upon a fictitious party, or one without funds; and hence the holder may recover against the indorser without recourse, if any of the prior signatures were not genuine, or if the note was invalid between the original parties because of the want or illegality of the consideration, or if any prior party was incompetent, or the indorser was without title. Challiss v. McCrum, 22 Kan. 157, 164, 31 Am. Rep. 181 (citing 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 670).

WITHOUT THE STATE

Under St. 1898, § 4096, authorizing examination of parties on oral interrogatories and if taken without the state in the manner provided for taking other depositions, an examination may be had when the party to be examined resides in a foreign country; the words "without the state" not being limited to territory within the United States. Hite v. Keene, 119 N. W. 303, 304, 137 Wis. 625.

WITHOUT SUFFICIENT CAUSE

Where there was fair ground for claiming the right to reduce the wages of a mate because of neglect of duty, the refusal to pay him the agreed wages in full on his discharge was not "without sufficient cause," so as to subject the master or owner to the penalty imposed by Rev. St. § 4529, as amended by Act Dec. 21, 1898, c. 28, § 4, 30 Stat. 756. The Sadie C. Sumner, 142 Fed. 611, 613.

WITHOUT TIME LIMIT

Where plaintiffs agreed to ship "without time limit" by defendant's line 50,000 boxes of macaroni from Naples to New York, and claimed that the contract entitled them to make the shipments at any time during an ordinary lifetime at least, while defendant insisted that the phrase referred only to the colder season of the fall and winter following the making of the contract, in which condition of the weather macaroni was ordinarily shipped, the phrase "without time limit" was ambiguous, and parol evidence was admissible to explain it. Sholl v. Prince Line, 96 N. Y. Supp. 368, 369, 109 App. Div. 591.

The term "witness," as applied to a will signifies more than the mere formality of affixing one's name to a will as a witness. There must be an active mentality connected with it. The witness must take cognizance of the signature of the person executing, either by seeing him write, or by his acknowledgment of it in some manner, either expressly or impliedly, so that he can be able to say surely and unequivocally that the signature to the instrument is that of the person executing, previously appended. But the attestation of the will does not depend upon the memory of the attesting witness. The act is one, when once performed, which stands as an accomplished fact, and any subsequent failure of the memory of the witness, or willful purpose in suppressing what is known to have transpired, does not change or obliterate it. It may, perchance, stand unsubstantiated after applying the test of legal proof; but, if it once existed, it stands for all time as any other fact. In re Mendonhall's Will, 43 Or. 542, 73 Pac. 1033, 1035 (citing In re Skinner's Will, 62 Pac. 523, 67 Pac. 951, 954, 40 Or. 571).

Civ. Code Prac. § 556, providing that upon an affidavit of a party and the statement of his attorney that the testimony of a witness is important, and that an oral examination in court is necessary, the court may order the personal attendance of the witness though he is otherwise exempt, applies only to "witnesses" within the jurisdiction of the court. Hey v. Emerson, 135 S. W. 294, 295, 142 Ky. 767.

The term "whose evidence," in an instruction that there was testimony in the case from which the jury might find that the defendant was guilty of negligence," but that depends upon "whose evidence" you believe," is not equivalent to "whose witnesses," so as to render the charge objectionable as directing the jury to find for the plaintiff if they believe plaintiff's witnesses and for the defendant if they do not. Harker v. Detroit United Ry., 114 N. W. 657, 658, 150 Mich. 697.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2707, relates to proceedings by an executor or administrator to obtain property belonging to the estate, but in the possession of and under the control of a person who withholds the same or refuses to reveal its whereabouts, and authorizes such person to be cited to appear before the surrogate, where he may be sworn to answer concerning the property. Section 2710 provides that, if the facts admitted by the "witness" show that he was in control of the property to which the petitioner is entitled, a surrogate may decree that it may be delivered, but if the "witness" admits control of the property, but the question of right is in dispute, the proceedings shall end, unless the parties consent to the determination by the surrogate. The court says that it is not able to accept the contention as to the meaning of the word "witness" as employed in section 2710, saying: "A simple reading of these sections in their consecutive order will exhibit the fact that, until the proceeding progresses to the point where the respondent is sworn and actually becomes a 'witness' in the ordinary meaning of the word, he is not so denominated. He is spoken of as 'a person who withholds the same,' or 'the person complained of,' or 'the person to be cited,' or 'the party cited,' but he is never called a 'witness' until that part of the proceeding is reached at which the statute contemplates his having been sworn as a 'witness.' It seems to me, therefore, that the statute contemplates the respondent as having been sworn, and as having been examined, and that a dispute has been developed by such examination in regard to the facts as to the petitioner's right to the moneys or property, in relation to which discovery is sought. This means something more, it seems to me, than the mere statement of a conclusion on the part of the witness that the property is his, or that he has a right to its custody. It is the facts out of which his right to maintain such a claim arises, and not the mere fact that he makes it, which end the proceeding, and those facts, I apprehend, are the facts brought out upon the examination contemplated by the statute. Glick v. Stumpf, 98 N. Y. Supp. 299, 303, 49 Misc. Rep. 32.

A person who has made a dying declaration, which is admitted on the trial, is not a "witness" on the trial, either within the definition given in Code Civ. Proc. § 1878, or within the common acceptance of the word; and where the court, in a prosecution for homicide, charged as to the right of the jury to reject the testimony of any witness whose testimony was distrusted, it was error to refuse a charge applying the same rule to the dying declarations of decedent, which had been admitted in evidence. People v. Thomson, 79 Pac. 435, 437, 145 Cal. 717.

As person sworn

Where a witness, testifying to the testimony an absent witness gave at the examining trial, stated that the absent witness was a witness in the trial and gave testimony therein, it sufficiently appeared that the witness was sworn as such in the examining trial; a "witness" being one who has been sworn according to law and deposes as to his knowledge of the facts in issue, and the word "testimony" meaning a statement made by a witness under oath in a legal proceeding. Poe v. State, 129 S. W. 292, 295, 95 Ark. 172.

Attest synonyms

Mills' Ann. St. Rev. Supp. § 4664, provides that all wills by which any property is devised or bequeathed shall be attested in the testator's presence by two or more witnesses. Held, that the word "attested" contemplates, not only the mental act of observing, but also the certification of the thing noted by the manual act of subscription, the word being derived from the Latin words "ad" and "testari," meaning to witness or to bear witness, and being in effect synonymous with "witnessed" when used in connection with wills, which word implies the act of subscribing as well as of observing; and hence where two persons saw a testator execute a purported codicil and heard him declare it to be such, but only one of them subscribed it in his presence, it was insufficiently attested. International Trust Co. v. Anthony, 101 Pac. 781, 782, 45 Colo. 474, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1002, 16 Ann. Cas. 1087.

Interpreter

One acting as an interpreter before the grand jury is not a "witness" examined before it within Pen. Code, § 995, requiring the setting aside of an indictment "when the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury," are not appended at the foot of the indictment. People v. Gee Gong, 114 Pac. 78, 15 Cal. App. 28.

Party

It may be said that a "sutor" is but a witness after all, and may be allowed the common infirmities of his kind, such as lapses of memory, inability to see things precisely as others do, and failure to hear, or forgetfulness of things actually said or done. It would be a harsh rule that would cast a litigant merely because he did not agree in toto with his witnesses. Although plaintiff and his witnesses may not agree, the case may, nevertheless, be a proper one for the jury, if there be competent evidence from any witness to entitle the case to go to the jury. Knorpp v. Wagner, 93 S. W. 961, 967, 195 Mo. 637.

Accused, testifying in his own behalf, is a "witness," within Rev. Laws, c. 175, §§ 20, 21, declaring that accused shall at his own request be allowed to testify, and providing that the conviction of a witness of crime may be shown to affect his credibility, and his prior conviction of crime cannot be proved on his cross-examination, but only by the record thereof. Commonwealth v. Walsh, 82 N. E. 19, 196 Mass. 369, 124 Am. St. Rep. 550.

Where an indictment was based on the testimony of the witnesses whose names were indorsed thereon, and accused, learning of the investigation, voluntarily made a statement before the grand jury, after being warned that his statement might be used against him, and no vote was thereafter taken by the grand jury, accused was not a "witness," within Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 2043, 2099, requiring an indorsement on the indictment of the names of the witnesses examined by the grand jury, or the indictment must be set aside; the purpose of the statute being to inform accused who his accusers are, and the prosecuting attorney who his witnesses are. State v. Kulbe, 120 Pac. 510, 511, 67 Wash. 21.

The word "witness," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2980, giving a justice court power to issue commissions to take the deposition of a witness, includes a party to the action. Murphy v. Sullivan, 77 N. Y. Supp. 950, 951.

Persons not subpoenaed

In order that one may be deemed a "witness" within Gen. St. 1909, § 2647, making it a misdemeanor to induce a witness to absent himself from a trial, it is not necessary that he shall have been served with a subpoena. State v. Sills, 118 Pac. 867, 868, 85 Kan. 380.

One who has not been summoned or recognized as a witness in a pending suit, and who is not acquainted with either of the parties thereto, and who has no knowledge of any fact, either direct or collateral, which may be the subject of inquiry therein, is not a "witness" within the meaning of Cr. Code, § 164, punishing any person who shall attempt to corrupt a witness either by promises, threats, or any other undue means. Gandy v. State, 110 N. W. 862, 863, 77 Neb. 782.

WITNESS AGAINST HIMSELF

Where accused made a confession to police officers, without objection, immediately after he was arrested while attempting to kill his wife, but before he was charged with any crime, that the confession, which was taken in shorthand, was made under oath did not render it a deposition, in a judicial proceeding against himself within Const. art. 6, § 32, providing that one accused of crime shall not be compelled to be a "witness" against himself. People v. Owen, 118 N. W. 590, 154 Mich. 571, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 520.

A confession freely and voluntarily made, without compulsion or inducement, does not come within the constitutional privilege that one shall not be compelled in a criminal case to be a "witness against himself," contained in the fifth amendment of the Federal Constitution; but a confession obtained through fear, duress, hope, or inducement cannot be given in evidence without compelling one to incriminate himself, and is violative of the constitutional privilege. One who takes the witness stand in his own behalf in a criminal case waives his constitutional privilege, and the prosecution may cross-examine him with respect to statements discrediting his testimony, though such statements would not be admissible as a voluntary confession. Harrold v. Territory, 89 Pac. 202, 205, 18 Okl. 395, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 604, 11 Ann. Cas. 818.

Civ. Code Prac. § 606, subd. 2, provides that no person shall testify for himself as to any verbal statement of or any transaction with one who is dead, unless the decedent or representative of an interest in his estate "shall have testified against such person with reference thereto." Held, that the phrase "shall have testified," in such statute means "has previously testified," so that defendant's testimony as to verbal statements of or transactions with her father prior to his death to prove her title to the property in controversy was not rendered competent by the subsequent testimony of defendant's sister as to other declarations made by decedent in defendant's presence. Foley v. Dillon (Ky.) 105 S. W. 461, 463.

The words "criminal cases," used in the state and federal Constitutions, in the provision that no person shall be required to give evidence in criminal cases tending to incriminate himself, have been construed by the courts to extend to and include imprisonment, fine, forfeiture, and penalty, whether to be recovered in a criminal or civil proceeding. People ex rel. Akin v. Butler St. Foundry & Iron Co., 66 N. E. 349, 355, 201 Ill. 236.

Requiring the bankrupt to deposit his books of account in the office of the receiver, there to remain in the custody of the bankrupt, who is to afford the receiver free opportunity to inspect them, the receiver to use and permit them to be used only for the purpose of the civil administration of the bankrupt estate, and not for any criminal proceeding, is a proper exercise of the authority of the bankruptcy court, and does not compel the bankrupt to be a "witness" against himself in a criminal case in the constitutional sense, although the knowledge gained from the books may be used to procure other evidence for use against him in a criminal prosecution. In re Harris, 31 Sup. Ct. 557, 558, 221 U. S. 274, 55 L. Ed. 732.

The word "witness," as used in Const. art. 1, § 6, declaring that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, applies to one required to furnish documentary proof, and to one potentially able to give testimony and to one called on to testify. People v. Rosenheimer, 128 N. Y. Supp. 1093, 1095, 70 Misc. Rep. 433.

WITNESSES BEFORE GRAND JURY

The phrase, "witnesses duly summoned by the state," contained in Laws 1893, p. 45, c. 4120, § 2, construed in connection with Laws 1893, p. 44, c. 4119, § 1, and in connection with Laws 1903, p. 35, c. 5114, § 2, the latter appropriating $70,000 for the payment of jurors and witnesses before grand juries for the year 1904, imposes on the state the duty of paying the per diem and mileage of witnesses before grand juries. State ex rel. Guyton v. Croom, 37 South. 303, 306, 48 Fla. 176.

WOLLEN

As used in an antenuptial agreement executed in German, the word "wollen" (wish) is a word importing obligation. Kleb v. Kleb, 62 Atl. 396, 397, 70 N. J. Eq. 305.

WOMAN

See Assault on a Woman; Common Women; Diseases Peculiar to Women; Innocent Woman; Low Woman; Marriageable Woman; Married Woman.

Where the indictment charged an assault with an intent to rape on a woman named, it was not error to permit prosecutrix to testify to her age and that she was just past 14 at the time of the offense; the word "woman," under Pen. Code, 1895, art. 21, signifying a female person of any age. Rogers v. State (Tex.) 143 S. W. 631, 634.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 21, providing that the word "woman" includes a female of any age, and article 608, punishing a person assaulting a woman with intent to rape, and article 611, providing that an assault to commit any other offense is constituted by the existence of facts which bring the offense within the definition of an assault coupled with an intention to commit such other offense, solicitation accompanied by the expectation of consent and laying on of hands without the use of such force as indicates a purpose to obtain intercourse at the very time is not an assault with intent to rape a female under the age of consent, but where a man puts his hand on a female child and at the time intends instantly to have intercourse with her without suspension of action, and without waiting to ascertain whether or not she will consent, and thereby places her in such attitude that the final act may be performed, whether the purpose is to place her in such attitude by force alone or by her free co-operation, he has gone far enough to commit an assault with intent to rape. Crommeans v. State, 129 S. W. 1129, 1132, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 611.

WOOD

See Furniture of Wood; Logs of Wood; Pulp Wood; Rossed Pulp Wood; Veneers of Wood.

Manufactures of, see Manufactures—Manufactured Articles.

Unmanufactured wood, see Unmanufactured.

The words "trees" and "wood" are not synonymous. The latter refers to the substance of the former when cut for use. The old maxim is "Lignum cum crescere nescit" (a tree while it grows; wood when it cannot grow). Hence an agreement for the sale of wood on a certain lot of land is an executory sale of goods. Graham v. West, 55 S. E. 931, 932, 126 Ga. 624.

WOOD ALCOHOL

"Methyl alcohol" is obtained by the distillation of wood, and is the "wood alcohol" of commerce. People v. Bowen, 74 N. E. 489, 493, 182 N. Y. 1 (quoting and adopting definition in Webst. Int. Dict.).

The pharmacy act does not, by legislative construction or repeal of section 260 of the crimes act, render it lawful for one, whether a registered pharmacist or not, to sell "wood alcohol" without labeling it as a poison. Campbell v. Brown, 117 Pac. 1010, 1012, 85 Kan. 527.

WOOD CENTERS

"Wood centers," as used in a contract for the construction of a cement floor, were wooden erections or false work put in place to support the floor while the concrete was setting and hardening, to be subsequently removed. Sulinski v. Leahy, 84 N. Y. Supp. 928, 929.

WOOD-NUT OIL

"Wood-nut oil," derived from the fruit of "aleurites vernica" of China, so called because it is used on wood as a substitute for varnish, is classifiable for tariff taxation under paragraph 626, Free List, § 2, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 199, for nut oil or oil of nuts not otherwise specially provided for. Edward Hill's Sons & Co. v. U. S., 127 Fed. 970.

WOOD PULP

Wood flour, produced by grinding small pieces of wood obtained by breaking or cutting waste wood, etc., is dutiable as a manufacture of wood under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule D, par. 208, and not as "wood pulp," under Schedule M, par. 393, nor as "waste" under Schedule N, par. 463. Nairn Linoleum Co. v. United States, 151 Fed. 955, 956.

WOOD WORKER

A "wood worker" is a machine used to cut wood into desired shapes, and for that purpose supplied with knives attached to a shaft, which, when the machine is operated, revolves, bringing the knives in contact with wood placed on a table and run over the knives, which machine should be supplied with springs to hold the wood in proper position as it is run over the knives. American Car & Foundry Co. v. Clark, 70 N. E. 828, 829, 32 Ind. App. 644.

WOODEN

The words "wooden" and "frame" are interchangeable, having the same meaning. A wooden building is a frame building, and a frame building is a wooden building. It has been said that "frame," as applied to a building, means "wooden," and the Century Dictionary defines a frame house as being a house constructed with a skeleton frame of timber covered in with boards and sometimes with shingles. Olmstead v. People, for use of Town of Littleton, 91 Pac. 1113, 41 Colo. 32.

WOODS

Under Kirby's Dig. § 1898, which provides that a person taking certain animals running at large in the range or woods, and which are not designated by brands or earmarks, shall not be guilty of larceny, but simply liable to the owner for the value of such animals, a cow, though not under the physical restraint of a halter or inclosure, which was, upon being turned out in the woods during the day to feed, accustomed to return to its home at night, did not run at large and, though unmarked, it was a subject of larceny; "range" meaning a sparsely populated and uninclosed tract of land over which stock and cattle are permitted to roam and feed without restraint, "in the woods" referring to uninclosed and unpopulated woodland, and "running at large" being applicable to animals which roam and feed at will, and which are not under the control and direction of any one. Jefferies v. State, 144 S. W. 514, 102 Ark. 373.

WOOL

The growth on cabretta skins is "wool," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule K. Lawrence Johnson & Co. v. United States, 159 Fed. 189; Id., 166 Fed. 728, 729, 92 C. C. A. 418.

WOOL GREASE

So-called olein, a distillate from wool grease, in the form of an oil, is not "wool grease," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 279, but is dutiable as a "distilled oil," under Schedule A, par. 3. Swan & Finch Co. v. United States, 172 Fed. 173. The provision does not include the refined and expensive products from wool grease, known as "adepts lanæ anhydrous" and "adepts lanæ cum aqua," and used medicinally. Zinkeisen & Co. v. United States, 167 Fed. 312, 92 C. C. A. 624. The provision includes a refined wool grease, from which the natural odor and mineral matter have been removed by a superior process, and which is commercially known as "wool grease." Swan & Finch Co. v. United States, 149 Fed. 304.

WOOL ON THE SKIN

Cabretta skins are sheepskins, within the meaning of the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 664, 30 Stat. 201, relating to raw skins, "except sheepskins with the wool on," and the growth thereon is subject to duty, as provided in paragraph 360, Schedule K, § 1, for "wool on the skin." Lawrence Johnson & Co. v. United States, 140 Fed. 116, 117.

A growth on skins of Mocha sheep imported from Arabia, which is commercially known, designated, and dealt in as Mocha hair, having none of the characteristics of wool, and which would not be accepted by dealers therein as a good delivery of wool, is not dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule K, par. 360, as "wool on the skin," but is entitled to free entry under paragraph 664, placing on the free list "skins of all kinds, raw (except sheepskins with the wool on), and hides not specially provided for in this act." Goat & Sheepskin Import Co. v. United States, 27 Sup. Ct. 634, 637, 206 U. S. 194, 51 L. Ed. 1022.

WOOL OR WORSTED CLOTHS

Certain woolen goods known as "cravenette cloths," which have been subjected to a process intended to make them rain-repellent, which are chiefly used for outer garments to be worn in rainy weather, and which, for all ordinary purposes, are waterproof, are dutiable as "waterproof cloth," under paragraph 369, Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, § 1, Schedule J, and not under paragraphs 392 and 393, Schedule K, of said act, relating, respectively, to "woolen or worsted cloths" and "dress goods * * * of wool, worsted," etc. United States v. Brown & Eadie, 136 Fed. 550, 551, 69 C. C. A. 260.

WOOL WASTE

Wool sweepings, such as carpet shearings and wool fly, not having sufficient fiber to be of value for manufacturing purposes, are not "wool waste" within the meaning of the customs law. In re R. F. Downing & Co., 139 Fed. 590, 591.

WOOLEN RAGS

Clippings of woolen material, produced in the process of making up garments, are "rags," within both the popular and the commercial signification of the term, and are more specifically provided for as "woolen rags," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule K, par. 363, than in paragraph 362, as "wastes composed wholly or in part of wool, not specially provided for." United States v. Pearson & Emmott, 131 Fed. 571; Id., 137 Fed. 1021, 70 C. C. A. 306.

WORD

"Words" are but the vehicle of thought; and if, since they were employed by the Legislature, they have undergone change, or if the subject they refer to has undergone modification since their employment, the sense which they bear when the statute was enacted must be searched for and adopted by the courts, because such it must be presumed was the intention of the lawmaking body. City of Clearwater v. Bowman, 82 Pac. 526, 72 Kan. 92 (citing Sikes v. State, 67 Ala. 77).

Under the statute providing that the stenographer transcribing the shorthand notes of the testimony shall be allowed not exceeding 20 cents per folio of 100 "words," he should not be allowed for punctuation marks. Walsh v. Jackson, 81 Pac. 258, 259, 33 Colo. 454.

An article stating that it is easy "to work" the county commissioners held actionable; for the word "work," in the connection and manner in which it appears in the publication, conveys a reflection upon the competency and integrity of the officials. Palmerlee v. Nottage, 138 N. W. 312, 119 Minn. 351, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 870.

The word "work," as used in a city charter, providing that all work exceeding in cost a specified sum shall be let to the lowest reasonable and responsible bidder, includes structures such as buildings and bridges. Chippewa Bridge Co. v. City of Durand, 99 N. W. 603, 606, 122 Wis. 85, 106 Am. St. Rep. 931.

In a city charter providing that the term of office of commissioners previously appointed to construct an aqueduct between certain termini shall cease on the completion of the work, the term "the work" means the completing of an aqueduct with necessary reservoirs as contemplated on their original appointment. Walter v. McClellan, 96 N. Y. Supp. 479, 481, 48 Misc. Rep. 215.

Withing the meaning of a building contract providing that no alterations shall be made "in the work" as shown by the specifications, except upon the written order of the owner, and requiring the contractors to take down the "work" condemned by the architect, to protect the "work" from the weather, maintain insurance on the "work," and referring to the "work" shown on the drawings, a substitution of ivory hard wall plaster for lime plaster was an alteration in the "work," within the meaning of the contract, requiring a written order from the owner; the word "work" being defined, as applied to building contracts, to be the product of labor and material combined which terminates in the execution of the contract, and applies to all work done thereunder. Trustees of Seventh Baptist Church v. Andrew & Thomas, 82 Atl. 452, 453, 115 Md. 541.

A provision in an ordinance for a street improvement that the contractor shall use precautions to prevent accidents to persons and property by providing barriers and shall be responsible for damage to persons, property, or the work, due to the nature of the work, when considered in connection with the provision that all work or materials shall be performed or furnished in accordance with the specifications, refers exclusively to damages arising during the progress of the work, and not to damages arising subsequently thereto, caused by the nature of the work when completed, and it does invalidate an assessment for the work; the word "work" meaning the state of actively working or operating. McQuiddy v. Worswick Street Paving Co., 116 Pac. 67, 69, 160 Cal. 9.

Under a city charter providing that it should be the duty of the city officers to let contracts for any work or material in excess of $50 to the lowest bidder, the word "work" is used in a restrictive sense, as applicable only to work which may be safely awarded to the lowest bidder, and does not apply to the occasional services of a court stenographer at an investigation of the management of city officers, so as to require such services to be obtained by competitive bids. O'Brien v. City of Niagara Falls, 119 N. Y. Supp. 497, 499, 65 Misc. Rep. 92 (citing People v. Flagg, 17 N. Y. 584; Gleason v. Dalton, 51 N. Y. Supp. 337, 28 App. Div. 555).

A contract for the excavation of a bulkhead, the inner line of which was about 9 feet inshore from an established bulkhead line, and the base of which was to be 15 feet below mean low-water mark with allowance to the contractor for whatever he might excavate within an extra foot in each direction, specified that no payment should be made for excavation beyond those limits, "except where known loose rock is shown in the cross-sections above the top grade of the indicated rock, at a line ten feet westerly of and parallel to the bulkhead line, allowance will be made and paid for to a positive line which is forty-five degrees to the horizontal," and specified, as to "typical sections," that they were given as a guide only and to show approximately what the contractor might expect to encounter in the prosecution of the "work," and represented the "typical sections" as information upon (1) "the existing rock bottom which was the top of the loose rock; (2) the corresponding theoretical sections to be obtained, meaning the so-called nine-foot and fifteen-foot lines; and (3) the corresponding limiting lines to which payment will be made when it is impossible to produce the theoretical sections; and that all material was to be measured by comparison of 'accurate cross-sections.'" The points at which the 45-degrees lines should commence could not be ascertained before the work commenced. Held, that the "corresponding theoretical sections" meant the 10-foot and 16-foot lines; that the "typical" cross-sections could not be regarded as the "accurate cross-sections"; that "work" had a double meaning, and, for the purpose of fixing the beginning points of the 45-degree lines, did not begin until the blasting began, when the junctions between the loose rock and the ledge rock became "known," so as to be "indicated" upon the cross-sections made by the city after the work was completed; and that work to such junctions was necessitated and contemplated by the contract. R. G. Packard Co. v. City of New York, 137 N. Y. Supp. 9, 12, 151 App. Div. 941.

Act synonymous

The word "work," as used in the statute protecting persons while engaged in the work of operating cars, etc., against the negligence of any employé of the company, is synonymous with "act," and means the doing of those things which constitute the operating of the locomotive, etc. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 103 S. W. 447, 449, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 74.

"Work," as used in Batts' Ann. St. art. 4560e, protecting all persons while engaged in the work of operating cars against the negligence of any servant or employé of the company, is synonymous with "act," and in its connection means the doing of those things which constitute operating the locomotives, etc., and the person so engaged is protected against the negligence of any other employé during the time he is engaged in the act of operating the machinery. A person employed about a locomotive roundhouse to take charge of engines was not, while on his way to take charge of a locomotive and before he began to perform the act of operating the machinery, a servant engaged in the work of operating the cars, locomotive, or trains of a railroad, so as to give him or his representatives a right to recover for his injury when caused through the negligence of a fellow servant. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Howard, 80 S. W. 229, 230, 97 Tex. 513.

Business synonymous

Acts 1902, c. 160, which provides by section 8 that, before any person should engage in the business of undertaking or any assistant or employé of such person whose duties engaged him in the care, preservation, disposition, or burial of the dead should perform such duties, he should apply to the state board of undertakers for a license to practice such business and employment, and which as amended by Acts 1904, c. 389, requires the board to find that the applicant "has been employed at least two years prior to said application by some person or firm actively engaged in the work of practical embalming and undertaking * * * is possessed of skill and knowledge of the said business," must be construed to mean that the applicant has been so employed in the work of embalming and undertaking, and that he possesses the skill and knowledge of embalming as well as undertaking, and that the word "work" in the amending clause is synonymous with the word "business." State v. Rice, 80 Atl. 1026, 1029, 115 Md. 317, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 344, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1247.

As labor

The word "work" has a much more comprehensive meaning than the term "labor," and has been defined to mean to exert one's self for a purpose, to put forth effort for the attainment of an object, to be engaged in the performance of a task, duty, or the like; and, as thus defined, covers all forms of physical or mental exertions, or both combined, for the attainment of some object other than recreation or amusement. State v. Rose, 51 South. 496, 497, 125 La. 462, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 821.

A receipt, by a contractor for labor and material, of money "on account of * * * contract for mason work," must be treated as evidence of a partial payment on the contract, and does not affect the right of the contractor to enforce a lien, as authorized by Rev. Laws, c. 197, § 2, for an amount not exceeding, with the payment, the contract price; the word "work" being used in the sense of an undertaking, enterprise, or project, and not synonymous with the word "labor." Thompson v. Luciano, 97 N. E. 892, 893, 211 Mass. 169.

As occupation or occupy

As used in a deed relating to the occupation of a coal bed, the word "occupy" is synonymous with "work" or "appropriate." Hoysradt v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 151 Fed. 321, 330.

In an action on an accident policy, insuring one as "contractor, office and traveling," and exempting the insurer from liability for death while riding on any locomotive, or while walking on the roadbed of any steam railway, an instruction that if insured was killed while traveling as a contractor engaged in railroad "work," using the ordinary means of travel in that occupation, the insurer was liable on the policy, as it insured him while he was traveling in the usual way of a contractor engaged in railroad "work," was not erroneous as assuming that he was insured as a working contractor; the word "work" in the instruction only meaning "occupation." Ward's Adm'r v. Preferred Acc. Ins. Co., 67 Atl. 821, 824, 80 Vt. 321.

In child labor laws

Section 1 of Act No. 301 of 1908 makes it unlawful for any person to employ a child under 14 years of age to labor or "work" in any mill, factory, mine, mercantile establishment, etc., or in any theater, concert hall, etc. Held, that the word "work" is comprehensive enough to cover any performance on the stage of a theater of a girl 10 years of age. State v. Rose, 51 South. 496, 497, 125 La. 462, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 821.

The word "work," in Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 28, as amended by St. 1905, p. 190, c. 267, providing that no child under the age of 14 years shall be "employed at work performed for wages," etc., during school hours, or after 7 o'clock in the evening, is not used in a narrow meaning, and is not limited to work done in a factory, workshop, or mercantile establishment, but includes a theatrical exhibition, and prohibits the employment of children therein; the word "work" having a broad signification, and meaning effort directed to an end. Commonwealth v. Griffith, 90 N. E. 394, 395, 204 Mass. 18, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 957, 134 Am. St. Rep. 645.

In Sunday law

"Work required" in maintaining or operating a railroad, etc., excepted in Ky. St. 1903, § 1321, providing a penalty for Sabbath work, means that which is necessary, and does not refer to work that may as well be done on other days. Com. v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 108 S. W. 851, 852, 128 Ky. 542.

WORK HORSE

The term "work horses," used by the constitutional exemption provision, includes mules. McElveen v. Goings, 41 South. 229, 116 La. 977, 114 Am. St. Rep. 574 (citing Ray v. Hayes, 28 La. Ann. 641; Goldsmith v. State [Tenn.] 1 Head, 156).

Two horses used by a business man in driving from his home to his place of business, in driving his family about for pleasure, and occasionally used by him to make business trips, are not "work horses," within a statute exempting two work horses from execution. Tishomingo Sav. Institution v. Young, 40 South. 9, 11, 87 Miss. 473, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 693, 112 Am. St. Rep. 454, 6 Ann. Cas. 776.

WORK OF CHARITY

See Charity (In Sunday Law).

WORK OF INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT

See Internal Improvement.

WORK OF NECESSITY

See Necessity (Sunday Labor).

WORKAWAY

"Workaway" is a term applied to destitute seamen who work their passage home without compensation. The August Belmont, 153 Fed. 639, 640.

WORKED

Counts alleging a statement by defendant that plaintiff had worked defendant's husband charged words actionable per se; the word "worked" having a well-understood meaning as alleging adultery at the place where the words were spoken. Schaefer v. Schoenborn, 111 N. W. 843, 101 Minn. 67.

WORKING CAPITAL

"Working capital" means the amount of cash necessary for the safe and convenient transaction of a business, having regard to the owner's ordinary outstandings, both payable and receivable, the ordinary condition of his stock or supplies in hand, the natural risk of his business, and the condition of his credit; and unless these matters, and perhaps others, be looked into, no comparison can be drawn between one business and another, or even between those of the same general nature. Consolidated Gas Co. v. City of New York, 157 Fed. 849, 859.

The ordinary meaning of "working capital" is "cash," money that is instantly available for any corporate need, and not raw material or finished articles, which may not be available at all when the credit and life of the enterprise may be at stake. So where a corporation assigned certain patents as collateral security, and the assignee agreed to reassign the same if within a stated time the corporation had "secured the sum of $5,000 as working capital for its business" by the sale of treasury stock or otherwise, it was held that the agreement to obtain "working capital for its business" through the sale of stock contemplated the sale of such stock for cash, which would be available for any corporate need. Janney v. Pancoast International Ventilator Co., 122 Fed. 535, 537, 538.

WORKING CIRCUIT

Where a patent relates to improvements in the regulation of the compensating action of a storage battery when applied to compensate for fluctuations of electrical condition of a working circuit, and consists essentially in reinforcing such battery by a supplemental generator at the time of discharge and regulating the action of the reinforcing agent automatically by the electric condition of the working circuit, and throughout the specifications and claims the circuit into which the regulation coil is to be electrically connected is referred to indifferently as "main circuit," "working circuit," "mains," etc., evidently the patentee understood that the terms "main circuit" and "working circuit" were synonymous or interchangeable. When, therefore, the patentee says that "the coil in any case [should be] electrically connected into the main circuit," it seems reasonably clear that what he intended to describe and claim was a coil connected into the working circuit. Electric Storage Battery Co. v. Gould Storage Battery Co., 158 Fed. 610, 611, 614, 85 C. C. A. 432.

WORKING CONTRACT

Assignment distinguished, see Assignment.

WORKING DAYS

See Actual Working Days; Weather Working Day.

In a provision of a bill of lading which entitles the ship to discharge "continuously," the word must be construed to mean continuously during working days, and "working days" exclude Sundays and holidays usually observed, and include only the usual working hours of days on which usual work is only prevented by weather. Tweedie Trading Co. v. Pitch Pine Lumber Co., 156 Fed. 88, 89.

Where a charter provided that after one idle day the charterer had ten "days" to load, and that for every day's detention thereafter he should pay demurrage, he was entitled to eleven "days" to load, including Sundays, holidays, or stormy days; and likewise where a charter party provided that the charterer, after one idle day, should have ten "working days" to load before demurrage should be charged, he was entitled to eleven days, excluding Sundays and holidays, but not stormy days. Hughes v. J. S. Hoskins Lumber Co., 136 Fed. 435, 436 (citing Pedersen v. Eugster, 14 Fed. 422; Sorensen v. Keyser, 52 Fed. 163, 2 C. C. A. 650; Hagerman v. Norton, 105 Fed. 996, 46 C. C. A. 1).

WORKING IN A SHOP

An action against a railroad company for injury to a stone mason's helper in the construction of an addition to a roundhouse is governed by Pub. Acts 1909, No. 104, § 1, making railroad companies liable for negligent injury to their employes, and not by section 7, which provides that the act shall not extend to employes "working in shops." Ferguson v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 135 N. W. 268, 269, 169 Mich. 260.

WORKING ORDER

See Good Working Order.

WORKING PLACE

The running board of a machine on which employes operating the machine stand is a "working place," within the rule requiring a master to provide a reasonably safe working place. Marshal v. Dalton Paper Mills, 74 Atl. 108, 112, 82 Vt. 489, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 128.

WORKING TOGETHER

The general rule of the master's liability in case of injury to an employe through the negligence of a fellow servant is not changed by Rev. St. Utah, 1898, § 1343, defining "fellow servants" as "all persons who are engaged in the service of such employer, and who, while so engaged, are in the same grade of service and working together at the same time and place to a common purpose, neither of such persons being intrusted by such employer with any superintendency or control over his fellow employes," except in relation to the matter of superintendency; the statute not requiring, by the provision that they must be "working together," that the servants should be doing the same kind of work, or engaged in aiding each other in the same detail of labor, but only that they shall be working to a common purpose and sufficiently near each other to arouse in the one a reasonable appreciation of probable danger from the neglect of the other. Lukic v. Southern Pac. Co., 160 Fed. 135.

Comp. Laws 1907, § 1343, provides that all persons who, while engaged in the service of a common employer, are working together at the same time and place and to a common purpose, etc., without being intrusted with superintendence, are "fellow servants." The court instructed that the term "working together at the same time and place" does not mean that the employes were working at the exact spot and doing exactly the same kind of work, but means whether, in the discharge of their duties, they are thrown in such contact with each other that they may have a fair opportunity of observing the habits and demeanor of each other, so as to form a conclusion as to the carefulness of the habits of the other. Held, that the instruction was erroneous, as it was not essential to constitute two employes fellow servants that they should have been thrown in contact for such time as to enable them to observe the habits of each other. Shepherd v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. (Utah) 126 Pac. 692, 695.

WORKING TOOLS

In the eighth section of the "act prescribing the forms of writs and the manner of serving them," which exempts from attachment, in favor of the housekeeper, "the 'working tools' necessary for his usual occupation," to the value of fifty dollars, and in favor of any debtor, "his 'working tools,' " to the same value, the same meaning is to be attached to the language in both instances, and should be construed to include, not only such tools as are indispensably necessary to the mechanic, or even such as are in general use by individuals of the same craft, but also such as the individual in question has adopted to facilitate and diminish his labor, and not only 'working tools,' so called in the dictionary and by learned men, but such as are so called by the craft, such as the individual uses and has set apart as tools for the advantageous prosecution of his business. Healy v. Bateman, 2 R. I. 454, 455, 456, 60 Am. Dec. 94.

WORKINGMAN

Under a statute giving preference in the distribution of the assets of an insolvent corporation to claims for "wages of mechanics, workmen and laborers," the wages preferred and the class of persons within the statute depend upon the nature and kind of work done, rather than on the social position or professional character and standing of the person rendering the service, and, if the service is such as to bring the person rendering it within the statute, his compensation, whether large or small, or whether payable by the day, week, month, or year, is "wages," within the meaning of the statute and preferred. Laws N. Y. 1897, c. 415, § 8, provides that, "upon the appointment of a receiver of a partnership or of a corporation organized under the laws of this state and doing business therein, other than a moneyed corporation, the wages of the employes of such partnership or corporation shall be preferred to every other debt or claim." Section 2 defines the word "employé" as used in the act as meaning "a mechanic, workingman or laborer who works for another for hire." Held that, under the construction placed upon a similar prior statute by the Court of Appeals of the state, an attorney at law employed by an electric company to procure options on certain property and water power sites which the company desired to buy, at an understood compensation of $10 per day and expenses for the time employed in the service, was not a "workingman" or "laborer," and hence not an "employé" entitled to preference under the statute. Gay v. Hudson River Electric Power Co., 178 Fed. 499, 501-507.

WORKMAN

The differences in meaning of the words "workman," "laborer," "artisan," "artificer," "mechanic," and "craftsman" are as follows: "Workman" is the general term which frequently applies to one who does relatively skilled work, as contrasted with a "laborer," whose work demands strength or exertion rather than skill. An "artisan" is one who is employed in an industrial or mechanic art or trade. "Mechanic," once synonymous with "artisan," is now commonly restricted to a workman who is skilled in constructing, repairing, or using machinery. A "craftsman" is one who practices a handicraft. "Artificer" commonly implies power of contrivance or adaptation in the exercise of one's craft. State v. City of Ottawa, 113 Pac. 391, 393, 84 Kan. 100.

Rev. St. c. 28, § 38, provides that every building in which any business is carried on requiring the presence of "workmen" above the first floor must be provided with fire escapes. Held that, though "workmen" includes any one who does manual labor, the word could not have been so used, and that, while it means something more than the word "operatives," it was not intended to apply to a building where a very limited number only of persons were required to be engaged in work above the first floor. Carrigan v. Stillwell, 59 Atl. 683, 685, 99 Me. 434, 68 L. R. A. 386.

Branch office manager

The manager of a branch office of a broker in another city is not a "workman, clerk, or servant," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b(4), 30 Stat. 563, and his claim for wages is not entitled to priority on the bankruptcy of his employer. "Workman" is possibly a wider phrase than "operative," and "servant" is undoubtedly wider than "house servant." In re Albert O. Brown & Co., 171 Fed. 281

Contractor

Bankrupts operated a sash, door, and blind factory; claimants having charge of the blind and sash departments under contract, by which claimants employed and discharged their own men and were responsible for the work that they turned out, but for convenience the men drew their wages from the bankrupts, the pay rolls being made out by claimants and turned in for that purpose. Claimants were compensated by an agreed schedule of prices for each character of work turned out; the bankrupts in general furnishing materials, as well as the tools and machinery. All the employes were subject to certain factory rules prescribed by the bankrupts, and the hours of the men were regulated by the shop whistle; the amounts received by claimants depending on their success in managing their departments and getting out the work for less than the scheduled prices. Held, that claimants were not "workmen," nor their compensation "wages," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64, subd. 4, 30 Stat. 563, giving priority to wages due to workmen earned within three months before bankruptcy proceedings, not exceeding $300 to each claimant. In re Thomas Deutschle & Co., 182 Fed. 430, 431, 433.

Corporate officer

Officers are not within Revisal 1908, § 1206, providing that, in case of insolvency of a corporation, "laborers" and "workmen" shall have a prior lien on its assets for work and labor. Alexander v. Farrow, 66 S. E. 209, 210, 151 N. C. 320.

Railroad yard foreman

In an action for death of a railroad yard foreman crushed between cars while making a coupling, where it appeared that deceased had not complied with a rule reciting that a blue flag by day and a blue light by night displayed on an engine or train indicates that workmen are about it, and providing that, when thus protected, such engine or car must not be moved or coupled with any other train, etc., and that "workmen" will display the blue signals, etc., but the uncontradicted evidence showed that it was never the custom for yard crews in moving trains to use a blue light, though they might be delayed for a few minutes by an emergency, and that the yard crews had never been supplied with any signals except the ordinary white lantern used by trainmen, the jury was warranted in finding that the rule did not apply to deceased; he not being a "workman" within its meaning. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Lovell's Adm'r, 132 S. W. 569, 571, 141 Ky. 249, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 909.

Laborer distinguished

"Workman" is the general term which frequently applies to one who does relatively skilled work, as contrasted with a "laborer," whose work demands strength or exertion rather than skill. State v. City of Ottawa, 113 Pac. 391, 393, 84 Kan. 100.

WORKMANLIKE

See Good and Workmanlike Job; Good and Workmanlike Manner.

WORKMANSHIP

Where a contractor for the construction of a building guaranteed that the workmanship should be first-class and satisfactory in every respect, the term "workmanship," as used in such guaranty, was sufficient to protect the owner against the use of bad or unsuitable materials by a subcontractor. Lambert v. Jenkins, 71 S. E. 718, 720, 112 Va. 376, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 778.

WORKS

See Constructed Works; Gas Works; Ways, Works, Machinery, or Plant; Waterworks.

Employed in any of the work, see Employed.

A wall in course of construction is not "works," within the Employers' Liability Act (Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600), making an employer liable for injuries caused by defective works, etc. Ripp v. Fuchs, 113 N. Y. Supp. 361, 364, 129 App. Div. 321.

A clay bank, on which an employé is working, is regarded as "works," within the Employers' Liability Act (Consol. Laws, c. 31), extending the liability of the employer to the employé to defects in the condition of the works connected with the business. Bacelli v. New England Brick Co., 122 N. Y. Supp. 856, 138 App. Div. 656. Where a construction company was blasting a trench in an excavation, the holes made for blasts and the dynamite used were not, under the Employers' Liability Act (Consol. Laws, c. 31), a part of the "works or machinery" supplied by the master. McGowan v. New York Contracting Co., Pennsylvania Terminal, 127 N. Y. Supp. 532, 143 App. Div. 1. In an action for injuries under Employers' Liability Act (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 31), held, a cable and its hoisting machinery used in lowering a heavy steel section of a bridge into place were within the term "works or machinery." McGlynn v. Pennsylvania Steel Co., 129 N. Y. Supp. 45, 49, 144 App. Div. 343. The word "works," as used in such statute, comprehends the entire plant, including all the real estate, buildings, and machinery used in the particular business. Kern v. Welz & Zerweck, 136 N. Y. Supp. 412, 416, 151 App. Div. 432.

The harness of a horse attached to a delivery wagon which an employé was driving was not a part of the employer's "machinery," within Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 71, cl. 1, giving an employé the same right of action against his employer for personal injuries by a defect in the ways, works, and machinery connected with the employer's business, as if he had not been an employé; "machinery" only including such machines or mechanical devices as are in use, and such appurtenances thereof as are used incidental to the use of the machine. Nor was the harness a part of the "ways" or "works." Murphy v. O'Neill, 90 N. E. 408, 407, 204 Mass. 42, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 146.

A levee constructed by the trustees of a reclamation district on a right of way procured for that purpose is a part of the "works" which the trustees of the district are authorized to take materials for and construct for the purpose of reclaiming and keeping reclaimed the land within the district, under Pol. Code, § 8454, and is public property acquired by the agents of the state for state purposes. Reclamation Dist. No. 551 v. Superior Court of Sacramento, 90 Pac. 545, 546, 151 Cal. 263.

WORKS OF ART

Pen and ink drawings of an artistic character, of a proposed building, produced by an architect, are within paragraph 703, Free List, § 2, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 203, relating to "works of art, the production of American artists." Young v. Bohn, 141 Fed. 471, 473.

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 703, 30 Stat. 203, for "works of art," does not include fashion plate drawings, which, though possessing artistic merit, are for purely practical and utilitarian purposes. Harper & Bros. v. United States, 172 Fed. 289, 290.

The term "works of art," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 703, 30 Stat. 194, held not to include a monument on which the only free sculpture is the cornice, a relief bust, and a garland of flowers, all covering only a very slight area of the whole surface. F. B. Vandegrift & Co. v. United States, 162 Fed. 1003.

In determining whether marble altars imported for a church were "works of art" within the meaning of the tariff list, the board of appraisers, whose report was adopted by the court, said that it would be presumptuous to question the correctness of the views of eminent artists as to what constitutes a work of art in the strict and technical understanding of sculptors, who exclude architectural works from their definition. But when such sculptors undertake to determine what is a work of art in the phraseology of the law, and what was the intention of the framers of the law, they manifestly overlooked the well-settled rule in the interpretation of the tariff act that words used therein are to be understood in the sense which they bear in the common speech of the people of this country. In that sense the altar and reredos was a work of art. The court gave definitions by sculptors to the effect that "any human work, made with a specific purpose of stirring human emotions, is a work of art," and that "art is the work of a human being, in plastic material or color, or something to render a sentiment, to imitate a form, or something of that kind, which does not grow on trees, which is not in nature." If the proportions are sufficiently symmetrical, and the lines so far free from faults as to stir the emotions of people, the work is to them a work of art. The work as an entirety confessedly falls within the accepted definition of a work of art. It represents the handiwork of an artist; it embodies something more than the mere labor of an artisan; it is a skillful production of the beautiful in visible form. It is none the less a work of art because adapted to beautiful things. United States v. Ecclesiastical Art Works, 139 Fed. 798, 799. The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 703, 30 Stat. 203, for "works of art" intended for presentation to religious societies, held to include marble altars imported for presentation to a church, which were carved by a professional sculptor and were of a value of $1,800. United States v. Ecclesiastical Art Works, 139 Fed. 798; Id., 142 Fed. 1038, 71 C. C. A. 685.

WORKS OF IMPROVEMENT AND PUBLIC WORKS

The city charter of Houston provides that all "works of improvements and public works" for the city, the cost of which shall exceed $500, shall be let out by sealed bids to the lowest bidder, and declares that "work of which it is manifestly impossible to make specifications is not embraced in this requirement." Held, that the term "works of improvement and public works" refers to the construction of public buildings and other permanent improvements, and such charter provision does not apply to the employment by the city of an architect to prepare plans for a public building. City of Houston v. Glover, 89 S. W. 425, 428, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 177.

WORKS OF INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT

See Internal Improvement.

WORKS OF THE STATE

"Works of the state," as used in a statute exempting works of the state from liability to taxation, did not include the property of a railroad company; the roadbed and depot grounds not being held as an easement of the public by the railroad company as the agents of the state, but by them as a private corporation. State v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 105 N. W. 983, 984, 75 Neb. 4 (quoting Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Spearman, 12 Iowa, 117).

WORKSHOP

The word "workshop," as used in a statute prohibiting employment of children under fourteen in any mercantile institution, office, laundry, manufactory, "workshop," restaurant, hotel, or apartment house, could not be said not to include a barber shop; it being a place where a handicraft is carried on. In re Spencer, 86 Pac. 896, 897, 149 Cal. 396, 117 Am. St. Rep. 137, 9 Ann. Cas. 1105.

Rev. Laws 1905, § 1814, requiring the owner of any factory, mill, or workshop to furnish belt shifters, if practicable, applies to the owners of grain elevators. The term "workshop," as defined by Laws 1907, c. 356, § 2, means any premises, room, or place, not a mill or factory, wherein manual labor is exercised for purposes of cleaning or adapting for sale any article or part thereof, and includes a grain elevator. Sorseleil v. Red Lake Falls Milling Co., 126 N. W. 903, 905, 111 Minn. 275.

A plant for mixing the materials used in making asphalt pavement, consisting of machinery mounted on an open or flat car, moved from place to place as required, is not a "factory, mill, or workshop," within the meaning of Laws Wash. 1905, c. 84, as amended by Laws 1907, c. 205, providing for the protection and health of employés in factories, mills, and workshops, and requiring the boxing or guarding of machinery and shafting therein, etc. Casey v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 192 Fed. 432, 433.

Acts 1899, p. 234, c. 142, in relation to the safety of employes, is made applicable in section 1 to any manufacturing or mercantile establishment, laundry, renovating works, bakery, or printing office; and section 18 (page 237) provides that "the words 'manufacturing or mercantile establishment, mine, quarry, laundry, renovating works, bakery or printing office,' mean any mill, factory, workshop, store, * * * or other establishment where goods, wares, or merchandise are manufactured or offered for sale," or where persons are employed for hire. Held, that a shop maintained by a street railroad company, where the principal work was in the way of repair of cars or other appliances used in carrying on the business of the corporation, was within the statute as a "workshop." Hoffmeyer v. State, 77 N. E. 372-374, 37 Ind. App. 526.

See Notice to the World.

WORLDLY

WORLDLY BUSINESS OR EMPLOYMENT

The purchase of a cigar on Sunday for the purpose of consumption is not a "worldly employment or business," within the meaning of the Sunday law of April 22, 1794. Commonwealth v. Hoover, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 133, 134.

WORSHIP

See House of Public Worship; House of Religious Worship; House of Worship; Place of Public Worship.

"Worship" includes prayer, praise, and thanksgiving. In the ordinary church meeting the congregation is regarded as engaged in religious worship while listening to the sermon, reading the Holy Scriptures or hearing them read, or engaging in singing. Devotional, religious exercises constitute worship. Prayer is a chief part of worship. People ex rel. Ring v. Board of Education of Dist. 24, 92 N. E. 251, 252, 245 Ill. 334, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 442, 19 Ann. Cas. 220.

WORSTED CLOTH

See Wool or Worsted Cloths.

WORTH

See Money's Worth; Reasonable Worth.

The "worth" of a thing is what it can be sold for. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore v. Latrobe, 61 Atl. 203, 205, 101 Md. 621.

Though strictly "price" tokens agreement on a value by parties in interest, while "value" is, as a rule, the general estimate of the pecuniary equivalent of the subject of inquiry, the terms "worth," "price," and "value" may be treated as synonymous in determining the damages for breach by the buyer of a contract of sale. Scruggs & Echols v. Riddle, 54 South. 641, 645, 171 Ala. 350.

WORTHY

The word "worthy" is elastic in its meaning, according to the context in which used. It may—perhaps, more exactly, does—mean virtuous, or of good standing, but its restriction to such significance would be absurd when used in a will enjoining the trustees of a fund to select subjects worthy of assistance; would strain through a distorting filter this testator's bounty, in view of the situations which he evidently contemplated as likely to surround its distribution. Kronshage v. Varrell, 97 N. W. 928, 930, 120 Wis. 161.

WORTLES

"Wortles" and "draw-plates," so called, consisting respectively of bars and blocks with holes for wire drawing, are not dutiable as steel "plates" under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 135; that term being, in the absence of evidence of a contrary commercial usage, limited to articles in the form of sheets. Newman v. United States, 159 Fed. 123, 86 C. C. A. 511.

WOULD

A warning given by an officer to one in his custody, which was in the usual form, with the exception of the use of the word "might" instead of "would" or "could," the officer telling the one in custody that any statement he might make "might" be used against him, was sufficient. Garrett v. State, 91 S. W. 577, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 235.

WOULD AFFECT

The term "would affect," used in decisions holding that adverse parties upon whom notice of appeal must be served under Rev. St. 1887, § 4808, are such parties as a reversal of judgment would affect, means adversely affect. Nelson Bennett Co. v. Twin Falls Land & Water Co., 92 Pac. 980, 13 Idaho, 767, 13 Ann. Cas. 172 (citing and adopting the definitions in Aulbach v. Dahler, 4 Idaho, 522, 43 Pac. 192; Titiman v. Alamance Mining Co., 9 Idaho, 240, 74 Pac. 529).

WOULD ENDEAVOR

Where one desiring to ship goods informed the agent of the carrier that he would want two cars in which to transport the goods, an allegation, in a complaint founded on a failure to furnish the cars, that the agent "notified" the shipper that he "would endeavor" to secure the cars, was insufficient to show an acceptance of the proposal according to the terms in which it was made, or an unconditional promise to comply with it. It was no more than a promise that the agent "would endeavor" to comply with the order, which it was his duty to do without a contract. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Anderson, 79 N. E. 381, 383, 39 Ind. App. 112.

WOUND

See Gunshot Wounds.

"Wounds," within the meaning of an accident policy requiring injury to result from external, etc., means leaving wounds visible to the naked eye, means injuries of every kind which affect the body, including bruises, contusions, fractures, luxations, etc., or any lesion of the body. Thompson v. Loyal Protective Ass'n, 132 N. W. 554, 557, 167 Mich. 31.

Disease brought about as the result of a "wound," even though not the necessary or probable result, yet if it is the natural result of the wound, and not of an independent cause, is properly attributed to the wound; and death resulting from the disease is a "death resulting from the wound," even though the wound was not in its nature mortal or even dangerous. Even though the wound results in disease and death through the negligence of the injured persons in failing to take ordinary and reasonable precautions to avoid the possible consequence, the death is the result of the wound. Delaney v. Modern Accident Club, 97 N. W. 91, 93, 121 Iowa, 528, 63 L. R. A. 603.

An accident policy covered, inter alia, blood poison sustained by physicians or surgeons resulting from septic matter introduced into the system through "wounds" suffered in professional operations. Plaintiff, a dentist, was operating on a patient, who suddenly coughed, and particles of septic matter from his mouth were thrown against the mucous membrane of plaintiff's eye. The septic matter, without abrading, penetrating or bruising the membrane, infected it and caused blood poisoning. Held, that plaintiff had not received any "wound," within the meaning of the policy, and was not entitled to recover under such provision. It was error for the court under such circumstances to charge that the term "wound" as used in the policy included any lesion of the body resulting from external violence whether accompanied by a rupture of the skin or mucous membrane or not. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Thompson, 154 Fed. 484, 486, 83 C. C. A. 324, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1069, 12 Ann. Cas. 181.

As disease

See Disease.

Nature of instrument used

To constitute a "wound," within the meaning of Code 1906, c. 144, § 9, the injury must have been inflicted with a weapon other than any of those with which the human body is provided by nature, and must include a complete parting of the external or internal skin. State v. Gibson, 68 S. E. 295, 67 W. Va. 548, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 965.

Inflicting wounds with a rawhide whip and a hot stove-lid lifter constitutes a "wounding," within Rev. St. 1899, § 1849 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1279), providing that where one is maimed, wounded or disfigured, etc., by another under circumstances constituting murder or manslaughter if death ensues, the person occasioning the injury shall be punished, though the whip and stove-lid lifter were not deadly or dangerous weapons. State v. Nieuhaus, 117 S. W. 73, 77, 217 Mo. 332.

WOUND UP

A statement by a partner that "at the end of ten years, if he [the copartner] shall not have received all his money and interest out of the sales, the joint account shall be 'wound up' and I shall have 5 per cent. for all the lands I have sold," means that at the end of ten years a sufficient length of time should be given to cast up the accounts of the partnership, to ascertain where the parties stood, and for settlement on the basis stated. Corbin v. Holmes, 154 Fed. 593, 596, 598, 83 C. C. A. 367.

WRAPPER

WRAPPER TOBACCO

Under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule F, 30 Stat. 169, imposing duties upon tobacco, and providing that the "term 'wrapper tobacco,' as used in this act, means that quality of leaf tobacco which is suitable for cigar wrappers, and the term 'filler tobacco' means all other leaf tobacco," the importer is limited to a choice between the terms "wrapper" and "filler" tobacco, and it was improper for the importer to describe his importation as "mixed tobacco." United States v. Seventy-Five Bales of Tobacco, 147 Fed. 127, 132, 77 C. C. A. 353.

WRIT

See Proper Writ; Receipt of Writ.

Issue of, see Issuance—Issue.

Issuance or service as commencement of action, see Commencement of Action.

A "writ" is an instrument in writing in an epistolary form, running in the name of the sovereign of a state and issued out of a court of justice by a judge thereof, at the commencement of an action or at any time during its progress or incident thereto, usually under the seal of the court, duly attested, and directed to some municipal officer, or to the party to be bound by it, commanding the commission of some act at or within a time specified, or prohibiting the doing of some act. The cardinal requisites are that the instrument issue from a court of justice, or a judge thereof; that it run in the name of the sovereign of the state; that it be duly attested, but not necessarily by the judge, though usually, but not always, under seal; and that it be directed to some one, commanding or prohibiting the commission of an act. Watson v. Keystone Iron Works Co., 74 Pac. 272, 273, 70 Kan. 43.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2170, makes any unlawful interference with the process or proceedings of a court a contempt. Section 3463 defines "process" as a writ issued in the course of judicial proceedings, and "writ" is defined as a written order or precept, issued in the name of the state, of a court or judicial officer. Sections 840-843, in relation to the recovery of possession of personal property, provides that, when a delivery is claimed, plaintiff must make an affidavit stating certain facts, and that he may, by an indorsement on the affidavit, require the sheriff of the county to take the property from defendant, and the officer is required to serve on the defendant a copy of the affidavit and undertaking. Held, that where defendant in replevin refused to receive a copy of papers, and threatened the officer with violence if he took possession of the property, and while the officer was absent seeking assistance secreted the property, he was guilty of a contempt, though he had not been served with summons and though the order indorsed by plaintiff on the affidavit was not strictly within the definition of "process." State ex rel. Bruce v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist. for Silver Bow County, 83 Pac. 641, 642, 33 Mont. 359.

Rev. St. c. 83, § 94, provides that when a writ fails of sufficient service, etc., or is abated, or the action is otherwise defeated for any matter of form, the plaintiff may commence a new action within six months after the abatement or determination of the original suit. As originally enacted as section 11, c. 62, Laws 1821, it provided that any action which should be actually declared on, and in which the writ purchased therefor should fall of a sufficient service, etc., or when such writ should be abated, or the action avoided by demurrer or otherwise, for informality of proceedings, the plaintiff might commence another action upon the same demand and thereby save the limitation thereof. Section 8 of that chapter provided that any action of the case or debt, etc., which should be actually declared upon in a proper writ, returnable according to law within six years after the cause accrued, should be deemed and taken to be duly commenced within the meaning of that act. Held, that chapter 83, § 94, does not apply to a case where an action was dismissed because the writ was made returnable at a term other than the first term after its issuance, contrary to law, since the word "action," as used in section 11, had the same meaning as in section 8, where it was defined as one declared upon in a proper writ returnable according to law, which meaning has not been changed by any subsequent provision; and while the words "proper writ" did not mean one that could not be abated or defeated for any matter of form, but merely meant one adapted to the cause of action, the words "returnable according to law" were definite and explicit and not subject to judicial construction, and hence the word "writ," as used in section 94, means a writ returnable according to law. Densmore v. Hall, 84 Atl. 983, 984, 109 Me. 438.

Execution

Where judgment is entered on a warrant of attorney accompanying a bond and mortgage after the mortgagor has parted with the title to the real estate, a writ of execution thereon is not a writ within Act April 23, 1903, providing that the plaintiff in any writ to charge particular land with the payment of a particular debt running with the land shall file with his praecipe an affidavit setting forth who are the real owners of the land charged, and the affidavit is not required in such case. Keene Home v. Startzell, 83 Atl. 584, 585, 235 Pa. 110.

Information

An information is not a "writ" or "process." It is an accusation, upon which writs and processes issue. Caples v. State, 104 Pac. 493, 497, 3 Okl. Cr. 72, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1033 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7531).

Notice of appeal

A notice of appeal is not a "writ," within Rev. Codes 1905, § 6738, defining "process" as a writ or summons issued in a judicial proceeding and need not be served in the manner in which process is required to be served. Gooler v. Eidness, 121 N. W. 83, 85, 18 N. D. 338.

WRIT OF AD QUOD DAMNUM

See Ad Quod Damnum.

WRIT OF ASSISTANCE

The "writ of assistance" is a process of a court of equity, and not of a court of law. Kirkendall v. Weatherley, 109 N. W. 757, 759, 77 Neb. 421, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 515.

A "writ of assistance" is a process issued by a court of equity to enforce its decree; the scope of the writ being coextensive with the court's jurisdiction to hear and determine the rights of the parties. Fay v. Stubenrauch, 83 Pac. 82, 84, 2 Cal. App. 88.

"A 'writ of assistance' is the ordinary process used by a court of chancery to put a party, receiver, sequestrator, or other person into possession of property when he is entitled thereto, either upon a decree or upon an interlocutory order." Escrutt v. Michaelson, 106 N. W. 1016, 1017, 73 Neb. 634, 10 Ann. Cas. 1039.

The "writ of assistance" is a writ in aid of a decree of a court of equity issuable only when the right is clear, and it runs in aid of a mortgage foreclosure decree against one in privity with the mortgagor, but it does not run against one asserting an independent title. State ex rel. Biddle v. Superior Court of King County, 115 Pac. 307, 308, 63 Wash. 312, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1119.

Possessory writ

A "writ of assistance" is the ordinary process used by a court of chancery to put a party into possession of property, when he is entitled thereto, either upon a decree or an interlocutory order. Long v. Morris (Ala.) 58 South. 274, 275.

WRIT OF ERROR

A "writ of error" is an original writ, and in England issues out of the Court of Chancery and runs in the name of the king. It is in the nature as well of a certiorari to remove a record from an inferior into a superior court as of a commission to the judges of the superior court to examine the record and to affirm or reverse it according to law. Fugitt v. State, 37 South. 534, 555, 85 Miss. 94, 107 Am. St. Rep. 268, 3 Ann. Cas. 326.

Appeal distinguished

See Appeal.

Exceptions distinguished

"Exceptions" and "error" are inherently proceedings of different character. On exceptions, various specific rulings, whether interlocutory or final, whether brought up immediately or only after final judgment, are made direct and independent subjects for review. Only so much of the record is brought up as is necessary for passing upon the specific exceptions. The decision usually is that the exceptions be sustained or overruled and that such further proceedings be had as the rulings on the exceptions call for. On error the final judgment alone is brought up, and specific rulings, whether excepted to or not, are considered only incidentally in passing upon the correctness of the final judgment. The entire record is brought up, and the judgment of the appellate court is such as the facts and law warrant, as shown by the entire case. Cotton v. Hawaii, 29 Sup. Ct. 85, 89, 211 U. S. 162, 53 L. Ed. 131 (citing Territory v. Cotton Bros., 17 Hawaii, 379).

As a new suit

A "writ of error" is a new action. Kelme v. Nine, 97 S. W. 635, 636, 121 Mo. App. 718 (citing Macklin v. Allenberg, 100 Mo. 343, 13 S. W. 350).

A "writ of error" is the beginning of a new action in the appellate tribunal. State ex rel. City of Duluth v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 109 N. W. 238, 239, 99 Minn. 280.

The suing out of a "writ of error" is the commencement of a new suit. Ohio-Colorado Min. & Mill. Co. v. Elder, 99 Pac. 42, 43, 47 Colo. 63 (citing Wise v. Brocker, 1 Colo. 550; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Graham, 1 Colo. 182; Talpey v. Doane, 2 Colo. 298; Fille v. Cody, 3 Colo. 221; Cheever v. Minton, 12 Colo. 557, 21 Pac. 710, 13 Am. St. Rep. 258; Stout v. Gully, 22 Pac. 954, 13 Colo. 604).

A "writ of error" is a suit of common-law origin, and it removes nothing for retrial but the law. It is a new suit, and not a continuation of the suit the law of which is sought to be reviewed. Wingfield v. Neall, 54 S. E. 47, 50, 60 W. Va. 106, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 443, 116 Am. St. Rep. 882, 9 Ann. Cas. 982.

A "writ of error" is an independent action, and, when not served and returned within the prescribed period before the return day, it must fail, and the court must abate it. Wakefield v. Chevalier, 82 Atl. 973, 974, 85 Conn. 374.

A "writ of error" is a new suit prosecuted in the appellate court by a plaintiff in error against a defendant in error, and the appellate court obtains jurisdiction over the person of the latter, either by his voluntary appearance or the service of appropriate summons. Rudolph v. Rudolph, 114 Pac. 977, 50 Colo. 243.

A "writ of error" has been called an original writ, because it issued out of a reviewing court and was directed to the trial court; but it acts upon the record rather than upon the parties, removing the record into the supervising tribunal. The Supreme Court declares it to be "rather a continuation of the original litigation than the commencement of a new action." Bristol v. United States, 129 Fed. 87, 89, 63 C. C. A. 529.

While for some purposes a "writ of error" is a new suit, it is ordinarily a continuation of a suit already begun. It is like a new suit, in that it can be prosecuted only upon notice to the opposite party, but that notice may be either personal or constructive. On the other hand, the writ will not lie unless there has been an original action, and it is but a suit on the record in the original cause. Tipton v. Tipton, 104 S. W. 237, 240, 118 Tenn. 691 (quoting and adopting definitions in Fitzsimmons v. Johnson, 17 S. W. 102, 90 Tenn. 426; Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. [19 U. S.] 410, 5 L. Ed. 257; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 734, 24 L. Ed. 565; Shannon's Code, §§ 4569, 4575).

"A 'writ of error at common law,' being a command from a superior to an inferior court of record, commanding the inferior court, in some cases itself to examine the record, in others to send it to the superior court to be examined, that some alleged error might be corrected, was the commencement of a new action, and hence the application for the writ and the writ itself had to point out clearly, not only the cause in which the error lay which was sought to be corrected, but the parties thereto, that they might be summoned to appear in the reviewing court. But the 'statutory writ of error or appeal,' which is sued out as a matter of right in the court rendering the judgment on which the error is predicated, is in no sense the commencement of a new proceeding or action, but is a mere continuation of the pending proceeding or action, being its transfer from a lower to a higher court for further proceedings." Philadelphia Mortgage & Trust Co. v. Palmer, 73 Pac. 501, 502, 32 Wash. 455.

WRIT OF ERROR CORAM NOBIS

The function of a "writ of error coram nobis" is to "vacate a judgment in the court where it was rendered, by bringing some fact to the knowledge of that court which was not previously known, and which, if known, would have prevented the rendition of the judgment." On such a writ only such errors of fact can be assigned as are consistent with the record before the court in which the case was tried. Hadley v. Bernero, 78 S. W. 64, 67, 103 Mo. App. 549.

A "writ of error coram nobis" was a common-law remedy to review a judgment by the same court in which the record lies, for error of fact as distinguished from errors of law, and was proper at common law where the court had assumed the existence of a material fact which did not exist, and the absence of which deprived the court of power to attain a valid result, but would not lie for errors arising on facts submitted to a jury, referee, or to the court as a trier of fact, nor for the purpose of correcting errors of law. Cross v. Gould, 110 S. W. 672, 676, 131 Mo. App. 585.

While a "writ of error coram nobis" will lie to correct a judgment for an error in fact in the proceedings of a court of record it will not lie to enable a court to review and revise its opinion. Such writ lies only to correct an error of fact not appearing upon the face of the record, and does not authorize any court to recall its adjudications after lapse of the term. State v. Stanley, 125 S. W. 475, 476, 225 Mo. 525.

A motion to vacate a judgment because entered after the death of the party against whom it was rendered and supported by evidence dehors the record takes the place of the common-law "writ of error coram nobis," so that, where death did not appear of record but had to be shown by evidence, the writ of error coram nobis was the common-law remedy. State ex rel. Potter v. Riley, 118 S. W. 647, 651, 219 Mo. 667.

The "writ of error coram nobis" lies in the same court which rendered the judgment and brings its own judgment before it for review on account of an error affecting the validity and regularity of the proceedings, and which was not brought in issue, but it does not lie to correct matters that appear of record, nor to correct the recitations of the court's own records with the records before it, showing where an entry was incorrect. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2931 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1689), providing that no final judgment in cases for divorce shall be reversed or modified by any appellate court by appeal or writ of error unless the appeal was granted during the term at which the judgment was rendered, or unless the writ of error was issued within 60 days after judgment, the judgment as made in an action for divorce, though not properly spread on the record, cannot be appealed from except during the term, and cannot be touched by writ of error after the lapse of 60 days, and a writ of error coram nobis applied for two years after judgment will be denied, since it will not give any relief because of lapse of time. Hartman v. Hartman, 133 S. W. 669, 670, 154 Mo. App. 243.

Writ of error coram vobis distinguished

When the object of the writ is to correct an error of fact in the same court that rendered a judgment, it is called a "writ of error coram nobis," if it be in the King's Bench, and a "writ of error coram vobis" if it be in the Common Pleas. These writs differ from a writ of error in two particulars: (1) They contain no certiorari clause, for there is no record to be certified; and (2) they have no return day, as they are in the nature of a commission only to the court to correct error. They lie for errors of fact, and for errors in the process, or through the default of the clerks, but do not lie when the error is in the judgment of the court itself, and not in the process. The writ is called a "writ of error coram nobis" in the King's Bench, because the record and proceedings are stated in the writ, but remain "before us" (coram nobis)—that is in the Court of King's Bench—where the king by a fiction of law is supposed to preside in person. In the Common Pleas, where the king is not supposed to preside, the writ is called a "writ of error coram vobis," because the record and proceedings are stated in the writ to remain "before you" (coram vobis)—that is, the king's justices. The judgment for plaintiff for an error of fact on a writ coram nobis or coram vobis is that the judgment be revoked, while on a writ of error it is that the judgment be reversed. Fugitt v.

State, 37 South. 554, 555, 85 Miss. 94, 107 Am. St. Rep. 268, 3 Ann. Cas. 326.

WRIT OF ERROR CORAM VOBIS

Writ of error coram nobis distinguished, see Writ of Error Coram Nobis.

"The English 'writ of error coram vobis' was used to correct mistakes of fact or errors in process, which can be brought to the attention of the court in which they were committed by means of this writ, but cannot be relied upon where the error is in the judgment itself, or where the question relates to the power of the court, and not to the mode of procedure." United States v. One Trunk Containing Fourteen Pieces of Embroidery, 155 Fed. 651, 652 (citing Rolle, Abr. p. 749, and Bronson v. Schulten, 104 U. S. 410, 26 L. Ed. 797, and cases therein cited).

WRIT OF ESTREPEMENT

The common-law "writ of estrepement" was designed to prevent waste after judgment obtained in a real action, and before possession delivered. The scope of the writ was later enlarged by statute to embrace cases of waste pending suit, and as an auxiliary to cases in which no recovery of land was sought, as actions of waste, trespass, etc. Brigham v. Overstreet, 128 Ga. 447, 57 S. E. 484, 488, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 452, 11 Ann. Cas. 75 (citing 3 Bl. Comm. 225, 227, 228; Duvall v. Waters [Md.] 1 Bland, 569, 18 Am. Dec. 350; Jacob, Law Dict.).

WRIT OF INQUIRY

"A 'writ of inquiry' is issued in no cases except in actions sounding in damages, and only for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of the plaintiff's damages. A 'writ of inquiry' in common-law practice is defined in Black's Law Dictionary to be a writ 'which issues after the plaintiff in an action has obtained a judgment by default on an unliquidated claim, directing the sheriff, with the aid of a jury, to inquire into the amount of the plaintiff's demand and assess his damages.' Bouvier, in his Law Dictionary, defines a 'writ of inquiry' as one 'sued out by a plaintiff in a case where the defendant has let the proceedings go by default, and an interlocutory judgment has been given for damages generally, where the damages do not admit of calculation. It issues to the sheriff of the county in which the venue is laid, and commands him to inquire, by a jury of 12 men, concerning the amount of damages.' The same definition, in very much the same language, of a 'writ of inquiry,' is given in the law dictionaries of Rapalje & Lawrence, Abbott, Anderson, and Burrill. 'If the action sounds in damages (according to the technical phrase)—that is, be brought, not for specific recovery of land, goods, or sums of money (as is the case in real or mixed actions, or the personal actions of debt and detinue), but for damages only, as in covenant, trespass, etc.—and if the issue be an issue in law, or any issue in fact not tried by jury, then the judgment is only that the plaintiff ought to recover his damages, without specifying their amount, for, as there has been no trial by jury in the case, the amount of damages is not yet ascertained. The judgment is then said to be interlocutory. On such interlocutory judgment the court does not, in general, itself undertake the office of assessing the damages, but issues a 'writ of inquiry,' directed to the sheriff of the county where the facts are alleged by the pleadings to have occurred, commanding him to inquire into the amount of damages sustained by the oath of 12 good and lawful men of his county, and to return such inquisition, when made, to the court. Upon the return of the inquisition the plaintiff is entitled to another judgment, viz., that he recover the amount of the damages so assessed; and this is called 'final judgment.' Stephen on Pleading, 105. Of course, the damages are assessed under the Code by the jury in the presence of and under the direction of the judge." Junge v. McKnight, 49 S. E. 474, 476, 137 N. C. 285 (citing Witt v. Long, 93 N. C. 388).

WRIT OF PERAMBULATION

Though under the common law the "writ of perambulation" issues on consent of both parties, when they are in doubt as to the bounds of their respective estates, and when there is no dispute as to the title, nor the right to occupy the adjoining tenements, under Revisal 1905, §§ 325, 326 (Acts 1893, p. 44, c. 22), either owner where there is a disputed boundary line may have the land processioned without the other's consent and even when the question of title may become incidentally involved. Green v. Williams, 56 S. E. 549, 550, 144 N. C. 60.

WRIT OF POSSESSION

A "writ of possession" is now generally employed to designate any writ by virtue of which the sheriff is commanded to place a person in possession of real or personal property, and there may be a fi. fa. clause added thereto, commanding the sheriff to levy the damages awarded by the judgment. Decuir v. Loeb, 42 South. 955, 956, 118 La. 332 (citing 2 Freem. Ex'ns [2d Ed.] § 43).

WRIT OF REVIEW

The scope of the "writ of review" is to review the determination of the lower tribunal when it has exceeded its jurisdiction or exercised the same erroneously in making such determination, and original relief cannot be secured thereby. Elmore v. Tillamook County, 105 Pac. 900, 901, 55 Or. 224.

A "writ of review" brings up the record of the tribunal board, or body whose acts are to be examined, to review the law applicable to the case, instead of to examine the facts, except in so far as an examination of the facts is necessary in the determination of the single question of jurisdiction. Lansdon v. State Board of Canvassers, 111 Pac. 133, 18 Idaho, 596.

A "writ of review" will lie only when the inferior court or tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction or exercised its functions illegally or contrary to the course of procedure applicable to the matter before it. It cannot be used as a substitute for an appeal, nor can the mere error of an inferior court, officer, or tribunal, either of fact or of law, in the exercise of rightful jurisdiction, be reviewed or considered in such a proceeding. Farrow v. Nevin, 75 Pac. 711, 713, 44 Or. 496.

Under the express terms of Rev. St. § 4968, review upon a "writ of review" cannot extend beyond a determination whether the inferior tribunal, board, or officer has regularly pursued the authority given such tribunal, etc. The Supreme Court cannot inquire into the constitutionality of a revenue law upon a writ of review on the application of a private citizen in a matter involving his private rights. Under a writ of review, errors and mistakes of judgment of a board as to the value of property that it is authorized to assess cannot be reviewed; neither can such writ be invoked to review the facts upon which the inferior tribunal, board, or officer acted, except to ascertain the fact of jurisdiction. The provisions of such writ are limited to a review of questions of law invoked in the matter, and the court must confine its inquiry to the question as to whether or not the action complained of was beyond the jurisdiction conferred on the tribunal, board, or officer. On such writ the Supreme Court cannot review the question of fact as to whether the board in its judgment or opinion has valued the railway, telephone, and telegraph lines at less than their cash value. McConnell v. State Board of Equalization, 83 Pac. 494, 496, 497, 11 Idaho, 652.

Certiorari

"In this state a writ of certiorari is known as a 'writ of review.'" Hager v. Knapp, 78 Pac. 671, 673, 45 Or. 512 (citing B. & C. Comp. § 594).

A "writ of review" is substantially the common-law remedy by certiorari. Gue v. City of Eugene, 100 Pac. 254, 255, 53 Or. 282.

The "writ of review" bears the same relation to our system of civil procedure that the writ of certiorari sustained to the common law, the name only of the latter having been changed by statute, and, like the ancient mode of procedure, the modern writ merely brings up the record. McAnish v. Grant, 74 Pac. 396, 397, 44 Or. 57.

The statutory "writ of review" is substantially the same as the common-law writ of certiorari, and will lie when an inferior court or tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction, or exercised its judicial functions illegally or contrary to the course of procedure applicable to the matters before it. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Umatilla County, 81 Pac. 352, 355, 47 Or. 198.

The "writ of review," by B. & C. Comp. § 594, made substantially the same as the common-law writ of certiorari, is a special proceeding; and under section 597 the only inquiry proper upon a return to the writ is a question of law, in the examination of which the parties are not entitled to a jury trial, so that the existence of a remedy by court of review does not necessarily exclude a remedy in equity. Hall v. Dunn, 97 Pac. 811, 813, 52 Or. 475, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 193.

The "writ of review" granted by a court of superior authority or by a judge thereof on petition, which, as provided by B. & C. Comp. § 596, describes with certainty the judicial functions claimed to have been exercised to the substantial injury of plaintiff's right, and which sets forth the errors alleged to have been committed, is substantially the common-law remedy of certiorari. Curran v. State, 99 Pac. 420, 421, 53 Or. 154.

The "writ of review" is substantially the common-law certiorari, but under the express provisions of B. & C. Comp. 1901, §§ 595, 603, it lies only to review a determination of the proceeding, and not from an interlocutory order, nor to remove a cause for hearing in another court; while at common law certiorari was used both as a writ of review after final judgment, and also for removing the entire cause at any stage for hearing and determination in the upper court. Holmes v. Cole, 94 Pac. 964, 965, 51 Or. 483.

A requirement that a poll clerk shall "write his name" on the backs of ballots is equivalent to a requirement that his name shall be there written in his own handwriting. Kirkpatrick v. Board of Canvassers, 44 S. E. 465, 469, 53 W. Va. 275.

Ditto marks

Under Rev. St. 1908, § 4096, requiring that the date of signing the petition for a local option election and the residence address of the signer shall be written opposite his name, the use of ditto marks is permissible, for "writing" consists of any symbols generally used to transmit ideas, and as no particular style is required, ditto marks, which are to be read as a repetition of the line above, and are as much a part of the English language as punctuation marks, may be used. Peoplé ex rel. Arfman v. Newell, 113 Pac. 643, 646, 49 Colo. 349 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2141).

Marks

Crosses and marks made as signatures to documents were "writings," within the meaning of the statutes relating to comparison of writings by experts. The statutes do not purport and were not intended to change the meaning of the word "writings." Ausmus v. People, 107 Pac. 204, 212, 47 Colo. 167, 19 Ann. Cas. 491 (citing Lawson, Ex. Ev. p. 296).

Pasters

Under Rev. Laws 1905, § 275, subsec. 3, providing that a voter may write other names in the blank spaces under the printed names of candidates, authorizes the use of pasters for that purpose; the words "write" and "written," as used therein, including any mode of representing words or letters, as provided by Rev. Laws 1905, § 5514, subsec. 24. Snortum v. Homme, 119 N. W. 59, 106 Minn. 464.

Printing and typewriting

The word "signature" being defined as "the act of putting down a man's name at the end of an instrument to attest its validity" (Bouvier's Law Dict. tit. "Signature"), and "writing" as "words traced with a pen, or stamped, printed, engraved, or made legible by any other device" (Anderson's Law Dict. tit. "Writing"), it was held that, an attorney in fact being authorized to sign a remonstrance against the issue of a liquor license, it was immaterial that he did so by typewriter. Ardery v. Smith, 73 N. E. 840, 841, 35 Ind. App. 94 (citing Hamilton v. State, 2 N. E. 299, 103 Ind. 96, 53 Am. Rep. 491).

Rev. St. 1892, § 5916, provides that every last will and testament shall be in "writing," and may be handwritten or typewritten. Held, that the word "writing," in such section, included printing. Sears v. Sears, 82 N. E. 1067, 1069, 77 Ohio St. 104, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 353, 11 Ann. Cas. 1008.

Under Code 1907, § 6845, making it an offense for a person to enter into any contract in writing for services with fraudulent intent, etc., the word "writing" includes printing. Frazier v. State, 49 South. 245, 159 Ala. 1.

"The great increase in the use of printing for all forms of instruments, such as deeds, bonds, tickets, tokens for the payment of goods, etc., have seemed to demand that where, either by the common law or by statute such instruments are required to be in writing, the term 'writing' should be held to include printing as well as script." Benson v. McMahon, 8 Sup. Ct. 1240, 127 U. S. 457, 32 L. Ed. 234.

Typewriting has largely taken the place of handwriting, and may be considered as handwriting, and the service of a typewritten notice under the Employers' Liability Act is the service of a notice in "writing." Hunt v. Dexter Sulphite Pulp & Paper Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 279, 283, 100 App. Div. 119.

Shorthand

An oral charge of the court, taken down by the stenographer in the employ of both parties to report the proceedings in the cause, is in "writing," within Laws 1903, p. 120, c. 81, § 1, subd. 4, providing that on request of either party the charge must be in writing, and that a stenographic report thereof shall be considered a charge in writing. Sturgeon v. Tacoma Eastern R. Co., 98 Pac. 87, 51 Wash. 124.

A certificate in shorthand attached to the shorthand report of a trial, signed by the judge and reporter, and filed with the clerk, is not a certificate, within Code, §§ 3675, 3749, 3752, 3753, requiring the report of trial to be certified by the judge and reporter, etc.; shorthand characters not being "writing." Howerton v. Augustine, 132 N. W. 814, 815, 153 Iowa, 17.

A stenographer employed by both parties to report a trial is virtually under the direction of the court, and hence, the court's charge having been reported by such stenographer, the same was in "writing," within Laws 1903, p. 120, c. 81, § 1, subd. 4, providing that on request of either party the charge must be in writing, but that a stenographic report thereof shall be considered a charge in writing. Collins v. Huffman, 93 Pac. 220, 223, 48 Wash. 184.

The notes of a stenographer were not "writing," within the meaning of a statute providing that "in equitable actions, wherein issues of fact are joined, all the evidence offered in the trial shall be taken down in writing, or the court may order the evidence, or any part thereof, to be taken in the form of depositions, etc." Richardson v. Fitzgerald, 109 N. W. 866, 867, 132 Iowa, 253 (citing Smith v. Wells, 74 N. W. 914, 105 Iowa, 140; Dwyer v. Rock, 87 N. W. 495, 115 Iowa, 722).

WRITING—WRITINGS

See Comparison of Writings.

"The word 'writing,' when not used in connection with analogous words of more special meaning, is an extensive term, and may be construed to denote a letter from one person to another. But such is not its ordinary and usual acceptation. Neither in legislative enactments nor in common intercourse are the two terms 'letter' and 'writing' equivalent expressions. When in ordinary intercourse men speak of mailing a 'letter' or receiving by mail a 'letter,' they do not say mail a 'writing' or receive by mail a 'writing.' In law the term 'writing' is much more frequently used to denote legal instruments, such as deeds, agreements, memoranda, bonds and notes, etc. In the statute of frauds the word occurs in that sense in nearly every section. And in the many discussions to which this statute has given rise, these instruments are referred to as 'the writing' or 'some writing.' But in its most frequent and most familiar sense the term 'writing' is applied to books, pamphlets and the literary and scientific productions of authors. As for instance in that clause in the United States Constitution which provides that Congress shall have power 'to promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries.'" U. S. v. Chase, 135 U. S. 255, 258, 10 Sup. Ct. 756, 34 L. Ed. 117.

A memorandum made by the owner of real estate which shows the price of the property, but which does not set forth any agreement or terms of any agreement, is not a sufficient writing, within Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, providing that an agreement employing an agent to sell real estate for compensation must be in "writing." Beaver v. Continental Building & Loan Ass'n, 116 Pac. 1105, 1106, 15 Cal. App. 190.

The word "writing," as used in Code 1887, § 2472, which protects a subsequent purchaser under a contract not required to be recorded to the extent of the payments made when he receives notice of the prior unrecorded deed or writing, etc., refers to contracts in writing by which a party acquires some interest, not to judgments by which a party acquires a mere lien upon land. Fulkerson's Adm'x v. Taylor, 46 S. E. 309, 311, 102 Va. 314.

An indorsement on a note is within the letter and spirit of Rev. St. 1899, § 2019 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1344), providing that every instrument partly printed and partly written, or wholly printed with a written signature thereto, and every signature of an individual, firm, or corporate body, and every writing purporting to be such signature, shall be deemed a "writing," within the meaning of the act. State v. Carragin, 109 S. W. 553, 559, 210 Mo. 351, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 561.

In copyright law

The word "writings," with reference to protection by copyright, is not limited to the actual script of the author, but includes his printed books, and all forms of writing, printing, engraving, etching, etc., by which the ideas in his mind are given visible expression. A photograph which is not only a light-written picture of some object, but also an expression of an idea, or thought, or conception of the one who takes it, is a "writing" within the constitutional sense, and a proper subject of copyright. American Mutoscope & Biograph Co. v. Edison Mfg. Co., 137 Fed. 262, 265.

Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, gives Congress power to promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for a limited time to authors and inventors an exclusive right to their "writings" and discoveries. Held, that the word "writings" includes maps, charts, engravings, etchings, prints, paintings, drawings, cromos, statues, models, designs, photographs, and the negatives thereof, dramatizations of copyrighted works, and may also be extended to moving pictures, tending to reproduce an artist's conception of an author's situation as described in words. Harper & Bros. v. Kalem Co., 169 Fed. 61, 64, 94 C. C. A. 429.

The meaning of the word "writings," as employed in the constitutional provision giving authors the benefit of what they have written, has been expressly defined to include all forms of writing, printing, engraving, etching, etc., by which the ideas in the mind of the author are given visible expression. The restricted definition of the word "writings" does not, it is thought, permit the inclusion in section 4952 of the Revised Statutes of a musical conception, or the inclusion of collated musical sounds or expressions of a musical composition. The words of the statute have reference to the tangible object that appeals to the sense of sight, and that which is susceptible of being reproduced by printing, copying, publishing, etc. The word "writings" refers to musical compositions as employed in Rev. St. U. S. § 4952, is restricted to a writing, as that word is defined, and would not include a composition of music perforated for reproduction by mechanism. White-Smith Music Pub. Co. v. Apollo Co., 139 Fed. 430, 431.

In criminal law

The word "writing," as used in Pen. Code 1910, § 249, making it an offense for any person, by color of any counterfeit writing, to obtain from any person money or other valuable things, includes a "check." Saffold v. State, 75 S. E. 338, 339, 11 Ga. App. 329.

An indictment for forgery of a writing "or" paper did not describe the instrument in the alternative, since the words "writing" and "paper" when connected disjunctively clearly amount to the same thing, a written instrument. Blais v. State, 126 S. W. 1064, 1065, 94 Ark. 327.

In postal laws

The term "writing," in the federal statute prohibiting the mailing of obscene writings, includes a letter inclosed in a sealed envelope. United States v. Gaylord, 17 Fed. 438, 441.

WRITING OBLIGATORY

The words "writing obligatory" imply a written contract under seal. Smith v. Woman's Medical College of Baltimore City, 72 Atl. 1107, 1108, 110 Md. 441; Kidd v. Beckley, 60 S. E. 1089, 1090, 64 W. Va. 80 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7543).

Where a subscription paper is headed with merely the title, character, authorship, and price of a book, followed by the word "subscribers," a name written under "subscribers" clearly imports a promise to take a copy of the book and pay the price indicated, and constitutes a "writing obligatory," within the meaning of Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2354, defining forgery. State v. Hazzard, 80 N. E. 149, 168 Ind. 163.

WRITTEN ACCEPTANCE OF RENEWAL OF LEASE

Under a lease providing for a renewal on the same terms, if the lessees signified acceptance in writing, where a member of the lessee firm forwarded to the lessor by registered mail a letter inclosed in one of the firm's business envelopes, with the firm name and address in the corner, reciting a description of the lease, and stating that H. G. & Co., as the lessee firm, "elects to avail itself of the renewal privilege and requests the continuance of the lease for a new term," such notice was sufficient, though no signature was subscribed thereto. Wiener v. H. Graff & Co., 95 Pac. 167, 170, 7 Cal. App. 580.

WRITTEN BALLOTS

Rev. Laws, c. 11, § 270, and St. 1905, p. 234, c. 313, § 2, providing for the use of voting machines at elections, whereby the voter trusts to the accuracy of the machine, whose workings he cannot see, is unconstitutional, under Const. pt. 2, art. 3, c. 1, § 3, providing that representatives shall be chosen by "written votes"; the method of voting by machine being entirely unlike the writing of a name of chosen candidates upon a piece of paper, and its deposit in a box, to be afterwards taken out and counted. Nichols v. Minton, 82 N. E. 50, 196 Mass. 410, 124 Am. St. Rep. 568, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 280.

WRITTEN CHARGE OR INSTRUCTION

A submission of special issues to the jury, as authorized by Rev. St. 1893, arts. 1331-1333, constitutes a "written charge," provided for by article 1316, as amended by Acts 1903, c. 39. Adams v. Burrell (Tex.) 127 S. W. 581, 584.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2136, subd. 5, accused, on requesting the court to charge in writing, has the absolute right to written instructions. The act of the court reporter in taking down the oral instructions does not convert them into "written instructions"; but where accused consented, on the jury coming in for further instructions, to the reading by the reporter of the oral instructions given, he waived his right to written instructions. Le-seuer v. State, 95 N. E. 239, 241, 176 Ind. 448.

WRITTEN CONSENT

A wife's signature as a witness to a contract for the sale of her husband's real estate, she being in no way referred to in the contract as a party, is not a "written consent" to the sale, within Rev. Laws 1905, § 3648, giving a wife one-third interest in all real estate owned by her husband, to the sale of which she has not consented in writing. Stromme v. Rleck, 119 N. W. 948, 950, 107 Minn. 177, 131 Am. St. Rep. 452.

WRITTEN CONSTITUTION

"A 'written constitution' is, in every instance, a limitation upon the powers of government in the hands of agents. For there never was a written republican constitution which delegated to functionaries all the latent powers which lie dormant in every nation, and are boundless in extent and incapable of definition. State v. Braxton County Court, 55 S. E. 382, 384, 60 W. Va. 339.

A "written constitution," while in every instance a limitation upon the powers of government in the hands of its agents, is also a delegation and grant of power, and a limitation of the exercise of the power granted. Ex parte Anderson, 81 S. W. 973, 981, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 372.

"A 'written constitution' is the fundamental expression of the sovereign will. Under our form of government, that sovereign will resides in the people. A written constitution is not only the direct and basic expression of the sovereign will, but it is the absolute rule of action and decision for all departments and offices of government in respect to all matters covered by it, and must control as it is written until it shall be changed by the authority that established it.

* * * The logical corollary of the proposition that the Constitution is the supreme law of the land is that the power to legislate is a purely delegated one, derived from the Constitution and controlled by it." Wright v. Hart, 75 N. E. 404, 405, 182 N. Y. 330, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 338, 3 Ann. Cas. 263.

WRITTEN CONTRACT OR AGREEMENT

Partly written contract as parol contract, see Parol Contract.

A "written contract" has been defined as "one which in all its terms is in writing." Bishop on Cont. (Enlarged Ed.) § 163. The signature of both parties is not always a necessary requisite to a written contract. National Cash Register Co. v. Lesko, 58 Atl. 967, 968, 77 Conn. 276.

Where a written instrument purports to set forth the mutual obligations of a contract, and is unilateral in form and signed by one party only, who delivers it to the other party, who accepts it as the contract, the instrument is a "written contract." McDermott v. Mahoney, 115 N. W. 32, 35, 139 Iowa, 292 (citing Attix v. Pelan, 5 Iowa, 336; Dows v. Morse, 17 N. W. 495, 62 Iowa, 231; Sellers v. Greer, 50 N. E. 246, 172 Ill. 549, 40 L. R. A. 589; Vogel v. Pekoc, 42 N. E. 386, 157 Ill. 339, 30 L. R. A. 491; Horn v. Hansen, 57 N. W. 315, 56 Minn. 43, 22 L. R. A. 617; Bigler v. Baker, 58 N. W. 1026, 40 Neb. 325, 24 L. R. A. 255; Graves v. Smedes' Adm'r [Ky.] 7 Dana, 344; Woodlock v. Meyerstein, 5 Mo. App. 591).

An ordinance offering to let the right to construct and operate a telephone system in a city to the one offering therefor at a public bidding the greatest percentage of its gross earnings and a bond given by the successful bidder accepting the provisions of the ordinance together constitute a contract "in writing," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1899, § 6759, requiring contracts with cities and counties to be in writing. City of California v. Bunceton Telephone Co., 87 S. W. 604, 605, 112 Mo. App. 722.

Where a customer verbally engaged a stock dealer to buy or sell stocks, and after the purchase or sale had been made, received from him a ticket setting forth the transaction, but unsigned by the parties, the ticket was not a "written agreement," the effect of which could not be varied by extrinsic evidence. Picard v. Beers, 81 N. E. 246, 248, 195 Mass. 419.

Receipts are not within the rule prohibiting oral evidence to vary or contradict a "written agreement." Beall v. Hudson County Water Co., 185 Fed. 179, 181.

To be a "written contract," within the statute of frauds, the whole contract of insurance must be in writing, and must be signed by the insurer. Delaware Ins. Co. v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co., 55 S. E. 330, 334, 126 Ga. 380, 7 Ann. Cas. 1134.

A writing reading: "100 cases eggs 3,000—19c. * * * He to pay interest at 6 per cent. on amount exceeding deposits of $1 per case"—is nothing more than a mere "bill of parcels," with a statement of interest to be charged, and not a "contract in writing"; and hence parol evidence as to what the terms of the contract were was admissible. North Packing & Provision Co. v. Lynch, 81 N. E. 891, 892, 196 Mass. 204.

A shipping order signed by the shipper and accepted by the defendant becomes a "contract in writing" between the parties as fully and completely as if the carrier had signified its acceptance in writing. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Chicago Electric Vehicle Co., 124 Ill. App. 158, 160.

Though an offer of a reward by publication for the "discovery" of a criminal becomes a valid contract between the offerer and those who accept it by performance upon the discovery required, it does not become a "contract in writing." Cunningham v. Fiske, 83 Pac. 789, 13 N. M. 331.

A subscription for shares of stock in a corporation is a "contract in writing." Collins v. Southern Brick Co., 123 S. W. 652, 653, 92 Ark. 504, 135 Am. St. Rep. 197, 19 Ann. Cas. 882 (quoting and adopting 1 Morawetz, Corp. § 77).

A contract created by the indorsement and delivery of a negotiable promissory note is a "contract in writing," and is not open to contradiction or susceptible of annulment by a separate contemporaneous agreement, although also in writing, unless at least the terms of the latter plainly disclose that the parties so intended. Crilly v. Gallice, 148 Fed. 835, 836, 78 C. C. A. 525 (citing Martin v. Cole, 104 U. S. 30, 26 L. Ed. 647).

WRITTEN DEMAND

Code 1907, § 5747, provides that, on foreclosure, possession of the land must be delivered to the purchaser, within 10 days after sale, by the debtor, if in his possession, or by any one holding under him by privity of title, if in his possession, on written demand of the purchaser or his vendee. Held, that a "written demand" required by such section must be served on the debtor to bar his right to redeem, and that a mere reading to him of an alleged written demand was insufficient. Hutchison v. Flowers, 57 South. 719, 720, 175 Ala. 651.

WRITTEN EVIDENCE

Stenographers' notes are "written evidence," within Code, § 4466, providing that, "where the action of the court [for contempt] is founded on evidence given by others, such evidence must be in writing and filed and preserved." Hatlestad v. Hardin County District Court, 114 N. W. 628, 629, 137 Iowa, 146.

WRITTEN INSTRUMENT

Abbott defines "written instrument" as "something reduced to writing as a means of evidence." Bouvier (16th Ed.) 1064, says: "An instrument, in the ordinary accepted sense, is a document or writing." Burrill says: "A writing, as the means of giving formal expression to some act; a writing expressive of some act (and this is the definition adopted by Webster as expressing the legal meaning of the word)." People v. Rouss, 118 N. Y. Supp. 433, 439, 63 Misc. Rep. 135.

Where a note was given for the right to sell a patent right and patented articles, a subsequent written admission by one of the signers that he had received full consideration for the note was not a contract nor a "written instrument," within Civ. Code 1895, § 5201, providing that parol contemporaneous evidence is inadmissible to contradict the terms of a valid written instrument. Crooker v. Hamilton, 59 S. E. 722, 723, 3 Ga. App. 190.

A pledge of notes secured by a trust deed executed by a corporation to a bank as collateral security for a loan to the payee of the notes, not being in writing, was not within Rev. St. Mo. 1909, § 2809, requiring record of any "instrument in writing" by which real estate may be affected. Sturdivant Bank v. Schade, 195 Fed. 188, 195, 115 C. C. A. 140.

The "instrument of writing" on which the claim of the beneficiary under a trust deed for taxes paid on the land against the estate of the mortgagor was founded, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1908, § 7212, requiring the filing in the county court of the "instrument of writing" whereon a claim against an estate is founded, was the covenant of the trust deed, which required the mortgagor to pay all costs of the trust, including money advanced for taxes, and not the tax receipts or the secured notes, so that the covenant in the tax deed must be exhibited in probate court. Gilmour v. First Nat. Bank of Central City, 121 Pac. 767, 768, 21 Colo. App. 301.

Agreement to purchase stock

The obligation of one of several persons uniting in the purchase of corporate stock under a contract stipulating that each of them shall be interested in the proportion that the number of shares subscribed for by him bears to the total number, and that each shall share in the profits and losses in the same proportion, is contractual, and where the stock is purchased in accordance with the contract and within the time specified, his obligation to pay his proportionate share is founded on a "written instrument," within Comp. Laws 1907, § 2875, subd. 2, limiting actions founded on written instruments. McMillan v. Whitley, 113 Pac. 1026, 1028, 38 Utah, 452.

Agreement to sell real estate

An instrument reciting that, in consideration of $500, the maker agreed to sell to a person named or his assigns his real estate described for $225 an acre, and, if said person buys said property, he is to get credit for a certain sum as part of the purchase money, is an "instrument in writing," the subject of forgery, under Pen. Code 1895, § 243, as amended by Acts 1907, p. 57. McLean v. State, 60 S. E. 332, 333, 3 Ga. App. 660.

Book subscription

Where a subscription paper is headed with merely the title, character, authorship, and price of a book, followed by the word "subscribers," a name written under "subscribers" clearly imports a promise to take a copy of the book and pay the price indicated, and constitutes an "instrument in writing," within the meaning of Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2354, defining forgery. State v. Hazard, 80 N. E. 149, 150, 168 Ind. 163.

Indorsement on note

An indorsement on a note is within the letter and spirit of Rev. St. 1899, § 2019 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1344), providing that every instrument partly printed and partly written, or wholly printed with a written signature thereto, and every signature of an individual firm, or corporate body, and every writing purporting to be such signature, shall be deemed a "written instrument" within the meaning of the act. State v. Carragin, 109 S. W. 553, 559, 210 Mo. 351, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 561.

Judgment

A judgment is not a "written instrument," within Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 365, providing that where any pleading is founded on a written instrument, the original, or a copy thereof, must be filed with the pleading. Kelley v. Houts, 66 N. E. 408, 409, 30 Ind. App. 474.

Order of court

An order of the federal court, directing its receiver of a railroad to restore to the railroad its property in his hands on the agreement that the railroad assume all liabilities and obligations of the receiver and save him harmless against the payment of any liabilities incurred by him, is not a "written instrument," within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 368, requiring the original or a copy to be filed with the complaint in an action founded on a written instrument. Vandalla Ry. Co. v. Keys, 91 N. E. 173, 174, 46 Ind. App. 353.

Pay roll

A pay roll signed by one over the words "in full release of all damages sustained March 31, 1906," is an "instrument in writing" within Rev. St. 1899, § 746, providing that, when any pleading is founded on any instrument in writing, its execution shall be adjudged confessed, unless denied by a verified pleading, and section 643 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 662), declaring that, when a pleading is founded on any written instrument, it shall be filed with the pleading, and hence, such instrument having been properly pleaded in the answer, and, plaintiff not having denied its execution under oath, he could not prove that it was a forgery. Rev. St. 1899, § 746, does not apply to instruments signed by both parties. Hahs v. Cape Girardeau & C. R. Co., 126 S. W. 524, 526, 147 Mo. App. 262.

Return to writ of certiorari

Pen. Code, § 566 (Penal Law, § 932), providing that a person who, with intent to defraud, obtains, by false pretenses, a signature to a written instrument, shall be punished as therein prescribed, does not require that money or property shall be affected, or obtained, by such writing; but a return to a writ of certiorari, to review the trial, conviction, and dismissal of a patrolman from the police force, is a "written instrument" within its meaning. People v. Rouss, 118 N. Y. Supp. 433, 437, 63 Misc. Rep. 135.

WRITTEN NOTICE OF APPEARANCE

Under Municipal Court Act (Laws 1902, c. 580) § 332, which allows costs to a prevailing party who appears by attorney and who files a verified pleading or a written notice of appearance, such costs are not allowable to such a party who entered no written appearance by attorney and whose pleadings were oral, as a memorandum containing the attorney's name and address, handed to the judge, but not becoming part of the record of the case was not a filed pleading, nor a "written notice of appearance"; rule 2, subd. "d," of the rules of the Municipal Courts, declaring that the indorsement of the name and address of an attorney on any paper in an action shall be an appearance within the meaning of such section, being merely an interpretation of the term "written notice of appearance," and not dispensing with the filing of such a notice as a prerequisite to the court's jurisdiction. Kaufman v. Cohn, 138 N. Y. Supp. 403, 404, 78 Misc. Rep. 368.

Service on plaintiff of interrogatories, regularly entitled by defendant, though prematurely served, constitute "written notice of his appearance," within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4886, providing that a defendant appears when he answers, demurs, or gives plaintiff written notice of his appearance. State ex rel. Trickel v. Superior Court of Clallam County, 100 Pac. 155, 156, 52 Wash. 13.

WRONG

See Distinguish between Right and Wrong; Legal Wrong; Private Wrong; Public Wrong; Right and Wrong Test. Willful wrong, see Willful—Willfully.

The term "wrong," in the maxim, "Equity will not suffer wrong without a remedy," has a significance which does not reach violations of mere moral rights. Any other wrong is said to involve a corresponding primary legal or equitable right, with an equitable or legal remedy, according to circumstances, for the former, and an equitable remedy for the latter. Harrigan v. Gilchrist, 99 N. W. 909, 933, 121 Wis. 127 (citing Pom. Eq. Jur. 424).

"When it is said in contemplation of the law that there is no wrong without a remedy, it must be noted that the term 'wrong' has a legal significance distinct from 'damage,' and is synonymous with 'injuria,' signifying a legal injury." Thomason v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 55 S. E. 205, 209, 142 N. C. 318.

Every breach of contract may in a qualified sense be considered a "wrong." It is a violation by one party of a right to which the other was entitled, and an allegation that the defendants "wrongfully refused" to deliver securities, as it was otherwise alleged they had agreed to do, is, in legal effect, no more than if the word "wrongfully" had been omitted. Austin v. Rawdon, 44 N. Y. 63, 69.

"'Wrongs' are divisible into two sorts or species: Private wrongs and public wrongs. The former are in infringement or privation of the private or civil rights belonging to individuals, considered as individuals, and are thereupon frequently termed 'civil injuries.' The latter are a breach and violation of public rights and duties, which affect the whole community, considered as a community, and are distinguished by the harsher appellation of 'crimes and misdemeanors.'" Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Territory of Oklahoma, 105 Pac. 677, 679, 25 Okl. 238 (citing Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123); United States v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 156 Fed. 182, 185 (citing Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 228, 36 L. Ed. 1123).

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 7778, 7784, requiring the court to apportion the compensation awarded in condemnation proceedings by municipal corporations, and requiring the court to enter an order that the municipality on paying the award into court, may take possession of the property, a city, in condemnation proceedings, which proceeds in strict accordance with the statute and brings the property to be taken within the jurisdiction of the court and makes all interested therein parties and pays the amount awarded into court, need not see to the application of the amount awarded, and it is not affected by any error of the court in apportioning the award, and one injured by a wrongful apportionment may not sue the city therefor; a "wrong" consisting in a trespass on the right of another or in the omission of a duty imposed by law. Carton v. City of Seattle, 120 Pac. 111, 112, 66 Wash. 447.

WRONG VERDICT

A verdict may technically be said to be a "wrong verdict" as well when it is perfect in form, but not supported by the evidence, as when it is on its face so imperfectly formed or irresponsible to the issues as to be a nullity. In the former case it cannot be assailed by motion in arrest of judgment, but in the latter case it may be. Harris v. State, 43 South. 311, 312, 53 Fla. 37.

WRONGFUL—WRONGFULLY

The term "wrongful" imports the infringement of some right. State v. Van Peit, 49 S. E. 177, 187, 136 N. C. 633, 68 L. R. A. 760, 1 Ann. Cas. 495.

The word "undue," when used to qualify "influence," has the legal meaning of "wrongful." Sears v. Vaughan, 82 N. E. 881, 887, 230 Ill. 572.

Where a jury is instructed that the burden of proof was on plaintiff to show that defendant wrongfully killed the plaintiff's dog, the word "wrongful" is presumed to be used in its legal and not in its ethical sense. Brown v. Graham, 114 N. W. 153, 154, 80 Neb. 281.

Where the sufficiency of an indictment for causing nonmailable matter to be deposited in the post office is not questioned until after verdict, the words "willfully, unlawfully, wrongfully, and knowingly," as used therein, were to be taken in their broadest sense, as applying to all that was expressed in respect of the act, and therefore as imputing to defendants knowledge of the contents of the circular alleged to have been mailed, and of the book of which it was an advertisement. Burton v. United States, 142 Fed. 57, 59, 73 C. C. A. 243.

Felonious synonyms

"Wrongful," used in describing the taking of personal property in the possession of another, means not a mere taking without authority of law, but includes a taking with an evil motive or with a criminal mind, and in this connection it is synonymous with "felonious." State v. Fordham, 101 N. W. 888, 889, 13 N. D. 494.

Malicious

Under Rev. St. 1887, § 7153, making the "malicious" killing, maiming, or wounding of a dog an offense, the word "malicious" as used is not equivalent to the word "wrongful" as used in the law of torts. The former word means more than the latter. It necessarily involves crime, while the latter does not necessarily do so. State v. Churchill, 98 Pac. 853, 857, 15 Idaho, 645, 16 Ann. Cas. 947 (citing Chappell v. State, 35 Ark. 345; State v. Hussey, 60 Me. 410, 11 Am. Rep. 206; 2 Whart. Cr. Law, §§ 1068, 1070; State v. Phipps, 64 N. W. 411, 95 Iowa, 491; United States v. Gideon, 1 Minn. 292 [Gil. 226]; State v. Rector, 34 Tex. 565).

Unlawful—Unlawfully

The gist of the action of replevin is the "wrongful" or "unlawful" detention, there being no distinction in that action between the two terms; hence a petitioner in replevin properly alleged the wrongful detention of his property. Boswell v. First Nat. Bank of Laramie, 92 Pac. 624, 632, 16 Wyo. 161.

Pen. Code, § 633, defines extortion as the obtaining of property from another with his consent, induced by a wrongful use of force or fear. Section 634 declares that fear such as will constitute extortion may be induced by a threat, either to accuse another of any crime or to expose any secret affecting him, and section 638 declares that every person who, with intent to extort any money or property from another, sends any person any threatening letter shall be punished as if the money or property were actually obtained by means of such threat. Held, that the word "wrongful," as used in section 633, relates solely to the method used; and a person may be guilty of extortion under such sections if he obtains money from another by unlawful means, though he does not seek to obtain any benefit for himself and believes that the money or property obtained in fact belongs to the person for whom it is obtained. In re Sherin, 130 N. W. 761, 764-767, 27 S. D. 232, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 801, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 446.

The words "unlawfully," "willfully," "fraudulently," and "feloniously," in an indictment, include the word "wrongfully." State v. Pellerin, 43 South. 159, 161, 162, 118 La. 547 (citing State v. Brown, 6 South. 541, 41 La. Ann. 345; Marr, Cr. Jur. La., verbo "Indictment," subd. "The Words of the Statute").

Under Code, § 595 (Gen. St. 1901, § 5082), stating that in ejectment it shall be sufficient for plaintiff to allege that the defendant "unlawfully" keeps him out of possession, an allegation that the defendant "wrongfully" keeps the plaintiff out of possession does not make the pleading demurrable, as the Code does not prescribe an exact form. Rhea v. Williams, 103 Pac. 119, 80 Kan. 698.

WRONGFUL ACT

"Malice" in the law means the intentional doing of a wrongful act without justification or excuse. A "wrongful act," within the meaning of this definition, is any act which in the ordinary course will infringe upon the rights of another to his damage, except it be done in the exercise of an equal or superior right. Brennan v. United Hatters of North America, Local No. 17, 65 Atl. 165, 171, 73 N. J. Law, 729, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 254, 118 Am. St. Rep. 727, 9 Ann. Cas. 698.

"Wrongful acts" knowingly and intentionally committed cannot be justified on the ground of innocent intent. Ordinarily the intent with which a man does a criminal act is not proclaimed by him, and ordinarily there is no direct evidence from which the jury may be satisfied from declarations of the criminal himself as to what he intended when he did a certain act, and this question of intent, like all other questions of fact, is solely for the jury. Chadwick v. United States, 141 Fed. 225, 230, 72 C. C. A. 343.

The words "wrongful act" and "negligence" are sufficiently broad to embrace every degree of tort that can be committed against the person. In Ky. St. 1903, § 6, giving the personal representative a cause of action for death resulting from the negligent or "wrongful act" of another, the words were used to embrace every injury that might be committed against the person, whether negligently done or not. A wrongful act may or may not be negligent, depending upon how it is committed and the relation between the parties. A wrongful act may be criminal, willful, wanton, or reckless. Many wrongful acts are committed in which there is no element of negligence, no breach of duty. In short, every injury inflicted upon the person without legal right or excuse is a "wrongful act," without reference to the relation existing between the perpetrator and his victim. Within this definition, the death of a person caused by the careless, wanton, or malicious use of firearms is a wrongful act as much as if the death were due to a blow. Howard's Adm'r v. Hunter, 104 S. W. 723, 724, 126 Ky. 685.

The term "wrongful act," as used in Rev. St. Idaho, § 4100, providing that when a person's death is caused by the wrongful act of another his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action for damages against the person causing the death, implies the omission of some duty, and that duty must be a duty owing to the decedent. It cannot be that if the death was caused by rightful act, or an unintentional act, with no omission of duty owing to the decedent, it can be considered wrongful. The death of a free passenger on a railway train, not due to the omission on the part of the railway company of any duty owing to the deceased, cannot be considered wrongful, within Rev. St. Idaho, § 4100. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Adams, 24 Sup. Ct. 408, 409, 192 U. S. 440, 48 L. Ed. 513.

Where commissioners were appointed by a city to build a city hall according to certain plans, with power to employ agents and to contract, and by one of the contracts they were to furnish at the site of the building sections for brick arches, and they put the sections in place, and one of the sections, being insecurely fixed, fell and killed a laborer, the city, through the commissioners, had committed a "wrongful act," within the meaning of a statute providing that, in cases in which the death of any person ensued from injury inflicted by the "wrongful act" of another, the person inflicting such injury shall be liable to an action for damages. McCaughy v. Tripp, 12 R. I. 449, 451.

Wrongful omission distinguished

Negligence may result from omission respecting duty. An "act" or "wrongful act" denotes affirmative action or performance, and an expression of will or purpose as distinguished from "omission" or "wrongful omission," which denotes a negative and inaction. Randle v. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co., 53 South. 918, 921, 169 Ala. 314.

WRONGFUL OBSTRUCTION

A "wrongful obstruction" of a water course is an obstruction placed therein without legal right. An obstruction of a stream necessary to the use of the right of way acquired by grant or condemnation proceedings goes as a part of the right of way, or as incident to it, and therefore is not wrongful as against the party from whom the right of way is acquired. Lampley v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 50 S. E. 773, 774, 71 S. C. 156.

WROUGHT

The ordinary meaning of "wrought" is worked up, elaborated, worked into shape, labored, manufactured; not rough or crude. "Unwrought" imparts the reverse of these conditions. When one speaks of an unwrought material, he means one which has not been worked into shape, one which is unlabored, unelaborated, rough, and crude. But the word also implies a material which is capable of being transformed from its crude material to an improved condition produced by the labor to which it may be subjected. To be more specific, "unwrought metal" implies a metal which is capable of being wrought, and not a substance which is only fit to be thrown into the crucible, to be melted up with other ingredients to produce an entirely different and distinct product. United States v. Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co., 137 Fed. 770, 772, 70 C. C. A. 346.

WROUGHT BY HAND

The provision for "statuary * * * 'wrought by hand' * * * from metal," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N. par. 454, 30 Stat. 194, does not include a bronze statue cast in a foundry by artisans from a model that was made in plastic material by an artist, but upon which he did little or no retouching. Altman & Co. v. United States, 172 Fed. 161, 162.

X

X-RAYS

The so-called "X-rays," discovered by Roentgen, have been recognized and known to scientists, both in and out of the medical profession, for some eight years. During this time the apparatus for the generation of the X-rays, together with the fluoroscope, has been used very generally by electricians, professors of physics, skiagraphers, physicians, and others for experimental and demonstrative purposes. It is a scientific and mechanical appliance, the operation of which is the same in the hands of the college professor or the physician of the allopathic, homeopathic, or any other school of medicine. It may be applied by any person possessing the requisite scientific knowledge of its properties, and there would seem to be no reason why its application to the human body may not be explained by any person who understands it. Henslin v. Wheaton, 97 N. W. 882, 883, 91 Minn. 219, 64 L. R. A. 126, 103 Am. St. Rep. 504, 1 Ann. Cas. 19.

Y

YAMS

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 704, 30 Stat. 203, the provision for "yams" includes a vegetable (pueraria roots) which, though not scientifically known as a yam, has always been so called in the trade that deals in it, and was the only vegetable so known that was imported prior to the passage of the act. Kwong Yuen Shing v. United States, 175 Fed. 317, 318.

YARD

See Freightyard; In Yard; Switchyard.
As public place, see Public Place.

In an action under Code 1907, § 6037, for statutory penalty for destruction of fruit trees inclosed on premises, a general charge for defendant because there was no proof that the trees were removed from an inclosure was properly refused; it appearing that the trees were taken from a yard and orchard, which showed prima facie an inclosure; "orchard" being defined by Webster as meaning, among other things, "an inclosure containing fruit trees," etc., and the word "yard" meaning by common acceptance an "inclosure." Wright v. Sample, 50 South. 268, 162 Ala. 222.

Where, in the rear of a row of tenement houses, there is a private way, and the buildings are so constructed as to leave, unbuilt upon, on each side of each lot, a space or court, two of which coming together, form between the rear portions of each two buildings an open space, half on one lot and half on another, one-half of the open right of way in the rear of each lot constitutes its "yard," within the meaning of Tenement House Act (Laws 1901, p. 889, c. 334) § 2, subd. 2, defining a "yard" as an open unoccupied space on the same lot with the tenement house, between the extreme rear of the house and rear line of the lot. People ex rel. Cohen v. Butler, 109 N. Y. Supp. 900, 906, 125 App. Div. 384.

YARD ENGINES

Engines which regularly run between different points on a railroad line, are known as "road engines," in contradistinction to "yard engines," which perform services only in the yards. Central of Ga. Ry. Co. v. Goodson, 45 S. E. 680, 681, 118 Ga. 833.

YARDMASTER

It is the duty of the "yardmaster" to designate which track or tracks the incoming trains of the different railway companies referred to should occupy and the different points at which they were to stop, and to direct the making up of passenger trains and designate points from which the outgoing trains should start. He has charge of the switching in the yards, and directs what engine or engines are to be used at each particular occasion for that purpose. Brown v. Southern Pac. Co., 88 Pac. 7, 8, 31 Utah, 318.

YARN

See Cotton Yarn.

As embroidery cotton, see Embroidery.

Artificial horsehair is not a "yarn," because it has no twist, and is not composed of twisted or spun filaments. Eckstein v. United States, 160 Fed. 287, 288.

YEAR

See Calendar Year; Current Fiscal Year; Current Year; During Year; Estate for Years; First Ten Years; For a Year; Longer Period than One Year; Municipal Year; Once a Year; Per Year; Previous Year; Same Year; Tenant from Year to Year; This Year; Within a Year.

Ensuing year, see Ensuing.

"The 'year' in law is 365 calendar days. One born on the first day of the year is consequently deemed to be one year old on the 365th day after his birth—the last day of that year." Erwin v. Benton (Ky.) 87 S. W. 291, 294.

The term "year" usually means calendar year, but not always, since the meaning is often determined in contracts by the intention of the parties. It may mean the cropping season in farming operations, or the fruit season among horticulturists, and in like manner may be a longer or shorter period of time than 12 months, according to the connection in which it is used, so, also, the term may be modified by prefixing modifying words such as "fiscal year," "political year," "solar year," "leap year," etc., and such term may or may not correspond with 12 calendar months. Reusch v. City of Lincoln, 112 N. W. 377, 378, 78 Neb. 828.

Under Ky. St. 1903, § 452, providing that "year" shall be construed to mean a calendar year, etc., the word "year" in section 2516, providing that an action for personal injuries shall be commenced within one "year" after the accrual of the cause of action, means a calendar year, which in common acceptance consists of 365 days, and therefore an action commenced September 19, 1904, for injuries received September 19, 1903, was barred, since, in computing the time within which the action must be commenced, the day of the injury must be included. Geneva Cooperage Co. v. Brown, 98 S. W. 279, 124 Ky. 16, 124 Am. St. Rep. 388.

The phrases "two years," "four years," and "six years," in Act March 26, 1891 (Gen. Laws 1891, p. 109, c. 103), creating a state board of assessors and fixing the term of office of the assessors first chosen at one for two years, one for four years, and the other for six years, the assessors thereafter elected to each hold for six years, mean calendar years, not legislative years, and an original term and any succeeding term of six years did, and does not, end at any time when a successor was, and is, elected and qualified during a legislative session. Marshall v. State, 72 Atl. 873, 874, 105 Me. 103.

A railroad lease which took effect April 15, 1907, provided that the lessee should pay the full amount of the taxes assessed for the "year" 1907, but should be reimbursed by lessor a pro rata portion thereof to cover the period of 1907 prior to the taking effect of the lease. Comp. Laws, § 50, par. 10, provides that the word "year" shall mean a calendar year, and Pub. Acts 1905, p. 441, No. 282, § 6, requires railroad companies annually, between the 1st day of July and the 31st day of August in each year, to file a return for taxation with the state board of assessors. Held, that since the tax law provides for taxes for each calendar year, and the taxes for one year are not fixed, or payable until the first of the following year, such section 6 did not contemplate a fiscal year for the assessment of railroad taxes extending from July 1st to June 30th; and hence the word "year," as used in the lease, meant a calendar year for which the lessee was entitled to reimbursement, and not an alleged fiscal year extending from July 1st to June 30th. Pere Marquette R. Co. v. Kalamazoo, L. S. & C. Ry. Co., 122 N. W. 356, 357, 158 Mich. 40.

The "year" referred to in Act March 22, 1906 (98 Ohio Laws, p. 89), fixing the salaries of certain county officers, is the calendar year beginning January 1st, and the end of each quarter, referred to in section 6 of that act, required payment into the county treasury of all fees collected during said quarter, means the end of each three months after January 1st of such year. State v. Van Gunten, 95 N. E. 664, 665, 84 Ohio St. 172.

As fiscal year

When reference is made to a certain "year," the presumption is that the calendar year is meant; but where a legislative body is acting under a Constitution providing a fiscal year different from the calendar year, its fiscal legislation should be referred to the fiscal year, and not to the calendar year. State v. Jennings, 47 S. E. 683, 685, 68 S. C. 411.

As school year

A contract of a teacher with school trustees to teach one year from July 5, 1899, at a salary of $1,000, payment to be made by requisitions upon the county superintendent of schools, was a contract to teach for a school "year." Westerman v. Cleland, 106 Pac. 606, 609, 12 Cal. App. 63.

The term "year" does not necessarily mean a calendar year. Its meaning is to be gathered from the connection in which the term is used. "The contract was with reference to school-teaching, and, in the absence of anything to the contrary, it must be construed as if the provision of the law limiting the time for which the contract could be made was inserted in it, and that the term 'year' meant a school year (Pol. Code, § 1878), which begins the 1st day of July and ends on the 1st day of June." Williams v. Bagnelle, 72 Pac. 408, 410, 138 Cal. 699 (citing and adopting Brown v. Anderson, 77 Cal. 236, 19 Pac. 487).

The word "year," when used in employing teachers, means a college or school year, and not a calendar year. Brookfield v. Drury College, 123 S. W. 86, 94, 139 Mo. App. 339.

As twelve months

A provision of a state statute that no person shall at any time be allowed to vote in the election of the council of a certain city or upon any proposition to impose a tax or for the expenditure of money unless he shall "within the year next preceding" have paid a tax assessed upon his property therein valued at least at $131, the words "within the year next preceding" denote the twelve months next previous to the election, and not the calendar year preceding. In re Providence Voters, 13 R. I. 737, 739.

As year of our Lord

Under Code, § 48, par. 11, providing that the word "year" is equivalent to "year of our Lord," the word "year" in section 2450, providing that only one statement of consent for the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be canvassed "in any one year," means a calendar year, the phrase "year of our Lord" meaning a calendar year. Sawyer v. Steinman, 126 N. W. 1123, 1124, 148 Iowa, 610.

The word "year," as used in Comp. Laws 1879, c. 25, § 220, which provides that the board of county commissioners shall not levy a tax for the current expenses of any one year over 1 per cent. on the property valuation, and in Comp. Laws 1879, c. 25, art. 16, § 1, which provides that it shall be the duty of the commissioners to levy a county tax each year for county expenses, and that it shall be unlawful for any board of commissioners or county clerk to issue warrants to an amount in excess of the amount of the county tax levied in the same year, will be construed under rule 11 for the construction of statutes (Gen. St. 1897, c. 1, § 8), which provides the word "year" alone, and also the expression "year A. D.," are equivalent to the expression, "year of our Lord," to mean a calendar year. Garfield Tp. v. Hubbell, 59 Pac. 600, 9 Kan. App. 785.

YEARLING

The term "yearling," in its popular sense, sufficiently indicates an animal of the cow kind. State v. Majors, 59 South. 904, 905, 131 La. 466.

The court takes judicial notice of the ordinary meaning which words have attached to them by general usage, and that, in the vernacular of this state, "yearlings" means animals of the cattle species. Barron v. San Angelo Nat. Bank (Tex.) 138 S. W. 142, 144.

In an action on a contract for the delivery of "yearlings," it is admissible to prove by persons engaged in the cattle business that, when a contract is made between cattlemen in the section of the country where the contract sued on was made and to be executed for the delivery of yearlings, they are expected to deliver cattle born at any time from January 1st to June 1st of the year previous. Parks v. O'Connor, 8 S. W. 104, 107, 70 Tex. 377.

YEARLY PAY

See Current Yearly Pay.

YEARLY PROFITS

A contract between an insurance company and its agents contained no express provision as to termination, and provided as compensation a contingent commission of 10 per cent., predicated on the yearly profits of the agency, and that in computing such commission the agents should be credited with the gross amount of premiums written, less cancellations, reinsurance, and returns of every nature on the one hand, and debited with commissions and incidental agency charges, etc., the commission to be predicated upon the profit balance thus shown. Held, that the phrase "predicated on the yearly profits" did not indicate an intent that no such profits should be ascertained in the event of a termination of the agency between the annual dates fixed in the contract, but rather described a term of calculation to be used year by year so long as the contract might be in force, and for any fraction of a year remaining unadjusted when the relation of principal and agent might cease. Federal Ins. Co. v. Gilmour, 92 N. E. 36, 206 Mass. 203.

YEARS

When "years" are reckoned for limitation purposes, the first day is included. Vose v. Kuhn, 92 N. Y. Supp. 34, 45 Misc. Rep. 455.

YEARS OF AGE

The contributory delinquent law (Sess. Laws 1903, p. 198, c. 94) prescribes a punishment for persons who contribute to the delinquency of a child, as defined by law. The delinquent children law (Sess. Laws 1903, p. 178, c. 85) provides that the words "delinquent child" shall include any child "16 years of age or under" who violates any law. Held, that the words "16 years of age or under" exclude children who have passed beyond their sixteenth birthday, and hence one cannot be convicted of contributing to the delinquency of a child who has passed his sixteenth birthday. Gibson v. People, 99 Pac. 333, 334, 44 Colo. 600.

YEAST

In its most technical and limited sense, "leaven" is sour dough, and in this sense the term was understood 2,000 years ago. Later "yeast" was substituted for sour dough as a leaven. Each of these substances leaven, in the sense that they set up fermentation. F. H. Leggett & Co. v. U. S., 131 Fed. 817, 818.

YELLOW BUTTER

The term "yellow butter," within a statute making it an offense to sell any article made from oleaginous substance not produced from milk or cream in imitation of yellow butter, is used in its popular rather than in trade or technical sense, and does not mean all kinds of butter, but excludes that which is a light shade of yellow. Meyer v. State, 114 N. W. 501, 503, 134 Wis. 156, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1061.

"Every one is presumed to know the color of an article which is in such general use as butter, and as to whether or not an article intended as a substitute therefor bears the 'yellow color' of true butter." Hence, on a prosecution for unlawfully selling an imitation of yellow butter, in violation of Code, § 2516 et seq., the question of whether the product bore the yellow color of true butter was not a subject of expert evidence. State v. Armour Packing Co., 100 N. W. 59, 124 Iowa, 323, 2 Ann. Cas. 448.

YES

Whether the answer "Do not know," to a special finding of fact returned by a jury, is equivalent to "Yes" or "No," depends upon the form of the question answered. Generally such an answer shows that the party whose duty it was to establish the fact involved in the question failed in his proof. In a case where it was the duty of the defendant to prove that E. did not sign a certain promissory note, and the jury returned the following finding and answer: "Did E. sign the note in question? Do not know"—such answer is equivalent to "Yes." Croan v. Baden, 85 Pac. 532, 533, 73 Kan. 364.

YIDDISH

"Yiddish" is a language used by German and other Jews, being a middle German dialect, developed under Hebrew and Slavic influence; Judea-German. Gold v. S. Pian

Time Payment Jewelry Co., 145 S. W. 1174, 1178, 165 Mo. App. 154 (citing Webst. Int. Dict., Ed. 1910).

YIELD

YIELDING MEANS

The underlying idea of "yielding means" or "yielding mechanism" is something that will give way under pressure. Palmer v. Jordan Mach. Co., 186 Fed. 496, 501.

YOKE OF OXEN

A "yoke of oxen" is a term used in the sense of unity. It implies something more than merely two oxen; thus, in detinue for a yoke of oxen, the value of them need not be assessed separately, but may be assessed in the aggregate, in the absence of evidence of their separate value. Hammond Bros. & Co. v. Lusk, 43 South. 573, 150 Ala. 487.

YOU

YOUR STATION

A purchaser of coal received the following letter from a dealer: "Until otherwise advised, the price of coal for future orders will be $4 for lump and nut, and $2.50 for pea coal, f. o. b. E., J. & E. tracks, your station." In accepting an order the dealer further stated: "We cannot make the pea coal any lower than $2.75 per ton, f. o. b. E., J. & E. tracks, Aurora." Held, that the words "your station," in the first letter, meant "Aurora," and that the contract required delivery to the purchaser at his home town, and that he was not required to look to the carrier for delay in delivery. Olson v. Wabash Coal Co., 126 Ill. App. 253, 255.

YOUR TIMBER

Where a letter written by a carrier in referring to timber to be hauled under a contract between it and a logging company referred to it as "your timber," and at the time the contract was negotiated the logging company not only made known its then holdings, and its outstanding contracts of purchase, but also its purpose to acquire other timber properties and continue the logging business at a certain point as long as profitable or until the tributary timber was exhausted, held, that in determining what timber was embraced in the contract the term "your timber" meant the timber concerning which the parties were negotiating, and not the specific quantity then owned by the logging company. Sultan Ry. & Timber Co. v.

YOUNGEST

Where a testator devised a life estate in trust for his widow, and on her demise the property was to be sold and the income from a share of the proceeds applied to the support of the wife and children of testator's son until the "youngest child" attained the age of 21 years, when such share was to be divided among them, the bequest was not void as suspending the alienation of the estate for a life not in being at the testator's death; the phrase "youngest child" meaning youngest child living at the time of testator's death. Cogan v. McCabe, 52 N. Y. Supp. 48, 52, 23 Misc. Rep. 739.

Where a will provided that the estate should be held in trust "until the 'youngest of my children' becomes of age," when the property was to be sold and the proceeds divided, it indicated the youngest of the entire class which survived testator. In re Mikantowicz's Will, 113 N. Y. Supp. 278, 279, 60 Misc. Rep. 273.

YOUTH

"Youth" is specified by Webster to be the "part of life that succeeds childhood." Code 1886, § 2367, providing for the adoption of children, uses the word "child" in the sense of relationship, and not of infancy; and hence one 26 years of age is subject to adoption. Sheffield v. Franklin, 44 South. 373, 374, 151 Ala. 492, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 884, 125 Am. St. Rep. 37, 15 Ann. Cas. 90.

YOUTHFUL

"Youthful" is a quality that may well be ascribed to a young man even above 21, and the averment of youth in an injured employé in connection with the allegation that he is a minor may be consistent with the fact that he is fully matured for one of his age, and competent to appreciate dangers obvious to an adult. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wilson, 50 South. 188, 191, 162 Ala. 588.
